I wish to thank the Senator from Texas for yielding to me, because I must leave the Senate Chamber in a moment, and I wish to take this occasion to register my position upon the pending bill.

I heartily favor the bill, although I recognize that the amount authorized for the first and second years is wholly inadequate to meet the demands that will be made against the fund. However, it is the beginning of an experiment, if it may be stated in that way, for the matter is hardly experimental. It is the beginning of the inspiration of many tenants to farm ownership.

I should like to take occasion, with the Senator's indulgence, to say that I do not regard the question of farm tenancy as fundamental. It is not fundamental; it is merely symptomatic; it is merely the result of a combination of circumstances, a combination of practices and policies. However, it is a stubborn fact, and a fact that ought to be considered by the Congress and one that ought to be remedied, so far as it is possible to remedy it. I congratulate the Senator from Alabama on having taken this initial step in that direction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the editorial will be made a part of the RECORD.

The editorial referred to is as follows:

[From the Lavonia (Ga.) Times of June 25, 1937]

LOVE YOUR LAND—IT'S THE SOURCE OF ALL WEALTH

(By Stiles A. Martin, statistician, Georgia Department of Agriculture)

Land is the only permanent thing in the world. All other substance decomposes and returns to the land, thus enriching the soil, which produces the sustenance of all life. A piece of land an acre square today will be the same size a million years from now, while all else around it will return to dust.

Every living thing, whether it be man, animal, fowl, fish, tree, or grass, owes its life to land. Every substance on earth comes from the soil, whether it be a house built of lumber, brick, or stone, put together with nails, or mortar, and furnished with beds made of wood or metal.

Every object in every building in the world, whether it be Westminster Abbey in London, the Empire State Building in New York, or the State capitol in Atlanta, comes from the soil. Every brick, every stone, every piece of wood, or other material used in the construction of every building in every city in the world come from the land. All man-made structures are only collections of material from the soil.

The source of every flower, every piece of fabric, every sheaf of grain, every flash of electricity that lights our homes and drives our machinery, is traced to the soil. Every blade of grass that supports animal life that gives us the horse and the mule which are used to till the soil, and the dairy cow which supplies us with milk and butter, owes its life to the soil. Every bit of food consumed by the human race at every meal, comes from the soil.

Stone will crumble to dust, buildings will burn to ashes, seed time and harvest come in their season, one generation passes and another follows, and only land remains permanent.

If you do not own any land, acquire some and realize the feeling of security, independence, and contentment that comes when you own your own home and the land you cultivate. Then you will come to a full realization of what Sir Walter Scott meant when he said:

"Breathes there a man with soul so dead, who never to himself hath said, 'This is my own, my native land'?"

When you stand on your own land and gaze across your fields, remember you have the most valuable of all material things. The family with land needs never go hungry. The factory may shut down and business firms may fail and the pay roll may stop, but the man with land can always grow something to eat.

Land is nature's greatest gift to man. Land will support us, our children, and our children's children if we will protect and care for it.

Love of land and home ownership lend to stability and permanency of citizenship. No country rises in prosperity above the level of the standard set by its farmers. As the farmer prospers, so does the city. Let the farmer stop his plow and every citizen will be hungry in a few days and will starve to death if the farmer does not feed him.

William Jennings Bryan said: "Burn down your cities and leave our farms, and your cities will spring up again as if by magic; but destroy our farms, and the grass will grow in the streets of every city in the country."

Emerson said: "The first farmer was the first man, and all historic nobility rests on possession and use of the land."

It was the land that saved the South following the War between the States. The same land that had run red with the blood of its soldiers, produced food when at the end of the conflict the Confederate soldier returned home.

It was the love of land that caused Scarlett in Gone With the Wind to offer to sacrifice her honor in order to raise money to save Tara, the family home, and the farm. It was the love of home and land that caused Olan, the wife and the mother in Pearl Buck's book, The Good Earth, to keep her husband from selling their land during the famine, even though her children were hungry.

The love of land is part of nature. Children prefer to go barefooted rather than wear shoes, so they may feel the farm earth ooze between their toes. Children at play, given a sand pile and a lot of toys, will turn from the toys to play in the sand and make mud pies.

The man who lives on the land starts no wars and generally lives at peace with his neighbor and the world, loves nature and reveres God, because he sees His handiwork in every blade of grass, every grain of corn, every calf, every colt; in every drop of rain, in every lightning flash, in the sun's rays by day and the moonbeams at night.

The man who tills the soil is usually a religious man and one who is interested in the welfare of his family, his school, his church, his community, his State, and his Nation.

Therefore if you own land, protect it from erosion and washing by terracing, by rotation of crops, and by keeping as much of the water as possible on the land that falls upon it. Muddy water contains soil.

Three kinds of land do not lose soil: Grassy pastures, grain fields, and woodland.

After the conclusion of Mr. CONNALLY'S speech,

SAFETY AT SEA

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I desire to ask that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of House Joint Resolution 434. My reason for making the request that it be considered now is that the law to which this measure applies goes into effect today. It has to do with the installation of sprinklers upon ships, part of the safety at sea legislation.

The Department of Commerce has found it impossible to have the laws providing for the devices fully applied by this date. The joint resolution which has come from the House puts the effective date over to the first of October.

I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 434) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend section 4471 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended", was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the act entitled "An act to amend section 4471 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended" (Public, No. 712, 74th Cong.), approved June 20, 1936, is amended by striking out "July 1, 1937" in the first line of the second paragraph thereof and inserting in lieu thereof "October 1, 1937".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate Joint Resolution 172 will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the newspapers this morning carried the pleasing information that the chairman and members of the Maritime Commission have succeeded in adjusting the differences which existed between the Maritime Commission, or the Government, and the owners of the ships operating them under mail contracts. It seems to me that what has been accomplished is notable.

Mr. Kennedy, in his statement today, announced that the contracts, or a large number of them, have been canceled at an amazingly low figure. I am not so sure but the figure is too low. But, since it is in the interest of the Government, I assume there will be no objection to that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have not read the article the Senator is about to put in the RECORD, but will do so. I was wondering what figure had been obtained.

Mr. COPELAND. I am not seeking to put an article in the RECORD; I was using it as a reminder. But Mr. Kennedy telephoned me a few days ago that he had succeeded in bringing about the cancelation of the mail contracts for $750,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is probably a very reasonable adjustment.

Mr. COPELAND. I would say it was more than reasonable.

Mr. McKELLAR. What is the extent of the subsidies the Government is to pay?

Mr. COPELAND. That is even more remarkable than the adjustment I have mentioned. At the various times when bills on this subject were before the Senate, we estimated the operating subsidies at from $20,000,000 to $25,000,000 annually. The mail contracts amounted to about $20,000,000, but we estimated that the operating subsidies would be from $20,000,000 to $25,000,000. As a matter of fact, according to Mr. Kennedy's statement, during the 6 months' period beginning today and going forward until New Year's, all subsidy payments for the 22 services which have been agreed upon, will amount to only $4,645,579, less than $5,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. My recollection is that under the old system there were 41 shipping companies which received subsidies. The Senator says that now only 22 will receive subsidies. What has become of the others? Have they gone out of business?

Mr. COPELAND. No; as to them, there is still negotiation; but I may say to the Senator that I have here comparable figures showing that the subsidy will be slightly under $5,000,000, as I have already indicated. The same ships received postal subsidies of $7,570,908. So it will be seen that the operating subsidies provided under the new law are only about two-thirds as much as the old mail contracts.

Mr. McKELLAR. Assuming that the statement in the newspaper is correct—and I have no doubt it is—I wish to congratulate the new commission on their good work, and I hope they will continue to keep the subsidies within bounds. My belief is that it will be better for the Government, and better for the shipping companies themselves, if that is accomplished.

Mr. COPELAND. I share with the Senator the feeling he has about the commission. I think the commission is alert, and intelligent, and aggressive, and successful.

We must reserve judgment as to what this may ultimately do to the American merchant marine. I am not so enthusiastic about the future of the American merchant marine as I have been at times, for a reason which I am about to state. That was really the occasion for my asking for the floor.

There cannot be a successful American merchant marine without efficient crews. A good crew can operate a poor ship with much greater chance of success than a poor crew can operate a good ship.

Mr. President, we are having too much trouble on the sea. There are too many conflicting doctrines. There are too many major generals. There are too many groups representing opposing views. Unless there can be harmony in the labor groups upon the sea, it is my opinion that the American flag will disappear from the sea.

We have not had the harmony which we should have. Last year on the Pacific coast, by reason of what I regard as uncalled-for labor disputes, there was a loss to the shippers of a billion dollars. I do not know how much the ship operators lost, and perhaps it is not a matter of concern how much they may lose in the future, because under the subsidy law which is now on the statute books the losses will be made up, to a great extent.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have sent for the act, but does the Senator recall whether or not a limitation was provided on the salaries of officials?

Mr. COPELAND. A limitation upon the salaries of the officials was provided, and a limitation so low that many of the companies will be deprived of the services of men who would advance the cause of American shipping if they were permitted to be so engaged. I think the limitation was a great mistake; but I am not now finding fault about that.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I recall, under an amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] a certain figure was fixed, and I believe that in the end it will greatly benefit the shipping companies, and I know it will be of benefit to the stockholders of the companies.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator from Alabama is on the floor and can correct me if I am wrong, but I believe the limitation was finally fixed on $25,000 although $17,500 was first considered.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does the act contain any provision protecting the rights of the stockholders in the various corporations that benefit from the Government subsidies?

Mr. COPELAND. There is a limitation placed——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I know there is a limitation on the salaries. I remember that very well. But the Senator is very familiar with the fact that there is probably no line operating ships in the merchant marine which is not operating as a corporation under charter from some State; and the Senator knows that many, if not most, of the modern corporations which are engaged in anything which may be denominated "big business", are operated by insiders, without a great deal of concern or care for the interest of the stockholders. Does the Senator recall whether provision was made in the Merchant Marine Act for the protection of the stockholders?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, there was reasonable provision made, and I hope provision for protection such as the Senator has in mind shall be made as to other corporations. I confess I have a great sympathy for what the Senator is attempting to do for the good of the country.

If I may now revert to the subject in mind, that is what I wish to say. The committee in formulating this act and the Congress in passing it had in mind all the time the upbuilding of an American merchant marine, placing emphasis upon the word "American." So the law which becomes effective this very day, the 1st day of July 1937, prescribes that "all licensed officers of vessels documented under the laws of the United States shall be citizens of the United States, native born or completely naturalized."

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does not the Senator agree that that is good, sound policy?

Mr. COPELAND. Oh, yes; I surely do. That is the reason I am on my feet. I am here to brag about it a little bit. I think the policy is good, and I look forward to the time when every man employed upon the sea, sailing in a vessel under the American flag, shall be an American citizen.

We went very far in this law, however, much further than ever before. So far as cargo vessels are concerned which are subsidized under the new law, every single member of the crew, and by that I mean all the employees of the ship, shall be citizens of the United States, native born, or completely naturalized. Heretofore, there has never been any such requirement as that. On all the cargo ships every member of the crew must be an American citizen. This is the first time since 1812 that so proud a boast could be made.

We did not go quite so far with respect to the passenger ships. For a period of 1 year from the effective date—that is, for 1 year from today—80 percent of the crew of a passenger ship subsidized under the law must be American citizens. And the only place where there can be noncitizens is in the steward's department, which is the department having to do with the serving of food and service in the staterooms.

For this year in that department there may be noncitizens to the extent of 20 percent of the entire crew. Next year the number is to be 15 percent, and the following year 10 percent. I hope to see the time in the near future when every employee upon every ship shall be an American citizen.

Think what it would mean to American labor. We can make it possible for forty to sixty thousand jobs to be held by Americans. Loyalty to the flag and country is assured when good Americans are on guard.

The only reason we made any distinction in the case of the crew on passenger ships is that a great many passengers carried by American ships speak other languages—French or Spanish or Italian or German or Greek or some other language.

So it was thought that in the steward's department, in order that the transition might not be too sudden, for a period, this year and next year and the following year, there might be a limited number of noncitizens.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Without wishing to divert the Senator from what he is saying, I should like to inquire if it would not be equally good if the officers of the maritime labor union should similarly be required to be American citizens.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am familiar with suggestions made by the Senator from Michigan. I was particularly attracted by the proposal which he made to the effect that the leaders and agents of labor unions should be citizens of the United States. And why should they not be?

I do not presume to speak about other industries; the same thing must apply to them; but certainly, so far as the unions of men upon the seas are concerned, they ought to be under the domination and leadership of American citizens. I wish that were the case today. It is not the case today.

In my opinion, one of the reasons why we are having so much trouble upon the seas, so much trouble with the crews of American ships, is because the "big mogul" of the new and noisy seamen's union, at least on the west coast, is an alien. He has not thought enough about our country to become a citizen. Whether he is here legally or not I do not know, but I do know that on three separate occasions he has applied for citizenship and two of those applications were never carried through. As to the pending one I do not know what will be done with it. But the fate of our ships and the fate of our crews and the fate of the American sailors—the fate of all those great maritime affairs which we hold dear—is in the hands of a man who does not care enough about the American flag to become a citizen, if he is entitled to become one.

If I had my way, he would not be in the United States, Mr. President. If he is subject to deportation—and I have my suspicions that he is—he should be deported. He should go back to the land whence he came and organize all the unions he wants to organize over there. Let him leave it to American citizens to determine about the crews of our ships and the control of the unions having to do with the regulation of the crews of our ships.

Mr. President, I have been somewhat diverted, but I wish to congratulate the Maritime Commission upon the good work it has done. I wish to congratulate the country that we appear now to be on the way to the development of an effective merchant marine. But at the same time I desire to warn the country that we will never have an effective American merchant marine until it is in every sense an American merchant marine. I want to see the time when every sailor upon the seas under the American flag is an American citizen. I want to see the time when he is in an organization made up of American citizens. I want to see the time certainly when the leaders of every one of these organizations of seamen shall be American citizens.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me ask the Senator, does he really feel, however, that under present circumstances the American merchant marine can successfully compete with foreign merchant vessels?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the American merchant marine cannot compete with foreign-flag ships without Federal aid. I say that because we expect labor on the seas to enjoy the same standard of living that labor has upon land. Many foreign ships pack their crews like sardines in quarters which are inhuman and indecent. They feed their crews with food that we would not want any American to look upon. If we are to have an American merchant marine, if it is worth our while for two reasons to have an American merchant marine—to carry the bulk of our cargo to and fro, and an American merchant marine to be an auxiliary to the Navy—we can do it only by Federal aid.

There are reasons, too, which go beyond the matter of a subsidy for operation which has to do with the crew. I refer to the building of the ships. It costs twice as much to build an American ship in an American shipyard as it does in a foreign shipyard. Why? Because labor is paid so much more here. Those who work with the steel and with the wood, those who work fabricating the machinery, those who take the iron out of the earth, those who take the coal from the earth to smelt the iron into steel, all these men are paid higher wages than are men similarly employed abroad. Naturally, all these items reflect themselves in the cost of building ships.

Mr. President, it is not alone the initial cost of the ship, which is twice as great as it is abroad. There is a continuance of expense, due to the additional cost of insurance upon the vessel, the interest upon the investment, and the increased sinking fund required. So, Mr. President, the law which we are lauding today provides not alone for an operating differential to make possible the operation of the ships under American standards of living, but also provides for subsidy from the Government for the additional cost of building.

I hope Senators will bear in mind all the time that a navy is of no use without auxiliary ships. I remember very well, when President Theodore Roosevelt sent the "White Fleet" around the world, how proud we were to see those great white vessels plowing the seas. But there was no particular pride in my heart when I found that we had to charter from foreign countries, mainly from England, the vessels to carry supplies to make possible the operation of that fleet. A navy made up alone of battleships and cruisers and other fighting craft is of no value unless there is a merchant fleet to carry the supplies which must be had to make possible the operation of the fleet.

So, Mr. President, this second provision of the subsidy law is a wise one, I think, because it makes possible the building of ships which will serve as auxiliaries to the Navy. It is needless to refer to what a merchant fleet means to the farmers of the country.

On two or three occasions, by reason of difficulty abroad, for example, during the coal strike in England, and, going back of that to the Boer War, when the many merchant ships of England were employed in carrying products for the use of the British Empire, we had no ships. Then our grain and our fruits piled up on the docks on the Gulf of Mexico and on the west coast and in New York because there were no bottoms to carry our products abroad. It was only because we had the defective Shipping Board ships, which were built during the war, hastily and cheaply, and which were then in reserve, that made it at all possible for us to carry the supplies.

Mr. President, in closing, let me say that I think the Maritime Commission, headed by Mr. Kennedy, is rendering useful service. I hope the Department of Commerce will see to it that the provision of the law about Americans being employed in the crews will be carried out to the letter; that we may have, in every sense, an increasingly useful and valuable American merchant marine. When we have that, in my opinion, we will have materially advanced the welfare of our country and the prosperity of every State in our great Union.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7493) making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania, Mr. DOCKWEILER, Mr. TERRY, Mr. STARNES, Mr. COLLINS, Mr. CANNON of Missouri, Mr. POWERS, and Mr. ENGEL were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 2156. An act to amend the act relating to the Omaha-Council Bluffs Missouri River Bridge Board of Trustees, approved June 10, 1930, and for other purposes;

S. 2620. An act to amend the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, 1920;

S. 2621. An act to enable the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to authorize the city and county of Honolulu, a municipal corporation, to issue sewer bonds;

S. 2622. An act to authorize the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to create a public corporate authority authorized to engage in slum clearance and housing undertakings and to issue bonds of the authority, to authorize said legislature to provide for financial assistance to said authority by the Territory and its political subdivisions, and for other purposes;

S. 2652. An act to enable the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to authorize the issuance of certain bonds, and for other purposes;

S. 2653. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to enable the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to authorize the issuance of certain bonds, and for other purposes", approved August 3, 1935; and

H. R. 6635. An act to dispense with the necessity for insurance by the Government against loss or damage to valuables in shipment, and for other purposes.

AMENDMENT OF CRIMINAL CODE FOR ALASKA

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PEPPER in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2254) to amend section 460, chapter 44, title II, of the act entitled "An act to define and punish crimes in the District of Alaska and to provide a code of criminal procedure for said District", approved March 3, 1899, as amended, which was, on page 2, to strike out all of section 2 and insert:

SEC. 2. Nothing in this act shall abrogate, limit, or curtail the powers granted the Territorial Legislature of Alaska to impose taxes or licenses, nor limit or curtail any powers granted to the Territorial Legislature of Alaska by the act of Congress approved August 24, 1912, entitled "An act to create a legislative assembly in the Territory of Alaska, to confer legislative powers thereon, and for other purposes", or by any other act of Congress.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

FARMERS' HOME CORPORATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 106) to establish the Farmers' Home Corporation, to encourage and promote the ownership of farm homes and to make the possession of such homes more secure, to provide for the general welfare of the United States, to provide additional credit facilities for agricultural development, to create a fiscal agent for the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I should like to offer to the measure pending before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that there is an amendment now pending and undisposed of.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then, I give notice that, when the pending amendment shall have been disposed of, I will call attention to the amendment intended to be proposed by me.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, before a vote is taken on the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], by which he seeks to increase the appropriation for the first year to $50,000,000, I should like to make a statement. The Members of the Senate who were present when I discussed the bill earlier in the day understand that I should like to have $50,000,000 for the purposes of the bill, but such an amount of money appears to be inconsistent with the President's financial policy at this time. In that connection, I stated that I had made an agreement with him that we would start with $10,000,000 this year. I stated earlier in my remarks, and I repeat, that I had no authority to bind anybody but myself, but I was speaking in the interest of the passage of long-delayed legislation on this subject, and in the hope that we would be able to get some measure embodying legislation of this character on the statute books. So I hope that the arrangement which has been made and publicized and upon which the House of Representatives has acted will be carried out.

The House passed a bill in line with this understanding, and changed the appropriation to $10,000,000. It doubtless would not yield, in view of the statements I have made to the Senate, and, while most of us would like to have more money the first year, it is possible that increasing the authorization might jeopardize the final passage of the bill. I am not sure that the reduction in the long run may not be wholesome and helpful in working out a program to be put in operation and which, if successful, may be in continuance for from 50 to 100 years. I think precipitous haste may be injurious.

So I am going to ask the friends of the measure to vote down the pending amendment, and let the authorization for the next year stand at $10,000,000. I recognize the interest of the Senator from Texas. His heart beats strong for the under dogs in agriculture; he made a fine statement in support of the philosophy of the bill; and it is with great reluctance that I oppose anything that he offers here, especially when personally I should like to have done the very thing which he desires.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. In connection with the discussion which is now proceeding on the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas, I should like to invite the attention of the Senator from Alabama to language of the bill appearing on page 21, paragraph (h) on line 22. It seems to me that this is rather an extraordinary provision.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It has nothing to do with the amount to be appropriated.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Let me read the provision to the Senator, and I think he will agree that it has a great deal to do with the amount. It reads as follows:

(h) Shall determine the character and necessity for its expenditures under this act and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, and paid, without regard to the provisions of any other laws governing the expenditure of public funds and such determinations shall be final and conclusive upon all other officers of the Government.

It strikes me, Mr. President, that a broad provision of that kind should give pause to every person who is considering increasing the appropriations to be made available for such a corporation as is proposed to be created. May I ask the Senator from Alabama if the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry gave any special consideration to that provision?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; and I will ask the Senator if he gave any consideration when he voted for it in voting for the crop-insurance law?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I did not see it in the bill at that time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am informed it was there.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. At the proper time I shall move to strike out all of that paragraph following the word "act" in line 23 on page 21.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not see that that has anything to do with the matter involved in the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I want to say just a word in reply to the Senator from Alabama. I regret that the Senator from Alabama feels the necessity of having to quote on the floor of the Senate the wishes and desires of the President of the United States with regard to this particular legislation. No man in this Chamber has higher respect for the views and wishes of the President of the United States than I, but I think it is a bad practice for Senators, when they want to bolster up some argument, to drag out a letter or quote some verbal statement of the President of the United States in regard to pending legislation.

This is the Senate of the United States, and it is our duty to legislate. We all know how powerful any President is. We all know how powerful the present President is. The President can veto this bill if he does not like it. He can send here a message when he submits legislation, if he desires. But I do not think it is fair and I do not think it is good sportsmanship for Senators to turn the scale on these measures by quoting a private conversation with the President of the United States and saying, "Do not vote for this. The President does not want it. He told me so, and I promised I would not put it in the bill."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It was an authorized statement and not a private one. The President authorized me to give the statement to the newspapers, and it was published in the newspapers as coming from the President.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not care whether it was authorized or unauthorized.

Mr. President, I know that the President of the United States is in sympathy with the agricultural interests of the Nation. I know he is in sympathy with the laboring people of the Nation. But in this Chamber I have to vote my own views on these questions. I think I know something about the tenant farmer of America. I think I know something about the hardships he endures. I was raised among tenant farmers. My playmates were the children of tenant farmers. My schoolmates were the sons and daughters of tenant farmers. I know all about them. If there is one class of people in the United States that needs, not charity, not the dole, not hand-outs, not subsidies, but the opportunity to work out their own salvation on the soil, it is the tenant farmers of America.

We have here a bill relating to the tenant farmer. We have told him we are going to do something for him. We are going to buy a home for him. How much does the bill provide for that purpose? It provides $10,000,000 for the entire United States—only $10,000,000. Mr. President, that is nothing for a project of this kind. It is just a gesture, and not a good gesture at that. It is not a substantial gesture. It is just sort of a little wave at the tenant farmer, and he is gone. It is not even a glint in the eye.

I hope the Senate will vote for the $50,000,000 amendment. Let us start on this program in the proper way. Ten million dollars is proposed to be provided for the first year's operation. Three hundred million dollars was spent for the resettlement program, but they did not settle anything. They did not even settle their own accounts. They wasted a great deal of money. It was wasted in my State. The program was along the same line, but under an entirely different policy.

This bill provides for the selection of industrious, successful farmers and for putting them on the land and letting them work out their own salvation. We appropriated $300,000,000 for resettlement but propose to appropriate only $10,000,000 for a substantial, sound program looking to the future. We need this more now than we will need it next year. We need this more now than we will need it 2 years from now or 3 years from now or 5 years from now. We need it worse in the beginning of the program to take some of these people now on the W. P. A. and relief rolls and put them on these farms and give them some opportunity and some ambition and some hope.

We appropriated $1,500,000,000 for so-called relief, free relief, imaginary relief, temporary relief, work relief, so-called, but we propose to appropriate only $10,000,000 for the tenant farmers of America to rebuild the civic structure of this Nation and provide homes in which a man, when he goes home at night, does not have to worry about the landlord knocking on the door tomorrow morning and demanding his rent, when he goes home at night can feel he is anchored in the soil and that his children may grow up with satisfaction that they are sheltered by the roof of their own parents rather than getting a free bed in some free tourist establishment here in the city of Washington or in some other metropolitan territory.

The Senator from Alabama in his final argument undertook to execute the coupe de grace. However, the amendment is sound and ought to be adopted. I do not propose to abandon it. Last year the Senator from Alabama wanted $1,000,000,000, and defended his request for that amount and said it was sound. What a marvelous shrinkage in the Senator's financial vision has taken place within a year. A billion dollars then and now only $10,000,000! What percentage is that? I ask the former Secretary of the Treasury, who knows all about figures.

Mr. McADOO. It is 1 percent.

Mr. CONNALLY. One percent. I thank the Senator from California. The amendment ought to be adopted, and I hope the Senate will adopt it.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, we have heard the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] discuss the question of farm tenancy in Texas, and I know from the smiles that spread over the faces of some of his colleagues that they doubted if he was familiar with the subject. In the meantime I have sent to the Congressional Library, and have secured a copy of a bulletin of the University of Texas entitled "Studies in Farm Tenancy in Texas", from which I desire to read some extracts into the RECORD:

Prof. Franklin H. Giddings, of Columbia University, who is recognized as one of the world's greatest authorities in social and economic studies, has put into one of his books the following paragraph:

"Whenever a commonwealth, whose people are impoverished and burdened with mortgages and other debts, is observed to appeal continually to its government to enact laws of a socialistic nature, or to undertake industrial and commercial enterprises for the benefit of a suffering population, the first inquiry made should ascertain whether that commonwealth is not really suffering from sociological poverty—from a certain incapacity or lack of enterprise to organize those varied forms of voluntary association by which, in other communities, great economic activities are successfully maintained."

In the opinion of the present writer, Texas is suffering from sociological poverty. The foregoing paragraph contains the keynote of most of the difficulties which we, as a State, face today. In the following pages we have discussed many of the problems pertaining to tenancy and tenant life. But the tenant as a class cannot be set off from the rest of our citizenship and discussed without reference to other classes and to many other problems besides that which is commonly known as the tenant question. In other words, whatever may be said in the following pages concerning tenant conditions, it must be remembered that the writers believe that all citizens of the State must assume their share of responsibility for any deplorable conditions which may be found. The tenant has his shortcomings. So has the commercial man, the professional man, and the landowner. But the tenant as a class has less chance to assist in that voluntary association work which has meant so much to other sections of the country. The man with something accumulated, and with that something constantly adding perspective to his view, must assume his greater responsibility.

To what is our sociological poverty due? In other words, why have we as a people and as a State permitted any problem to rise to the proportions of the tenant question? There are many reasons. They may be enumerated here, but we shall take little time to discuss them at this point. In the first place, we have always had in Texas such an abundance of land and natural resources that they have possessed small value and have been given little consideration. In time past only the minority comprehended the relation between industrial development and the rise in the value of land, and this minority took advantage of the opportunity and succeeded in obtaining large holdings. The wisdom of their actions has been jusified. In the second place, the conquest of Nature has been carried forward with great rapidity. The stream of immigration has flowed constantly in and constantly toward that section of the State where farming promised most for the least effort. The rise in the value of land has been greatest in this section.

The tenant question is now most pressing where originally farming could be started with the least immediate expenditure of labor and capital. To make a living in Texas or in most of the South has been easier than elsewhere, but easy living conditions are not conducive to strong or united social action. Ability to make a comfortable existence on a piece of land of sufficient size to keep the tiller of the soil isolated from the neighbors, has kept out all evidence of need for social unity and social action. This has been supplemented by a lack of common school facilities and of compulsory education for those who thought the farmer could farm without education.

The problems of industry confronting us today have not grown slowly. The rapid industrial development has rather thrust them upon the people. It takes time to acquire sociological wealth—more time than has elapsed since our industrial development began—and hence our people are unprepared to meet the large and bewildering problems which suddenly confront us. Every tide of home seekers coming into the State from other sections and other countries tends to keep us from that wealth because the newcomers must be assimilated by the social body. One of the great draw-backs to cooperative action has been the newness of the country and the fact that sufficient time has not elapsed to permit the growing up of stable community life.

It would be possible to take the voting population of the greater number of our counties and show what is meant by the foregoing comments on social life. As an example, we have taken the voters of Brown County and have grouped them by ages, so that the first table below shows the number of farm voters in each age group. In the second table we have shown by certain groups, of so many years' duration, how long these voters have been in the State and in the county. These tables give a fair idea of the movement of population in this State. In 1910 Brown County had a 42 percent of tenancy in its farm population. The table shows that there were in 1913, 23 voters of more than 60 years of age, but only four men had been in the State that long and none had been in the county that long. The greatest number of voters in any age group was between the ages of 30 and 35; the number being 354. But there are in the county 376 men who have been in the State that long. However, only 224 have been in the county that long. Further study of these tables will bring out other facts of a similar nature.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GUFFEY. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Would the Senator mind, in the course of his remarks, pointing out the relative economic status of the coal miner and the tenant farmer, as to which one received the larger return and had the more comfortable life?

Mr. GUFFEY. I shall have an article on the coal miner here in a minute. I will take up that subject later.

The above figures are illustrated in various ways, either in whole or in part, by our various maps and charts, but attention is called here to figure I, which shows the population of Texas born in the United States and the rural and urban population born in the State and in other States.

Closely connected with the movement of population in our own State and in many other States has been the increase or decrease in the number of farm tenants. For the purpose of making a comparison between Texas and several other Southern States and States from different sections of the country, we give the following table concerning farm tenants, the increase or decrease being represented by percentage instead of numbers.

Growth of tenancy in the United States

	1880	1890	1900	1910
United States	25.6	28.4	35.3	37.0
Mississippi	43.8	52.8	62.4	66.1
Georgia	44.9	53.6	59.9	65.6
South Carolina	50.3	55.3	61.1	63.0
Alabama	46.8	48.6	57.5	60.2
Louisiana	35.2	44.4	58.0	55.3
Oklahoma			43.8	54.8
Texas	37.6	41.9	49.7	52.6
Iowa	23.8	28.1	34.9	37.8
Kentucky	26.5	25.0	32.8	33.9
Indiana	23.7	25.4	28.6	30.0
Missouri	27.3	26.8	30.5	29.9
Virginia	29.5	26.9	30.7	26.5
New York	16.5	20.2	23.9	20.8

The movement of population and the increase in the number of people per unit of area in Texas may be very closely followed by taking note of the time of organization of the different counties in the State. While almost anyone can tell where the older counties of the State are located and where the newer counties are to be found, very few people, perhaps, have in mind the general development as it is brought out in figure II.

As may be seen, the older section of the State is the small portion of the southeast part. Bexar County stands alone on the west side. There is a complete tier of counties between it and other original counties on the east. On the north, Shelby County marks the limit except for Fannin and Red River, which stand alone like two frontier sentries on the extreme north of the State. The counties which were organized between 1836 and 1840 may be easily distinguished on the map.

During the next decade 1840–50, the most of the counties in the northeast corner of the State were organized. There was also a block of a half-dozen organized around Bexar County and four in the southern point of the State. Of 25 of our leading cotton counties now, only two-thirds were organized before the year 1850.

Between the years 1850 and 1860 there was a solid block at the center of the State which extended both to the north and the south. Ellis, Johnson, Hill, Bosque, McLellan, Falls, Bell, Coryell, Hamilton, Tarrant, Parker, Palo Pinto, Jack, Wise, Montague, and others in the southwest were all organized during this decade.

Perhaps not more than five counties were organized between 1860 and 1870, but in 1870 more than a half-dozen of the smaller counties of the northeast corner of the State were ready for organization and on the west between 1870 and 1880 there was organization from Clay and Baylor on the north to the south and west as far as the Rio Grande, and three counties in the El Paso country.

With the exception of Wheeler and Tom Green Counties, all of the Plains and Panhandle country north of San Angelo has been organized since 1880. The greater part of it has been organized into counties since 1890. The work of organization is still going on.

A study of the map will show the settling up and filling in of the State. It does not show our population as it now exists. Figure III shows the density of population in 1910. The map which we are now discussing shows the speed and direction of movement of the people in order to settle the State as it is peopled now. It is not to be understood that the people who lived in the southeastern section of the State, sent their children into the center of the State and their grandchildren into the western part. This may be true in a large degree, but the tide of immigration which has swept in from the older States has been largely responsible for this later development in the central and western portions.

The important point, in connection with our brief study of development, is that the great agricultural and industrial problems of present-day Texas are to be found in a section of the State which was organized 5 or 10 years after Texas entered the Union.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GUFFEY. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. Am I to understand that the Senator is now filibustering against the railroad bill?

Mr. GUFFEY. The Senator is not filibustering. He is just reading into the RECORD some interesting data on farm tenancy in Texas, to prove the position which the junior Senator from Texas argued in his brilliant speech a few minutes ago.

Mr. WHEELER. I thought probably the Senator was filibustering against the railroad bill which is coming up in a few minutes.

Mr. GUFFEY. No, Mr. President.

Mr. WHEELER. I could not understand why the Senator was reading the figures he is reading, because they certainly are not interesting to anybody, unless it be to the Senator himself.

Mr. GUFFEY. If we listened only to interesting things in the Senate, we should hear very little talking here. [Laughter.]

Taking the 37 counties of the State which had in 1910 a tenancy in excess of 59 percent, we find the following with regard to the dates of their organization:

Six were organized between 1836 and 1839, inclusive.
Three were organized between 1840 and 1844, inclusive.
Thirteen were organized between 1845 and 1849, inclusive.
Six were organized between 1850 and 1854, inclusive.
One was organized between 1855 and 1859, inclusive.
Three were organized between 1870 and 1874, inclusive.
Three were organized between 1880 and 1884, inclusive.
One was organized between 1885 and 1889, inclusive.
One was organized between 1890 and 1894, inclusive.

These 37 counties include all the greatest cotton counties of the State. Twenty-two were organized before 1850 and fifteen of them since.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HERRING in the chair). Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to his colleague?

Mr. GUFFEY. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. Is the Senator familiar with the 1935 statistics, which show that 17.7 percent of the farmers in Pennsylvania were tenants?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, we cannot hear what is going on. What is the arrangement being effected between the two Senators from Pennsylvania? [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS. I was giving my colleague some information on the number of tenant farmers in the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. ROBINSON. What is there confidential about it? Why should not other Senators have the information?

Mr. GUFFEY. It was a very low percentage, I was very glad to learn.

Mr. DAVIS. There is nothing on this subject I would hold in confidence from the distinguished and able majority leader, the senior Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, in conclusion I wish to say that I strongly approve the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming, seconded by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator for his support.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I should like to have the amendment stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas to the amendment of the committee.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed, on page 31, lines 9 and 10, to strike out "$10,000,000" and to insert "$50,000,000", and in line 12 to strike out "$25,000,000" and insert "$50,000,000."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

NO RESTRAINT ON EXPENDITURES

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, a few moments ago I interrupted the Senator to call attention to the provisions of the bill which appear on pages 21 and 22. The bill creates a corporation to administer the functions created by the measure. In paragraph (h) it is provided that the corporation—

(h) Shall determine the character and necessity for its expenditures under this act and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, and paid, without regard to the provisions of any other laws governing the expenditure of public funds and such determinations shall be final and conclusive upon all other officers of the Government.

Mr. President, it seems to me this provision could scarcely have had any lengthy consideration at the hands of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The Senate has just voted down an amendment which would have increased the capital stock of the corporation by $10,000,000, and which would have increased the authorization for the first year from $25,000,000 to $35,000,000. But as the bill now stands it places in the hands of the proposed corporation $25,000,000 of public funds from the Treasury of the United States and gives to the corporation complete freedom from every act which has ever been passed to control the expenditure of public funds. There is talk about deficits, about taxes, about balancing the Budget; yet we are asked to pass on to a corporation complete unlimited power to spend all the money Congress may appropriate without any responsibility under the general law.

Mr. President, if a proposal of that kind had been made when this Government was established the man who made it would have been deemed insane; but now, apparently without a thought, it is proposed that we turn over to the corporation now about to be created this large sum of money to be spent without any let or hindrance.

The importance of what we are doing should become apparent when we read another provision of the bill. On page 19, section 5, provides that—

> The management of the corporation shall be vested in a board of directors (hereinafter in this act called the board) subject to the general supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture.

We are asked to create a board of directors and to make that board subject to the general supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture, "hereinafter in this act called the Secretary."

Observe this language:

> The board shall consist of three persons employed in the Department of Agriculture, who shall be appointed by and hold office at the pleasure of the Secretary.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I was wondering if the Senator had been analyzing the powers of this corporation, made up of three employees of the Secretary of Agriculture, he would look at subdivision (l), at the top of page 22, and see if he could define the powers given under that section, which provides that the corporation "shall have such powers as may be necessary or appropriate for the exercise of the powers herein specifically conferred upon the corporation." This is the part to which I direct the Senator's special attention:

> And all of such incidental powers as are customary in corporations generally.

I am wondering what powers are "customary in corporations generally."

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is aware of the fact that he has put his finger upon one of the chief evils of our modern economic systems. Corporations are being created in numerous States, notably the State of Delaware, with absolutely unlimited power, and we have come to feel that the exercise of these powers is a sort of a divine right in a corporation. When three men gather together in a room and call themselves a corporation, they may do a multitude of things which no one of them in his natural capacity would think of being able to do. The law would prevent any natural person from exercising any part of the power which is conveyed to corporations under just such a phrase as that to which the Senator has called attention.

The corporate device is a device whereby a certain amount of public power can be exercised by private individuals. I am not referring solely to those provisions of the proposed legislation which refer to the character of the corporation proposed to be set up by this bill. I am wholly in favor of the plan to provide relief for farm tenants. I think it is absolutely essential that we should find a method whereby to establish the rural population of the United States upon the land upon a self-sufficient basis. But are we going to do that by turning the powers of Congress over to a corporation directed by three individuals, selected by the Secretary of Agriculture at his pleasure, to serve for such a term as he may decide—persons for whom absolutely no qualifications are set down in this bill?

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] has referred to the incidental powers that are customary in corporations generally. Those of us who have given any study to the corporation problem know that as a matter of fact hundreds of corporations have been created in this country by private interests—for private purposes, it is true—in which stenographers and office boys were made directors. I see the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] on the floor, and I am reminded of the statement which he made here only a few weeks ago in respect to the manner in which the Van Sweringen corporations were created. What is attempted to be done by this bill is the same sort of device that has been used by the exploiters of high finance, and we are adopting it for a public purpose. Is there any necessity for such a provision? Is there any reason for such a provision? Why should the Congress of the United States, in establishing a system designed to be helpful to the rural population of the United States, create a corporation of unlimited power, to be governed by a board of directors selected by the Secretary of Agriculture and to serve at the will of the Secretary? What Secretary of Agriculture? It may be one today and another tomorrow. We are legislating here not for today or this week or for this month. We hope we are undertaking to pass a permanent law, one that will be permanently beneficial to the people of the United States.

I do not believe that the rural population of this country desire to have their farms handled by a corporation created in this loose manner, a corporation the powers of which and the duties of which are so casually defined.

Let me call attention to another provision, bearing in mind that the members of the board of directors are to be appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture. It makes no difference what our ideas may be; he may select any person in the employ of the Department of Agriculture to fill these places.

Observe section 7 (a). We have created a board of directors. We have conveyed to that board of directors, we think, the power to govern the corporation. Subparagraph (e) of section 6 provides that this board may adopt, amend, and repeal bylaws, rules, and regulations governing the manner in which the work may be carried on. But observe section 7 (a):

> CIVIL-SERVICE LAWS ABROGATED
>
> The Secretary of Agriculture may appoint such officers and employees, subject to the provisions of the Classification Act of 1923, and acts amendatory thereof, and such attorneys and experts as may be necessary for the purposes of this act.

We have created a board of directors to govern the corporation, and then we turn over to the Secretary of Agriculture the power to select the employees of the corporation. But that is not all.

> The Secretary may make such appointment without regard to the civil-service laws or regulations.

We not only repeal all the laws that govern the expenditure of public funds for the benefit of this corporation, to be governed by a board of directors of three persons, selected without stated qualifications by the Secretary of Agriculture, but now we give to the Secretary of Agriculture the power to appoint all of the employees without regard to the civil-service laws.

I read further:

> The board shall define the authority and duties of the officers and employees of the corporation, delegate to them such of the powers vested in the corporation as it may determine, and require bonds of such of them as it may designate and fix the penalties and pay the premiums of such bonds.

Mr. President, it seems to me impossible that the provision to which I have just referred could have been given any real consideration by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry; and I should personally hesitate to see a bill of this magnitude passed without serious consideration by this body.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Will the Senator state just what is his specific objection to requiring bonds of the employees of the corporation?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Ah, but the Senator misunderstands me. I made no reference whatsoever to the requirement of bonds. That is one of the few good provisions to be found in the portion of this measure dealing with the character of the proposed corporation. I was pointing out the fact that the Secretary of Agriculture may appoint such officers and employees, subject to the provisions of the Classification Act, and attorneys and experts, as may be necessary, and that these appointments may be made without regard to the civil-service laws and regulations. I was not making any allusion whatever to the provision governing bonds.

FREE USE OF THE MAILS

There is another provision in the measure to which it seems to me attention should be directed. It appears on page 21, in line 13, subparagraph (f). This corporation, now created with unlimited power, to be governed sometimes by a board appointed by the Secretary, without qualifications; this corporation, which is to be free from every law designed to place a restriction upon the expenditure of public funds; this corporation, which is now being released from the civil-service law, is being given another privilege. It—

Shall be entitled to the free use of the United States mails in the same manner as other executive agencies of the Government.

I am sure no Member of this body and no Member of the House—certainly no member of the Committee on Appropriations and no member of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads—is without knowledge of the fact that the mails are simply loaded down with unnecessary publications that are never read and which never should be printed.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Is the Senator referring to speeches by Members of Congress? [Laughter.]

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am not referring to speeches. I am not referring to discussions of legislative problems. It would probably be a blessing to the country at large if the debates in the Senate and House were circulated more voluminously and were more widely read than they are. I am referring to the material which is printed in the departments, and which is never used, and which can serve no useful purpose.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. May I call the Senator's attention to another paragraph? His amendment deals with paragraph (h) on page 21, where the board is allowed to determine the character and necessity for its expenditures without regard to the provisions of any other law. At the top of page 23, paragraph (c), I find that the Secretary of Agriculture may take away from the corporation all of its funds and allot them to other bureaus within the Department.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I thank the Senator for calling attention to that paragraph. This is the way that very interesting provision reads:

The Secretary may allot to bureaus and offices of the Department of Agriculture, as he may direct, to assist in carrying out this act, any funds made available pursuant to this act.

In other words, though the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and the House may decide that certain funds are necessary for the purposes of this corporation, and though the directors of the corporation might feel that the funds were necessary for the purposes of the corporation, yet the Secretary of Agriculture is given authority to take away that money without the consent of Congress. Does the Senator so understand it?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I think perhaps that is the wrong interpretation of that paragraph. That paragraph contains the phrase "to assist in carrying out this act", which clearly means, to my mind, that if the Secretary of Agriculture takes any funds from this corporation it must be for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act. He cannot allot those funds to some other bureau for some other purpose.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. But who will determine whether the activities of such a bureau are necessary in carrying out the provisions of this act?

Mr. HATCH. Under the provisions of the bill itself the Secretary of Agriculture would determine that point.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have no doubt the Senator is correct that it is intended by this provision to give the Secretary the authority to switch funds for the general purposes of the act; but the circumstance to which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] alluded and the circumstance which I am discussing is that the Secretary has the power to switch these funds, even though for that purpose, without regard to the desires of Congress which passes the appropriation bill.

Mr. ADAMS. I add the additional suggestion that the Senator will find in section 4 (a), on page 19, that these funds are given to the corporation in exchange for the issuance of corporate stock so they become a corporate fund.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is referring now only to the capital stock?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes; I am dealing with the first $10,000,000.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is the capital stock, and I suppose it could be used solely for capital-stock purposes, though there is no limitation. On page 31 of the bill the Senator will find an authorization for an appropriation of $25,000,000 for the fiscal year over and above the capital stock, and that is the fund which, under the provisions to which the Senator alluded, the Secretary of Agriculture could switch around as he pleased.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, that is the authorization for the second year for capital-stock purposes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I misunderstood it then. Then there is authorized $50,000,000 for the next calendar year.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to call the Senator's attention to another amazing section of the bill, but it relates directly to the amendment which he has submitted. His amendment, as I understand, is directed particularly to the unlimited power of the corporation to incur its own bills, pass on them, pay them, audit them, and finish everything.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. They may spend the money as they please.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I invite the Senator's attention to the fact that finally there is one post audit. I am referring to subsection (c) beginning at the bottom of page 23. The Comptroller General finally gets a chance to go over the transaction after everything has been completed beyond recall. I invite the Senator's particular attention to the provision at the top of page 24. We are so tender of this corporation that the Comptroller General is not permitted to report to Congress what he has found until he has sent his report to the corporation to find out what it thinks about it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I suppose the Senator from Michigan understands that that came out of developments in connection with T. V. A. where thoroughly unjustified criticisms were made without giving T. V. A. any opportunity to make an explanation. In a subsequent bill the same provision was inserted by the able Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

Mr. VANDENBERG. The fact remains that I fail to understand how we can have an independent Comptroller General exercising his authority the way Congress intended it to be exercised if he cannot even submit his report to Congress until he has had a private conference with the bureau which he proposes to criticize.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That deals with the subject matter which has been under consideration by the special joint committee of the two Houses on reorganization of the Federal Government. A great deal of attention has been devoted to the necessity and the desirability of audits of Government expenditures and whether or not they should be post audits or audits made before the expenditures are made.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it is my purpose to move an executive session at an opportune time, and then to move a recess until tomorrow. Will the Senator from Wyoming yield for that purpose at this time?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, among the nominations in the messages just laid before the Senate are several experts and attorneys in the Social Security Board. There is some question as to where those nominations should be referred.

It is my opinion, because the social security bill was considered by the Finance Committee, that that would be the appropriate committee to which the reference should be made. I understand that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations contends that because the provision of law which brought these nominations here was included in an appropriation bill and was written into an appropriation act, the nominations should go to that committee. I think they ought to be referred to the Finance Committee. However, I am going to leave the reference entirely in the hands of the Chair and make no motion to that effect.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, is not present. It will be recalled that nominations of the administrators for W. P. A., and I believe for P. W. A., were referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The Senator from Virginia feels that these nominations in like manner should be referred to that committee. I hope they may be so referred, though I do not know what the correct parliamentary procedure may be.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee, that the nominations be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Chair reports back favorably from that committee the following nominations:

Hugh R. Wilson, of Illinois, to be an Assistant Secretary of State;

William H. Hornibrook, of Utah, formerly Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Iran (Persia) and Afghanistan, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Costa Rica; and Miss Margaret M. Hanna, of Kansas, to be a Foreign Service officer of class 5, a consul, and a secretary in the Diplomatic Service.

ENVOY EXTRAORDINARY AND MINISTER PLENIPOTENTIARY TO COSTA RICA

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, there is occasion for the prompt consideration of the nomination of Mr. Hornibrook to be minister to Costa Rica. The Committee on Foreign Relations, through its chairman, has reported the nomination. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and, without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmation of Mr. Hornibrook's nomination.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the President will be notified.

If there be no further reports of committees, the Executive Calendar is in order.

CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS—ROBERT FECHNER

The legislative clerk read the nominaion of Robert Fechner, of Massachusetts, to be director of the Civilian Conservation Corps.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

That completes the Executive Calendar.

RECESS

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, July 2, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate July 1 (legislative day of June 15), 1937

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

Jefferson Caffery, of Louisiana, now Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Cuba, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Brazil, vice Hugh S. Gibson.

J. Butler Wright, of Wyoming, now Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Czechoslovakia, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Cuba, vice Jefferson Caffery.

Hugh S. Gibson, of California, now Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Brazil, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Belgium; also Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Luxemburg, vice Dave Hennen Morris.

William H. Hornibrook, of Utah, formerly Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Iran (Persia) and Afghanistan, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Costa Rica.

Ferdinand L. Mayer, of Indiana, now a Foreign Service officer of class 1 and counselor of Embassy at Berlin, Germany, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Haiti, vice George A. Gordon.

Leland Harrison, of Illinois, now Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Rumania, to be Envoy Extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Switzerland, vice Hugh R. Wilson.

William E. Chapman, of Oklahoma, now a Foreign Service officer of class 5 and a consul, to be also a secretary in the Diplomatic Service of the United States of America.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD

Mary E. Austin, of New York, Assistant Director, Bureau of Public Assistance (field activities).

Frank Bane, of Virginia, executive director.

Paul E. Batzell, of New York, Chief, Division of Administration, Bureau of Unemployment Compensation.

Thomas C. Billig, of Maryland, senior attorney.

Robert P. Bingham, of New Hampshire, principal attorney.

Benjamin S. Beecher, of Wisconsin, principal technical analyst.

Thomas C. Blaisdell, Jr., of New York, Assistant Director, Bureau of Research and Statistics.

Ruth O. Blakeslee, of Pennsylvania, Chief, Regulations and Procedure Division, Bureau of Public Assistance.

Thomas C. Broadaway, of Arkansas, senior administration officer.

Leonard J. Calhoun, of Mississippi, assistant general counsel.

John R. Campbell, Jr., of Massachusetts, regional representative, Bureau of Federal Old-Age Benefits.

John J. Corson, of Virginia, assistant executive director.

James S. Douglass, of Louisiana, technical adviser on motion pictures.

Thomas H. Eliot, of Massachusetts, general counsel.

Merton L. Emerson, of Massachusetts, Chief, Coordinating and Review Division.

Thomas I. Emerson, of the District of Columbia, principal attorney.

Isidore S. Falk, of Connecticut, principal medical economist.

Joseph L. Fay, of Massachusetts, technical adviser on machine methods.

William M. Galvin, of Maryland, senior technical adviser.

Walter Gellhorn, of New York, regional attorney, New York, N. Y.

John F. Hardy, of Massachusetts, regional attorney, Boston, Mass.

S. Park Harman, of New York, regional unemployment compensation representative.

Gladys A. Harrison, of Minnesota, regional attorney, region VIII, Minneapolis, Minn.

LeRoy Hodges, of Virginia, Director of Bureau of Federal Old-Age Benefits.

Jane M. Hoey, of New York, Director, Bureau of Public Assistance.

Robert E. Huse, of Massachusetts, Associate Director, Bureau of Informational Service.

Jesse O. Irvin, of Georgia, Chief, Press Service Division.

Helen R. Jester, of California, Chief, Public Assistance Statistics Division.

Curtis E. Lakeman, of Connecticut, Chief of Publications Division.

Bernice Lotwin, of Wisconsin, principal attorney.

Geoffrey May, of Maryland, Associate Director, Bureau of Public Assistance.

Elliott H. Moyer, of Michigan, senior attorney.

Merrill G. Murray, of Minnesota, Chief, Division of Legislative Aid.

Edward J. McCormack, of Tennessee, special assistant to Board.

Joseph E. McElvain, of New York, senior attorney.

Rose J. McHugh, of New York, Chief, Division of Administrative Surveys.

Harold P. Packer, of New York, senior attorney.

Louis Resnick, of New York, Director, Informational Service.

Mary Ross, of New York, senior social economist.

A. Melvin Sims, of New York, principal attorney.

A. Delafield Smith, of New York, principal attorney.

Jack B. Tate, of Tennessee, assistant general counsel.

James Guy Tucker, of Arkansas, constructive accountant.

Agnes Van Driel, of Illinois, Chief, Division of Technical Training.

R. Gordon Wagenet, of Connecticut, Director, Bureau of Unemployment Compensation.

Norman J. Ware, of Connecticut, senior economist.

Sue S. White, of Tennessee, senior attorney.

Leonard J. Wilbert, of Wisconsin, constructive accountant.

Alanson W. Willcox, of the District of Columbia, assistant general counsel.

Edward B. Williams, of Arkansas, principal attorney.

Marie R. Wing, of Ohio, regional attorney, region V—Cleveland, Ohio.

COAST GUARD

Albert A. Lawrence to be a professor (temporary), with the rank of lieutenant, in the Coast Guard of the United States, to take effect from date of oath.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate July 1 (legislative day of June 15), 1937

ENVOY EXTRAORDINARY AND MINISTER PLENIPOTENTIARY TO COSTA RICA

William H. Hornibrook to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Costa Rica.

CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS

Robert Fechner to be Director of the Civilian Conservation Corps.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JULY 1, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our Father, without whose guidance our labor is useless and our search is vain, draw near to us. We ask Thee to invigorate our counsels and direct our inquiries that by due diligence and discernment we may be wise unto the claims our country has laid upon us. We pray Thee to lift us above all suspicion and distrust and hallow our deliberations with Thy blessing. Do Thou inspire us with high standards and wholesome ideals which will deepen our desire for purity, unselfishness, and sincerity. May we labor with singleness of heart as those who realize that their tasks are measured by the years. Our Heavenly Father, may the humblest cottage and the commonplace things of human life stand forth in the victory of day where the shadows are doomed because the light has come. In the blessed name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

Mr. CHAMPION. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to ask unanimous consent that that committee may be permitted to sit for the remainder of this week during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

RETIREMENT OF EMPLOYEES IN THE CIVIL SERVICE AND IN CERTAIN POSITIONS IN THE LEGISLATIVE BRANCH

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 2901) to amend the act of May 29, 1930, for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service and in certain positions in the legislative branch of the Government to include all other employees in the legislative branch, with Senate amendments thereto, and agree to the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand, this extends certain privileges to the employees of the legislative branch of the Government?

Mr. RAMSPECK. That was provided by the House bill. The Senate put in an amendment extending the benefits also to the judicial employees of the Government. I have in my hand a letter from the Attorney General stating he has no objection to the inclusion of the judicial employees. The gentleman will understand this is not mandatory. It is simply a permissive bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The minority conferees are in accord?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I have spoken to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts, and I think she is in accord with the action I am seeking to have taken.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think the bill is in satisfactory form. Certain changes were made in reference to Senate employees.

Mr. RAMSPECK. The Senate employees are in a little different position than employees of the House in that they do not pay any deductions into the fund until they have served 15 years, but if they want to avail themselves of the act at that time they have to pay for all of their previous service.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The Senate always wants a little edge on the House?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes; they insist on that, and as long as it did not affect the House employees, I agreed to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 3, strike out "349" and insert "468."

Page 1, line 7, after "branch", insert: "and all officers and employees of any of the courts of the United States who are not entitled to the benefits of any other retirement act whose tenure of employment is not intermittent nor of uncertain duration."

Page 2, line 3, after "be", insert: "and shall not be applicable to any officer or employee of any court of the United States who is brought within its scope by section 1 of this act until such officer or employee gives notice in writing to the disbursing officer by whom the salary of such officer or employee is paid."

Page 2, line 9, after "entrance", insert: ": Provided, That in the case of any such employee whose salary or any part thereof is paid by the disbursing officer of the Senate, such notice may be given at any time, and such employee shall come under the provisions of such act of May 29, 1930, at the beginning of the sixth month after the giving of such notice."

Page 2, after line 9, insert:

"No such employee whose salary or any part thereof is paid by the disbursing officer of the Senate shall make any deposit required by section 9, or any redeposit required by subsection (b) of section 12, of such act of May 29, 1930, and there shall not be deducted and withheld from the basic salary, pay, or compensation of any such employee the sum required to be deducted and withheld by section 10 of such act of May 29, 1930, unless and until such employee shall have completed 15 years of service: Provided, That before any such employee may derive any of the benefits provided by such act of May 29, 1930, he shall be required to deposit an amount qual to the following sums: (1) The sum which would have been deducted and withheld from his basic salary, pay, or compensation but for the foregoing provisions of this paragraph, together with interest on such sum computed at the rate of 4 percent per annum compounded on June 30 of each fiscal year; (2) any sum required to be deposited under the provisions of section 9 of such act of May 29, 1930; and (3) any sum required to be redeposited under the provisions of subsection (b) of section 12 of such act of May 29, 1930: Provided further, That should any such employee who shall have served for a total period of not less than 5 years become totally disabled for useful and efficient service, within the meaning of section 6 of such act of May 29, 1930, before completing 15 years of service, he shall be entitled to the benefits provided by such section 6, upon deposit of the amount required to be deposited under the preceding proviso."

Page 2, lines 13 and 14, strike out "employee in the legislative branch" and insert "officer or employee."

Page 2, line 15, after "act", insert: ", nor hereafter to employees of the office of the Architect of the Capitol."

The Senate amendments were agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REREFERENCE OF CERTAIN BILLS

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 296) to reclassify the salaries of employees in the custodial service of the Post Office Department of the United States, the bill (H. R. 2686) to provide automatic increases in compensation to employees of the custodial service of the United States, and the bill (H. R. 2687) to reclassify the compensation of head charwoman and charwoman in the custodial service of the Post Office Department of the United states be withdrawn from the Committee on the Civil Service and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COLDEN and Mr. ECKERT asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully direct the attention of the Members of the House to an extension of remarks I will presently ask permission to include in the RECORD today on the subject of sugar and an outline of what has happened under a sound policy as represented by the Jones-Costigan Act after the invalidation of the processing taxes and benefit payments by the Supreme Court, through the activities of certain lobbyists.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mrs. HONEYMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday next, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk and special orders previously made, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN] may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

GOLDEN GATE INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 88, as amended, authorizing Federal participation in the Golden Gate Exposition to be held in 1939.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to find out how much this fair is going to cost.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot inform the gentleman.

Mr. RICH. I would like to have the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH] answer the question.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, the bill just referred to, I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, provides for an appropriation of $1,500,000.

The original bill as introduced provided for an appropriation of $3,000,000, but by reason of the many demands on the Government and the gentleman's insistence on holding down appropriations, we cut the appropriation from $3,000,000 to $1,500,000.

Mr. RICH. This exposition comes in the same year we are having the world's fair in New York. Considerable Federal funds are being spent during that year for the fair in New York City. Is it not possible we might have this fair in some other year, as we get requests annually for appropriation for fairs? Then we would not have two in the same year, one in California and one in New York. The people may get kind of dizzy going back and forth.

Mr. WELCH. I wish to state to the gentleman we all hoped this could be avoided but it developed it was impossible. Both expositions must go on. The President of the United States last year sent out invitations to the nations of the world, 59 in all, to participate in both expositions. Predicated on that, millions of dollars have been spent by New York and by San Francisco. Here is a picture of the San Francisco exposition site, which is on a man-made island in the middle of San Francisco Bay. This island has been reclaimed at a cost of a vast sum of money. The State of California has already appropriated $5,000,000 for State participation, and the people of San Francisco have contributed $7,500,000 up to this time. I may say to the gentleman we are too far advanced to defer the exposition another year. It is impossible. There has been a mutual understanding between New York and San Francisco that there will be no conflict between the two expositions. The gentleman knows, of course, that New York and San Francisco are 3,000 miles apart. An exposition is going on in Paris at the present time. There is not much difference in distance between New York to Paris and from New York to San Francisco. This is a large country of ours.

Mr. RICH. I may say to the gentleman that you wanted $3,000,000 and now you are asking for $1,500,000. What assurance have we you will not be back for the other $1,500,000 before the fair is over?

Mr. WELCH. I can say to the gentleman I will not be back asking for it.

Mr. RICH. How about the other Members of the California delegation?

Mr. WELCH. I do not think so. However, I cannot speak for the other Members.

Mr. RICH. I hope you have a good time in California.

Mr. WELCH. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. RICH. And we might say, "California, here we come." [Laughter.]

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, on November 16, 1936, the President, pursuant to Senate Joint Resolution 226, now Public, No. 107, Seventy-fourth Congress, invited 59 countries of the world to attend and participate in the Golden Gate International Exposition. Many foreign countries have accepted the invitation, particularly Central America, South America, Hawaii, the Philippine Islands, the Orient, Australia, and New Zealand.

Twenty-three States have enacted legislation or have legislation pending providing for participation, as have European countries and nations of the Pacific, while the requests for concession space far exceed the number that can be accepted.

The exposition will celebrate the completion of the world's two largest bridges across the San Francisco Bay, the inauguration of trans-Pacific air service that brings the Orient to our very door, the progress of the nations bordering the Pacific, and the economic and social development of the 11 States constituting America's western empire.

The site of the exposition is a man-made island, 400 acres in size, in the center of San Francisco Bay. Building this island involves the construction of a 16,000-foot sea wall, containing 220,000 tons of rock, and the pumping of 20,000,000 cubic yards of sand by nine giant dredges. The administration building and 2 exhibit palaces are one-half completed, and 12 exhibit buildings, ferry terminals, and roadways are now under contract. At the close of the exposition, the island will be cleared of structures, with the exception of the $800,000 administration building and two hangars, each costing $400,000, and turned into an airport and seaplane base, with legal and statutory obligations giving both Army and Navy access and use of this land, which will become part of our national defense.

A minimum attendance of 20,000,000 persons is anticipated. This is being conservative when it is considered that there are 3,000,000 persons located within 1 hour of the exposition gates and 9,000,000 population in the three Pacific Coast States. The sum to be paid in taxes to the Government is estimated at $30,000,000, more than 15 times the amount of the Federal appropriation.

At no point is San Francisco stressing selfish advantage or contemplating purely local profit. The whole of California, Pacific Coast and Rocky Mountain States, Central America, South America, Hawaii, the Philippines, the Orient, Australia, and New Zealand have all been joined as cohosts.

This resolution has the approval of the Departments of State, Commerce, Agriculture, Treasury, Interior, and War, and the Comptroller General of the United States.

The original resolution introduced by me provided for an appropriation of $3,000,000. This sum was reduced upon the suggestion of the Bureau of the Budget in order to conform with the financial policy of the President to $1,750,000. By agreement, a further reduction was made, reducing the amount to $1,500,000. The State of California recently appropriated $5,000,000 toward the exposition, and the people of San Francisco raised $7,500,000 for this purpose.

Primarily and essentially, this great exposition is for the purpose of emphasizing the amazing progress of the Western Hemisphere and laying the cornerstone of a new Pacific empire.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

Whereas there is to be held in the city of San Francisco during the year 1939 a world's fair and celebration commemorating the completion of the San Francisco-Oakland Bridge and the Golden Gate Bridge, and designed to gather, arrange, and exhibit the varied cultures of the countries tributary to the Pacific Ocean and the origins, progress, and accomplishments in science, the arts, education, industry, business, and transportation of the Pacific area of the United States, and the nations of the world;

Whereas a site for the exposition, an island of 400 acres, municipally owned and located in the center of San Francisco Bay, is now nearing completion, and the San Francisco Bay Exposition, Inc., will expend not less than $24,500,000 on its improvement; said site, upon the close of the exposition to become a municipal airport serving the entire metropolitan San Francisco Bay district, and forming an adjunct of vast importance to national defense; and

Whereas such world fair and celebration are worthy and deserving of the support and encouragement of the United States; and the United States has aided and encouraged such world's fairs and celebrations in the past: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby established a Commission, to be known as the United States Golden Gate International Exposition Commission and to be composed of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce and the Secretary of Labor; which Commission shall serve without additional compensation and shall represent the United States in connection with the holding of a world's fair and celebration in the city of San Francisco during the year 1939.

SEC. 2. There shall be a United States Commissioner for the Golden Gate International Exposition, who shall be appointed by the President, and who shall receive compensation at the rate of $10,000 per annum, and one Assistant Commissioner for said Golden Gate International Exposition, who shall be appointed by the Commissioner with the advice and approval of the Commission herein designated and shall receive compensation not to exceed $7,500 per annum. The salary and expenses of the Commissioner, the Assistant Commissioner, and such staff as the Commission may require, shall be paid out of the funds authorized to be appropriated by this joint resolution, for such period prior to the opening of the Golden Gate International Exposition as the Commission may determine, for the duration of the Golden Gate International Exposition, and for not more than 6 months after the official closing thereof.

SEC. 3. The Commission shall prescribe the duties of the United States Commissioner and shall delegate such powers and functions to him as it shall deem advisable, in order that there may be exhibited at the Golden Gate International Exposition by the Government of the United States, its executive departments, independent offices, and establishments, such articles and materials and documents and papers as may relate to the growth and development of civilization on the American continents from the first arrival of man to the present day, and such as illustrate the function and administrative faculty of the Government in the advancement of industry, science, invention, agriculture, the arts, and peace, and demonstrating the historic growth and nature of American institutions, particularly as regards their adaptation to the needs of the people.

SEC. 4. In carrying out the purposes of this joint resolution, the Commission is authorized—

(a) To appoint, without regard to the civil service laws and regulations and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, such clerks, stenographers, and other assistants, and to engage by contract or otherwise such other services as may be necessary in connection with the performance of the functions of the Commission, including the preparation of exhibits plans.

(b) To erect such building or buildings, or other structures, and to provide for the landscaping of the site or sites thereof: Provided, That in the construction of buildings and exhibits requiring skilled and unskilled labor, the prevailing rate of wages, as provided in the act of March 3, 1931 (46 Stat. 1494), shall be paid; to rent such space in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, without regard to section 322 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412), as the Commission may deem necessary; and to provide for the decoration and maintenance of buildings, structures, sites, and grounds during the period deemed necessary by the Commission.

(c) To contract with the San Francisco Bay Exposition, Inc., without advertising, for the designing and erection of such building or buildings, structure or structures, the rental of such space, and for such other services as the Commission shall deem advisable to be contracted for in that manner.

(d) To use funds appropriated under authority of the joint resolution to pay salaries of employees of other Government agencies detailed or loaned for duty with the Commission at rates not in excess of the rates received in the agency from which detailed or loaned; to purchase books of reference, newspapers, and periodicals, payment for which, and for telephone service, rents, and similar items, may be made in advance; to purchase, hire, maintain, repair, and operate passenger-carrying vehicles for use of the Commissioner and Assistant Commissioner without regard to the statutory restrictions upon the price for new cars or the amounts which may be expended for maintenance, repair, and operation; to have printing and binding done elsewhere than at the Government Printing Office in the discretion of the Commission; to entertain distinguished guests; to provide for reimbursement of expenses of travel by airplane when deemed necessary notwithstanding the cost may exceed the cost by rail; to provide for insurance on privately owned exhibits loaned to the Commission; to purchase ice and drinking water for use in buildings and offices; to purchase uniforms for guards and attendants; and to insure such other expenses as may be deemed necessary to the fulfillment of the purposes of this joint resolution.

(e) To allot funds appropriated for the purposes of this resolution to any executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government with the consent of the head thereof, for direct expenditure in executing the duties or functions delegated by the Commission.

(f) To delegate any of its powers and authority, in its discretion, and any power or authority vested in the Commissioner by this resolution or delegated to him may be delegated or subdelegated by him to the Assistant Commissioner or to any other person or persons in the employ of the Commission or detailed to it.

SEC. 5. The heads of the various executive departments and independent offices and establishments of the Government are authorized to cooperate with said Commissioner in the procurement, installation, and display of exhibits, and to lend to the Golden Gate International Exposition, with the knowledge and consent of said Commissioner, such articles, specimens, and exhibits as said Commissioner shall deem to be in the interest of the United States and in keeping with the purposes of such world's fair and celebration, to be placed with the science or other exhibits to be shown under the auspices of such Golden Gate International Exposition, to appoint without regard to civil-service laws and regulations and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, such draftsmen and other assistants as may be necessary, to contract for labor or other services as shall be deemed necessary, and to designate officials or employees of their departments or independent offices and establishments to assist said Commissioner. At the close of the world's fair, or when the connection of the Government of the United States therewith ceases, said Commissioner shall cause all such property to be returned to the respective departments and independent offices and establishments concerned, and any expenses incident to the restoration, modification, and revision of such property to a condition which will permit its use at subsequent expositions and fairs, and for the continued employment of personnel necessary to close out the fiscal and other records and prepare the required reports of the participating organizations, may be paid from the appropriation authorized herein; and if the return of such property is not feasible, he may, with the consent of the Commission and the departments or independent offices and establishments concerned, make such disposition thereof as he may deem advisable and account therefor.

SEC. 6. The sum of $1,500,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of this joint resolution, and shall remain available until expended; except that, upon the termination of the Commission, any unexpended or unobligated balances shall be covered back into the Treasury of the United States. And, subject to the provisions of this joint resolution, the Commission is authorized to erect such building or buildings, or other structures, for its own use, and such other buildings and structures as will further the trade and good will between the United States and the other nations of the world, and to provide for the landscaping of the site or sites thereof; to rent such space without regard to the provisions of section 322 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412), as the Commission may deem adequate to carry out effectively the provisions of this joint resolution; to provide for the decorations of such buildings or structures, and for the proper maintenance of such buildings or structures, sites, and grounds during the period deemed necessary by the Commission: Provided, That the facilities of the Public Buildings Branch, Procurement Division, Treasury Department, shall be utilized in the preparation of plans, drawings, designs, specifications, and estimates, the execution of contracts, and the supervision of construction in connection with any buildings or structures erected for Federal exhibits and for other purposes: Provided further, That funds designated for the foregoing construction purposes shall be available for transfer to and expenditure by the Procurement Division, Treasury Department, to the extent and at such times as may be deemed necessary by the Director of Procurement to permit him to carry out the work herein designated. The Commission may contract with the San Francisco Bay Exposition, Inc., sponsors of the Golden Gate International Exposition, for improvement or improvements, the rental of such space and for other services as shall be deemed necessary and proper. The appropriation authorized by this joint resolution shall be available for the operation of the building or buildings, structure or structures, improvement or improvements, including light, heat, water, gas, maid, janitor, and other required services; for the rental of space in the District of Columbia or elsewhere; for the selection, purchase, preparation, assembling, transportation, installation, arrangement, repair, safekeeping, exhibition, demonstration, and return of such articles and materials as the Commission may decide shall be included in such Government exhibits and in the exhibits of the Golden Gate International Exposition; for the purchase of uniforms, for the compensation of said Commissioner, Assistant Commissioner, and other officers and employees of the Commission in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, for the payment of salaries of officers and employees of the Government employed by or detailed for duty with the Commission, for actual traveling expenses, including travel by air, water, and automobile, and for per diem in lieu of actual subsistence at not to exceed $5 per day: Provided, That no Government official or employee detailed for duty with the Commission shall receive a salary in excess of the rate which he has been receiving in the department or branch where regularly employed, plus such reasonable allowance to officers and enlisted men of the armed forces for additional uniforms and equipment required by participation in the Golden Gate International Exposition, including alteration, laundering, cleaning, and pressing thereof, as deemed proper by the Commissioner; for telephone service, purchase or rental of furniture and equipment, stationery and supplies, typewriting, adding, duplicating, and computing machines, their accessories and repairs, books of reference and periodicals, uniforms, maps, reports, documents, plans, specifications, manuscripts, newspapers, and all other appropriate publications, and ice and electric refrigeration and drinking water for office purposes: Provided further, That payment for telephone service, rents, subscriptions to newspapers and periodicals, and other similar purposes, may be made in advance; for the purchase and hire of passenger-carrying automobiles, their maintenance, repair, and operation, for the official use of said Commissioner and Assistant Commissioner in the District of Columbia or elsewhere as required; for printing and binding; for entertainment of distinguished visitors; and for all other expenses as may be deemed necessary by the Commission to fulfill properly the purposes of this joint resolution. All purchases, expenditures, and disbursements of any moneys made available by authority of this joint resolution shall be made under the direction of the Commission: Provided further, That the Commission, without release of responsibility, as hereinbefore stipulated, may delegate these powers and functions: Provided further, That the Commission or its delegated representatives may allot funds appropriated herein to any executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government with the consent of the heads thereof, for direct expenditure by such executive department, independent office, or establishment, for the purpose of defraying any proper expenditure which may be incurred by such executive department, independent office, or establishment in executing the duties and functions delegated by the Commission. All accounts and vouchers covering expenditures shall be approved by said Commissioner or by such assistants as the Commission may designate, except for such allotments as may be made to the various executive departments, independent offices, and establishments for direct expenditure; but these provisions shall not be construed to waive the submission of accounts and vouchers to the General Accounting Office for audit, and permit any obligations to be incurred in excess of the amount authorized to be appropriated herein: And provided further, That in the construction of buildings and exhibits requiring skilled and unskilled labor, the prevailing rate of wages, as provided in the act of March 3, 1931, as amended, shall be paid. Subject to the provisions of this joint resolution, the Commission is authorized to make any expenditures or allotments deemed necessary by it to fulfill properly the purposes of this joint resolution.

SEC. 7. The Commissioner, with the approval of the Commission, may receive contributions from any source to aid in carrying out the purposes of this joint resolution, but such contributions shall be expended and accounted for in the same manner as the funds authorized to be appropriated by this joint resolution. The Commissioner is also authorized to receive contributions of material, or to borrow material or exhibits, and to accept the services of any skilled and unskilled labor that may be available through State or Federal relief organizations, to aid in carrying out the general purposes of this joint resolution. At the close of the world's fair and celebration or when the connection of the Government of the United States therewith ceases, the Commissioner shall dispose of any such portion of the material contributed as may be unused, and return such borrowed property; and, under the direction of the Commission, dispose of any buildings or structures which may have been constructed and account therefor: Provided, That all disposition of materials, property, buildings, etc., shall be at public sale to the highest bidder, and the proceeds thereof shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States: Provided further, That the Commission may, if it deems it desirable and in the public interest, transfer without consideration the title to the Federal Exhibits Building erected or constructed to the city of San Francisco.

The Commissioner, with the approval of the Commission and in cooperation with the Secretary of the Interior, shall make provision for participation in the exposition by the Indian citizens of the United States. For this purpose the Commission is authorized to set aside from the appropriation herein authorized so much as may be necessary for the erection of buildings, the employment of supervisory and other personnel without regard to the civil-service laws and regulations and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and for all other expenses incident thereto, including the classes authorized under section 4 of this joint resolution.

SEC. 8. It shall be the duty of the Commission to transmit to Congress, within 6 months after the close of the world's fair, a detailed statement of all expenditures and such other reports as may be deemed proper, which reports shall be prepared and arranged with a view to concise statement and convenient reference.

Upon the transmission of such report to Congress the Commission established by and all appointments made under the authority of this joint resolution shall terminate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That there is hereby established a Commission, to be known as the United States Golden Gate International Exposition Commission and to be composed of the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of Labor, three Members of the House to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives and three Members of the Senate to be appointed by the President of the Senate; which Commission shall serve without additional compensation and shall represent the United States in connection with the holding of a world's fair and celebration in the city of San Francisco during the year 1939.

"SEC. 2. There shall be a United States Commissioner for the Golden Gate International Exposition, who shall be appointed by the President, and who shall receive compensation at the rate of $10,000 per annum, and one Assistant Commissioner for said Golden Gate International Exposition, who shall be appointed by the Commissioner with the advice and approval of the Commission herein designated and shall receive compensation not to exceed $7,500 per annum. The salary and expenses of the Commissioner, the Assistant Commissioner, and such staff as the Commission may require, shall be paid out of the funds authorized to be appropriated by this joint resolution, for such period prior to the opening of the Golden Gate International Exposition as the Commission may determine, for the duration of the Golden Gate International Exposition, and for not more than 6 months after the official closing thereof.

"SEC. 3. The Commission shall prescribe the duties of the United States Commissioner and shall delegate such powers and functions to him as it shall deem advisable, in order that there may be exhibited at the Golden Gate International Exposition by the Government of the United States, its executive departments, independent offices, and establishments, such articles and materials and documents and papers as may relate to the growth and development of civilization on the American continents and such as illustrate the function and administrative faculty of the Government in the advancement of industry, science, invention, agriculture, the arts, and peace, and demonstrating the historic growth and nature of American institutions, particularly as regards their adaptation to the needs of the people.

"SEC. 4. In carrying out the purposes of this joint resolution, the Commission is authorized—

"(a) To appoint, without regard to the civil-service laws and regulations and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, such clerks, stenographers, and other assistants, and to engage by contract or otherwise such other services as may be necessary in connection with the performance of the functions of the Commission, including the preparation of exhibits plans: Provided, however, That for similar services, the pay shall not be in excess of that provided by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

"(b) To erect, on land owned by the city and county of San Francisco, such building or buildings, or other structures, and to provide for the landscaping of the site or sites thereof: Provided, That in the construction of buildings and exhibits requiring skilled and unskilled labor, the prevailing rate of wages, as provided in the act of March 3, 1931 (46 Stat. 1494), shall be paid; to rent such space in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, without regard to section 322 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412), as the Commission may deem necessary; and to provide for the decoration and maintenance of buildings, structures, sites, and grounds during the period deemed necessary by the Commission.

"(c) To use funds appropriated under authority of the joint resolution to pay salaries of employees of other Government agencies detailed or loaned for duty with the Commission at rates not in excess of the rates received in the agency from which detailed or loaned; to purchase books of reference, newspapers, and periodicals, payment for which, and for telephone service, rents, and similar items, may be made in advance; to purchase, hire, maintain, repair, and operate passenger-carrying vehicles for use of the Commissioner and Assistant Commissioner without regard to the statutory restrictions upon the price for new cars or the amounts which may be expended for maintenance, repair, and operation; to have printing and binding done elsewhere than at the Government Printing Office in the discretion of the Commission; to entertain distinguished guests; to provide for reimbursement of expenses of travel by airplane when deemed necessary notwithstanding the cost may exceed the cost by rail; to provide for insurance on privately owned exhibits loaned to the Commission; to purchase ice and drinking water for use in buildings and offices; to purchase uniforms for guards and attendants; and to incur such other expenses as may be deemed necessary to the fulfillment of the purposes of this joint resolution.

"(d) To allot funds appropriated for the purposes of this resolution to any executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government with the consent of the head thereof, for direct expenditure in executing the duties or functions delegated by the Commission.

"(e) To delegate any of its powers and authority, in its discretion, and any power or authority vested in the Commissioner by this resolution or delegated to him may be delegated or subdelegated by him to the Assistant Commissioner or to any other person or persons in the employ of the Commission or detailed to it.

"SEC. 5. The heads of the various executive departments and independent offices and establishments of the Government are authorized to cooperate with said Commissioner in the procurement, installation, and display of exhibits, and to lend to the San Francisco Bay Exposition, Inc., sponsors of the Golden Gate International Exposition, with the knowledge and consent of said Commissioner, such articles, specimens, and exhibits as said Commissioner shall deem to be in the interest of the United States and in keeping with the purposes of such world's fair and celebration, to be placed with the science or other exhibits to be shown under the auspices of such Golden Gate International Exposition, to appoint without regard to civil-service laws and regulations and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, such draftsmen and other assistants as may be necessary, to contract for labor or other services as shall be deemed necessary, and to designate officials or employees of their departments or independent offices and establishments to assist said Commissioner. At the close of the world's fair, or when the connection of the Government of the United States therewith ceases, said Commissioner shall cause all such property to be returned to the respective departments and independent offices and establishments concerned, and any expenses incident to the restoration, modification, and revision of such property to a condition which will permit its use at subsequent expositions and fairs, and for the continued employment of personnel necessary to close out the fiscal and other records and prepare the required reports of the participating organizations, may be paid from the appropriation authorized herein; and if the return of such property is not feasible, he may, with the consent of the Commission and the departments or independent offices and establishments concerned, make such disposition thereof as he may deem advisable and account therefor.

"SEC. 6. The sum of $1,500,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of this joint resolution, and shall remain available until expended; except that, upon the termination of the Commission, any unexpended or unobligated balances shall be covered back into the Treasury of the United States; and, subject to the provisions of this joint resolution, the Commission is authorized to erect, on land owned by the city and county of San Francisco, such building or buildings, or other structures, for its own use, and such other buildings and structures as will further the trade and good will between the United States and the other nations of the world, and to provide for the landscaping of the site or sites thereof; to rent such space without regard to the provisions of section 322 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412), as the Commission may deem adequate to carry out effectively the provisions of this joint resolution; to provide for the decorations of such buildings or structures, and for the proper maintenance of such buildings or structures, sites, and grounds during the period deemed necessary by the Commission: Provided, That the facilities of the Public Buildings Branch, Procurement Division, Treasury Department, may be utilized in the preparation of plans, drawings, designs, specifications, and estimates, the execution of contracts, and the supervision of construction in connection with any buildings or structures erected for Federal exhibits and for other purposes: Provided further, That funds designated for the foregoing construction purposes may be available for transfer to and expenditure by the Procurement Division, Treasury Department, to the extent and at such times as may be deemed necessary by the Director of Procurement to permit him to carry out such work as the Commission shall deem advisable to be contracted for in that manner. The appropriation authorized by this joint resolution shall be available for the operation of the building or buildings, structure or structures, improvement or improvements, including light, heat, water, gas, maid, janitor, and other required services; for the rental of space in the District of Columbia or elsewhere; for the selection, purchase, preparation, assembling, transportation, installation, arrangement, repair, safekeeping, exhibition, demonstration, and return of such articles and materials as the Commission may decide shall be included in such Government exhibits and in the exhibits of the Golden Gate International Exposition; for the purchase of uniforms, for the compensation of said Commissioner, Assistant Commissioner, and other officers and employees of the Commission in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, for the payment of salaries of officers and employees of the Government employed by or detailed for duty with the Commission, for actual traveling expenses, including travel by air, water, and automobile, and for per diem in lieu of actual subsistence at not to exceed $5 per day: Provided further, That no Government official or employee detailed for duty with the Commission shall receive a salary in excess of the rate which he has been receiving in the department or branch where regularly employed, plus such reasonable allowance to officers and enlisted men of the armed forces for additional uniforms and equipment required by participation in the Golden Gate International Exposition, including alterations, laundering, cleaning, and pressing thereof, as deemed proper by the Commissioner; for telephone service, purchase or rental of furniture and equipment, stationery, and supplies, typewriting, adding, duplicating, and computing machines, their accessories and repairs, books of reference and periodicals, uniforms, maps, reports, documents, plans, specifications, manuscripts, newspapers, and all other appropriate publications, and ice and electric refrigeration and drinking water for office purposes: Provided further, That payment for telephone service, rents, subscriptions to newspapers and periodicals, and other similar purposes, may be made in advance; for the purchase and hire of passenger-carrying automobiles, their maintenance, repair, and operation, for the official use of said Commisisoner and Assistant Commissioner in the District of Columbia or elsewhere as required; for printing and binding; for entertainment of distinguished visitors; and for all other expenses as may be deemed necessary by the Commission to fulfill properly the purposes of this joint resolution. All purchases, expenditures, and disbursements of any moneys made available by authority of this joint resolution shall be made under the direction of the Commission: Provided further, That the Commission, without release of responsibility, as hereinbefore stipulated, may delegate these powers and functions: Provided further, That the Commission or its delegated representatives may allot funds appropriated herein to any executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government with the consent of the heads thereof, for direct expenditure by such executive department, independent office, or establishment, for the purposes of defraying any proper expenditure which may be incurred by such executive department, independent office, or establishment in executing the duties and functions delegated by the Commission. All accounts and vouchers covering expenditures shall be approved by said Commissioner or by such assistants as the Commission may designate, except for such allotments as may be made to the various executive departments, independent offices, and establishments for direct expenditure; but these provisions shall not be construed to waive the submission of accounts and vouchers to the General Accounting Office for audit, and permit any obligations to be incurred in excess of the amount authorized to be appropriated herein: And provided further, That in the construction of buildings and exhibits requiring skilled and unskilled labor, the prevailing rate of wages, as provided in the act of March 3, 1931, as amended, shall be paid. Subject to the provisions of this joint resolution, the Commission is authorized to make any expenditures or allotments deemed necessary by it to fulfill properly the purposes of this joint resolution.

"SEC. 7. The Commissioner, with the approval of the Commission, may receive contributions from any source to aid in carrying out the purposes of this joint resolution, but such contributions shall be expended and accounted for in the same manner as the funds authorized to be appropriated by this joint resolution. The Commissioner is also authorized to receive contributions of material, or to borrow material or exhibits, and to accept the services of any skilled and unskilled labor that may be available through State or Federal relief organizations, to aid in carrying out the general purposes of this joint resolution. At the close of the world's fair and celebration or when the connection of the Government of the United States therewith ceases, the Commissioner shall dispose of any such portion of the material contributed as may be unused, and return such borrowed property; and, under the direction of the Commission, dispose of any buildings or structures which may have been constructed and account therefor: Provided, That all disposition of materials, property, buildings, etc., shall be at public sale to the highest bidder, and the proceeds thereof shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States: Provided further, That the Commission may, if it deems it desirable and in the public interest, transfer, with or without consideration, the title to the Federal exhibits building or buildings erected or constructed to the city and county of San Francisco.

"The Commissioner, with the approval of the Commission and in cooperation with the Secretary of the Interior, may make provision for participation in the exposition by the Indian citizens of the United States. For this purpose the Commission may allot funds appropriated under authority of this joint resolution as may be necessary for the erection of buildings, the employment of supervisory and other personnel without regard to the civil-service laws and regulations and to fix their salaries in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and for all other expenses incident thereto, as the Commission shall deem advisable to be contracted for in that manner.

"SEC. 8. It shall be the duty of the Commission to transmit to Congress, within 6 months after the close of the world's fair, a detailed statement of all expenditures, and such other reports as may be deemed proper, which reports shall be prepared and arranged with a view to concise statement and convenient reference. Upon the transmission of such report to Congress the Commission established by and all appointments made under the authority of this joint resolution shall terminate."

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address I delivered in Springfield, Ill., last week on the conservation of the migratory waterfowl.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a brief table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by inserting a brief letter and a short article by Mr. J. F. Porter, president of the Tennessee Farm Bureau Federation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, may I ask the majority leader if he can give any information as to the probable program for next week? Some Members would like very much to know.

Mr. RAYBURN. On Tuesday of next week the Private Calendar will be called, which will take about an hour. After that there is a possibility there may come up the resolution from the Committee on Rules with respect to some matters in which the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] is interested. If this is not called up, then the measure regarding the so-called section 213, known as the married woman's clause, will come up. Also, there are rules from the Committee on Rules making in order the consideration of two bills reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs. This is about as far as I know the program for next week.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The understanding is that the conference report on the Interior Department appropriation bill will not come up until next week, anyway?

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. I may say for the benefit of the House that the Senate has already passed a resolution which continues the appropriations and lets the departments carry on legally. Therefore there seems to be no reason whatsoever why any conference reports on appropriation bills should be called up until next week.

Mr. RAYBURN. Certainly the conference report on the Interior Department appropriation bill will not come up this week.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Yes; I yield.

Mr. FISH. May I ask the majority leader if he can inform the House what he has in mind for the balance of the week?

Mr. RAYBURN. This week?

Mr. FISH. No; next week. Some of us are going home for the Fourth, and might like to go on a little fishing trip and possibly stay away a few days. Can the gentleman inform the House what he has in mind for the balance of next week after Tuesday?

Mr. RAYBURN. I thought I had just stated that.

Mr. FISH. No; the gentleman gave us the program for Tuesday.

Mr. RAYBURN. The statement I made a moment ago was that on Tuesday, after the call of the Private Calendar, a rule will be called up making in order the resolution introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] with reference to the continuance of the work of the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission. If this rule is not called up, then the so-called married woman's clause measure will be considered that day, otherwise it will go over until Thursday. If the consideration of that measure takes the day, then the two bills from the Committee on Naval Affairs will come up Thursday. Calendar Wednesday will not be set aside.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman does not have in mind the consideration of any essential or important bills for next week?

Mr. RAYBURN. I may say the majority Members would like to be recorded on the so-called married woman's clause measure.

Mr. FISH. That is a matter of opinion, is it not? Some may not want to be recorded.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is the program for next week. I intend to ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns tomorrow it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns tomorrow, Friday, it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the majority leader a question. As I understand it, there is a bill to be brought in here sometime before we take up the Interior Department appropriation bill for the approval of what they call the Big Thompson project in Colorado. Will that measure come up this week?

Mr. RAYBURN. It will not.

Mr. RICH. I do not object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the majority leader if it will be the policy to bring up the Interior Department bill before Wednesday next?

Mr. RAYBURN. I think not; and I will state for the RECORD that the Interior Department bill will not come up this week and will not come up on Tuesday of next week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

RIVERS AND HARBORS BILL

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 241.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 7051, a bill authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this resolution is to make in order the consideration of the bill H. R. 7051, the river and harbor bill.

This is the first river and harbor bill presented to the House in the past 2 years, and includes 119 projects, located in 17 States and Territories, and two of our island possessions have one each.

The amount involved in the 119 projects is $31,600,000, and the 119 projects included are practically all projects already adopted by the Congress on which necessary expenditures must be made due to conditions arising during the course of the past 2 years.

This is one of the smallest rivers and harbors authorization bills that has ever been presented to the Congress, and the work is very necessary and essential for the benefit of commerce and transportation, because, as you are aware, navigation very largely enters into all projects included in rivers and harbors activities.

However, the measure involves certain improvements that are to be made in our Pacific islands possessions which are believed to be very highly necessary in order to carry on the policy we have in shaping those islands for any eventuality that may occur.

No part of this authorization is expected to be appropriated this year. This is a future appropriation matter, containing only the authorization, and the improvements provided for will cover possibly a period of from 4 to 6 years.

I do not believe it is necessary to make any further statement. The rule is an open one, providing for 2 hours of general debate, when the bill will be read and be open to any amendment that is germane to the measure.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I have no demands for time, and I am perfectly willing to have the rule adopted at this time.

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DRIVER: After the word "purposes", in line 6, insert "and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived."

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, this is merely to insert in the rule a matter that was overlooked.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution, as amended.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7051) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7051, the rivers and harbors authorization bill, with Mr. LUCAS in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, the bill before us authorizes the improvement of 119 waterway projects involving a total expenditure for completion of $31,720,300. The projects are fully described in the report, hence a further detailed description at this time is deemed unnecessary. The improvements recommended in the bill are deemed to be urgent and necessary in the systematic movement of our great and ever-growing commerce. The total expenditure involved is small as compared with that of former river and harbor bills. The last bill of the kind to pass Congress, and which was approved by the President on August 30, 1935, authorized 246 projects, having an aggregate cost to complete of over $660,000,000.

In the early history of our country the waterways constituted the only practical means of transportation. Great networks of towpath canals were constructed, and every river capable of floating a boat was brought into use in the transportation of freight and passengers. The canals were constructed, dredged, and maintained, at the cost of the respective States or other local interests, and but little if any improvement was given to the rivers and harbors, and none of which was by the Federal Government.

From the beginning of our Government Congress, while not providing the means of transportation, yet recognized the necessity of safeguarding our commerce, as well as of human life. Even back to the first Congress provision was made for the establishment of buoys, lights, and other danger signals. The viewpoint seemed to have been that Congress had constitutional authority to incur the cost of warning the mariner of a dangerous channel in order that he might provide for his own safety, but that it was without constitutional authority to incur the cost of removing those dangers.

In 1808, Albert Gallatin, Secretary of the Treasury, submitted a report recommending expenditures by the Federal Government for internal improvements, including both roads and waterways. Mr. Jefferson put this recommendation into partial effect in the establishment of the national turnpike, but his successor, Mr. Madison, took a different view of the powers granted by the Constitution, and the program was permitted to "die aborning."

In 1817, Congress passed a bill for internal improvements which included waterways. The last official act of Mr. Madison before retiring from the presidency on March 3, 1817, was to veto this bill. His veto message was as follows:

MARCH 3, 1817.

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

Having considered the bill this day presented to me entitled "An act to set apart and pledge certain funds for internal improvement", and which sets apart and pledges funds "for constructing roads and canals, and improving the navigation of water courses, in order to facilitate, promote, and give security to internal commerce among the several States, and to render more easy and less expensive the means and provisions for the common defense", I am constrained by the insuperable difficulty I feel in reconciling the bill with the Constitution of the United States to return it with that objection to the House of Representatives, in which it originated.

The legislative powers vested in Congress are specified and enumerated in the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution, and it does not appear that the power proposed to be exercised by the bill is among the enumerated powers, or that it falls by any just interpretation within the power to make laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution those or other powers vested by the Constitution in the Government of the United States.

"The power to regulate commerce among the several States" cannot include a power to construct roads and canals, and to improve the navigation of water courses in order to facilitate, promote, and secure such a commerce without a latitude of construction departing from the ordinary import of the terms strengthened by the known inconveniences which doubtless led to the grant of this remedial power to Congress."

Mr. Madison was known as the "Father of the Constitution", and was regarded as our foremost authority upon constitutional questions. While his veto message on this bill was more or less questioned and criticized, yet no serious attempts were made for the improvement of rivers and harbors by the Federal Government until after the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Gibbons against Ogden, rendered on March 2, 1824. In May 1824, following that decision, Congress passed its first distinctive act for river and harbor improvement. It was a bill for the improvement of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers. This was about 35 years after the adoption of the Constitution.

In a speech before the National Rivers and Harbors Congress in 1936, I called attention to the decision of Chief Justice Marshall in the case of Gibbons against Ogden. With the possible exception of the Dred Scott decision, it perhaps attracted greater public interest than any other case ever coming before the Supreme Court, at least in the first century of our national existence. It completely reversed the attitude of the Government with respect to interstate commerce, and laid the foundation for the building of a great nation. It restored to Congress its constitutional right to regulate commerce among the States, and to provide the necessary facilities to that end.

Chief Justice Marshall has been severely criticized in recent years, yet I believe the record shows that he was probably the foremost New Dealer of his time. It is true he did not hesitate to nullify acts of Congress when considered in conflict with the Constitution. At the same time, he just as unhesitatingly upheld Congress in the exercise of its constitutional functions, even after that power had been denied by no less a person than the Father of the Constitution, then President of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. It is interesting to note that Daniel Webster was the principal counsel in that case, and made the main argument, and his view was adopted by the Supreme Court of the United States. I recently had occasion to read his argument which I found very informative.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I refer to that later.

If the Madison interpretation of the Constitution had prevailed to the present time our great inland water-borne commerce would not have been within the realm of possibilities. Our foreign and coastwise trade could never have developed to its present proportions on account of the inadequacy of port and harbor facilities. The Great Lakes could never have been placed in condition for the systemmatic development of our great steel industry. Our Navy could not have assumed its present proportions, as but few, if any, of our harbors would have been in condition suitable for its use. Practical flood protection would not have been possible. These illustrations could be extended almost indefinitely.

Prior to the decision in the case of Gibbons against Ogden interstate shipping had become involved in so many complications as to render it practically impossible. The Federal Government issued permits or licenses to steamboats engaged in interstate and coastwise trade, but this authority was disputed by many of the States, who claimed the exclusive right to regulate all commerce within their respective boundaries, whether it be State or interstate traffic.

New York prohibited boats to enter her navigable waters without a permit under the sanction of the Fulton and Livingston privilege granted. Neighboring States enacted retaliatory measures. Connecticut enacted a law prohibiting boats from entering the waters of that State if they held such licenses from New York. By the law of New Jersey, if any citizen of that State should be restrained under the New York law, the courts of New Jersey would be given jurisdiction on action for damage, with treble costs against the party seeking such restraint. This was termed an "act of retortion against the illegal and oppressive legislation of New York." Other States had enacted somewhat similar retaliatory measures. From this it will be seen that commerce between the States would be impossible unless regulated by the Federal Government as provided in the Constitution. Chief Justice Marshall, in sustaining the Constitution of the United States in this decision, made interstate commerce possible and practicable.

Robert Fulton, who developed the Clermont, the first steamboat to be successfully navigated, together with Robert R. Livingston, his wife's uncle, a man of great prominence, obtained from the State of New York the exclusive privilege of operating boats propelled by steam upon the navigable waters of that State. Under the act of the New York Legislature, no one could navigate a boat propelled by steam on any water in the State of New York without a permit from Fulton and Livingston. Ogden held such a permit, and under it was operating boats between New York and Elizabethtown, N. J.

Gibbons, under a permit from the Federal Government, was operating boats in competition with Ogden. He was enjoined by Ogden from navigating his boats across the State line into the State of New York. This injunction was affirmed by the Supreme Court of New York, Chancelor Kent rendering the decision. Gibbons carried the litigation to the Federal court upon the ground that the act of the New York Legislature, under which he was enjoined, was in conflict with that provision of the Constitution of the United States which gave Congress exclusive jurisdiction over commerce between the States. This plea was sustained by Chief Justice Marshall.

Gibbons against Ogden was one of the most noted cases ever coming before the Supreme Court, not only on account of the great issue involved but also on account of the great prominence of all the persons concerned. Gibbons was ex-mayor of Savannah, Ga., and also maintained residence in New Jersey. He was locally and nationally prominent. Ogden had been Governor of New Jersey and United States Senator from that State, and both Gibbons and Ogden had been prominent in promoting navigation. The attorneys employed in the case were both nationally and internationally known. Gibbons was represented by Daniel Webster, and by William Wirt, then Attorney General of the United States, and famed as the prosecutor of Aaron Burr. Ogden was represented by Pinckney, of Maryland, and Thomas J. Oakley, attorney general of New York. He was also represented by Thomas A. Emmet, the great Irish patriot.

Gibbons and Ogden had been partners at one time, but the partnership had ceased before the beginning of this litigation. During their copartnership they operated boats under Fulton and Livingston permits. Commodore Cornelius Vanderbilt was then in their employ, and there laid the foundation for amassing a colossal fortune. Water transportation was generally profitable in those days, though the charges were reasonable. Gibbons left an estate valued at more than $1,000,000, principally accumulated in that line of trade.

Our waterway improvements have now been carried on for more than a century under the able supervision of the Chief of Engineers of the War Department. During this time there has been expended $2,046,419,384.93, not including flood control. These figures include expenditures for both new work and maintenance to the present time. Of these expenditures, $720,602,125.25 were upon seacoast harbors and channels, $236,803,192.57 upon the Great Lakes, and $1,089,014,067.16 upon inland and other waterways.

The President has now inaugurated a new policy with respect to the navigable rivers of the United States. Under this plan, the country is to be divided into seven planning zones, each to include one or more watersheds. The purpose and policy of the bill is set forth in section 1, as follows:

It is the purpose and policy of this act to develop, integrate, and coordinate plans, projects, and activities for or incidental to the promotion of navigation, the control and prevention of floods, the safeguarding of navigable waters, and the reclamation of the public lands, in order to aid and protect commerce among the several States, to strengthen the national defense, to conserve the water, soil, mineral, and forest resources of the Nation, to stabilize employment and relieve unemployment, and otherwise to protect commerce among the States, provide for the national defense, and promote the general welfare of the United States.

Hearings have not yet been commenced on this bill, but it is awaiting reports from the various departments of the Government to which it has been referred. I express the hope and belief that a comprehensive system will be worked out that will eventually place the United States in the forefront of the nations of the world in carrying out the laudible purposes set forth in the proposed act.

In this connection, I wish to call attention to the part performed by a former Member of Congress and former member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee in promoting the purposes now developing into this comprehensive scheme. The River and Harbor Act of 1922 contained an authorization for a large sum for a comprehensive survey of the Tennessee River. I was in the hospital when that bill was under consideration in the House and took no part in its preparation. After its passage by the Senate, I was minority conferee and supported the provision for the survey for the Tennessee.

The results of that survey by the Corps of Engineers of the War Department gave promise of a broader scheme of river improvement than had ever been undertaken by our Government previous to that time. When the river and harbor bill of 1925 was under preparation, provision was made for the survey of a large number of rivers, to be selected by the Chief of Engineers and the Federal Power Commission acting jointly. More than 200 rivers were selected and embraced in Document No. 308. These surveys have been completed on 199 of those rivers at a cost of more than $10,000,000. Those surveys constitute the base of the comprehensive improvements now proposed to be carried out. The language in the River and Harbor bill of 1925, launching this movement, was as follows:

SEC. 3. The Secretary of War, through the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, and the Federal Power Commission are jointly hereby authorized and directed to prepare and submit to Congress an estimate of the cost of making such examinations, surveys, or other investigations as, in their opinion, may be required of those navigable streams of the United States, and their tributaries, whereon power development appears feasible and practicable, with a view to the formulation of general plans for the most effective improvement of such streams for the purposes of navigation and the prosecution of such improvement in combination with the most efficient development of the potential water power, the control of floods, and the needs of irrigation: Provided, That no consideration of the Colorado River and its problems shall be included in the consideration or estimate provided herein.

The gentleman from Alabama, Mr. McDuffie, now United States District Judge at Mobile, but then a Member of Congress and of the River and Harbor Committee, was primarily responsible for the proposal for the general purpose surveys of the rivers embraced in Document 308. He was a zealous advocate of the proposal and carefully considered and suggested the language in the bill of 1925 making the authorization. The ultimate success which I hope for the present movement will be largely due to the vision of Judge McDuffie.

Mr. Chairman, Presidents of the United States have generally been sympathetic with the improvement of our waterways to facilitate the movement of commerce. In this respect, President Franklin D. Roosevelt has been outstanding. It is no exaggeration to say that under his administration, river and harbor improvements have been advanced to an extent never before seriously considered. He has made a thorough study of the entire waterway situation and is familiar with every detail of it. His plans embrace a broader and more comprehensive scheme than has heretofore been inaugurated. So far as our rivers are concerned, his chief purpose is to convert them into agencies seeking to avoid waste, prevent destruction, and to secure the performance of every possible service to mankind. [Applause.]

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to say in behalf of the other members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD] is one of the considerate Members of the House. One of the greatest pleasures that I have enjoyed as a Member of Congress has been to serve on this committee with him. I am sure that every Member of the House who has listened to his speech realizes the depth and breadth of his information on this question and I venture to say that no Member of Congress, no chairman of any committee, is better informed on the subject within its jurisdiction than our good friend and esteemed colleague, Judge Mansfield. [Applause.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am sure my friend anticipates my question, about Boston Harbor. Will the gentleman advise me whether or not there is a provision for Boston Harbor in the bill?

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is to be offered as a committee amendment. It is not in the bill as printed.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I rise simply to thank the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors for the kind words that he just said with respect to our mutual friend, and the friend of so many Members of this House, Hon. John McDuffie, of Alabama. I am sure I speak the conviction of every Member of the House when I say that the distinguished present chairman of this committee is entirely too modest in failing to claim any credit for the statesmanlike design of the pattern of the bills which have been brought into this House from that committee. Both he and John McDuffie have wrought well in this specialized field. They both deserve the appreciative thanks of the Congress and of the Nation.

We glory in such skillful and devoted leadership, and we thank the gentleman from Texas for the constructive and statesmanlike program which he and the members of his great committee are putting forward. [Applause.]

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, before allotting time, I want to supplement what has been said here relative to the good work of the chairman of the committee of which I have the privilege of being a member. In the 16 years I have been a member of that committee I have worked with many chairmen, but I believe the present chairman is as well informed, if not better than some of his predecessors. It has been a pleasure to work with him, on account of his earnest desire, if I may say so, to keep down appropriations for rivers and harbors beyond what they might otherwise be if it were not for his great interest and research into the merits of the bills that come before us. We take the recommendation very largely of the engineers, of course; but there is always a discussion in the committee as to the merits of individual bills, and I think it is due to his great effort that this bill is as small as it is, in view of the fact that there has not been a river and harbor bill in 2 years. I again compliment the chairman of the committee on his great work and upon the great speech which he has delivered. [Applause.]

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I want first to thank those gentlemen who have uttered such kindly words concerning myself on this occasion, and also to thank all of the members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and other Members of the House for the many courtesies they have shown me and for the great deal of aid and assistance they have given in the performance of our duties in the committee.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LUCAS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7051) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill and joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 7726. An act making appropriations for the first half of the month of July 1937, for certain operations of the Federal Government which remain unprovided for on July 1, 1937, through the failure of enactment of the supply bills customarily providing for such operations; and

H. J. Res. 433. Joint resolution making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, for the Civilian Conservation Corps, the railroad retirement account, and other activities, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 5394. An act to provide for the acquisition of certain lands for, and the addition thereof to, the Yosemite National Park, in the State of California, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 6958. An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to a bill of the following title:

S. 2156. An act to amend the act relating to the Omaha-Council Bluffs Missouri River Bridge Board of Trustees, approved June 10, 1930, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6692) entitled "An act making appropriations for the military establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes", agrees to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate nos. 24, 26 and 79; recedes from its amendments nos. 1, 47 to 77 inclusive, and 80; and also recedes from its amendment to the title of said bill.

RIVERS AND HARBORS BILL

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7051.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7051, with Mr. LUCAS in the chair.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MOSIER].

Mr. MOSIER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I rise for just a few moments to express the grateful appreciation of the people of the whole State of Ohio for the very excellent work that the gentleman from Texas, Judge MANSFIELD, and the Committee on Rivers and Harbors have done on this bill.

There are included in this bill five major Ohio improvements. Those ports which are improved form the gateway to the great steel empire which reaches from Minnesota down to Pitttsburgh. The gentleman from Texas, Judge MANSFIELD, has been very indulgent with all of us, and so have the members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. As a result of the action of the committee on this bill, the city of Cleveland will start on straightening the Cuyahoga River, a river that was named by the Indian name Cuyahoga, meaning "crooked" in the English language. That river carries about 11,000,000 tons of freight a year, mostly iron ore, and has been the subject of deep concern to that portion of the State for almost a hundred years. So I say to you, Judge MANSFIELD, we are deeply appreciative of your efforts and the efforts of the other members of this very fine committee. [Applause.]

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO].

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, as one of the minority members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of this House, I shall not let this opportunity pass without saying a brief word in praise of the splendid chairman of that committee. I doubt if there is any Member of this House who has more first-hand knowledge of the navigable waters of the United States or river and harbor improvement than the gentleman from Texas, our courteous, considerate, cultured, and able chairman, Judge MANSFIELD.

My responsibility to the people I represent and my State would not be fully discharged if I did not raise my voice in favor of the bill now before the House (H. R. 7051), the rivers and harbors bill for 1937.

Like a great network spreading its fiber over the waters of the world, the water-borne commerce of this Nation and of any nation is the only method and the only means by which can be accomplished the exchange of goods between the nations of the world; and so important has it become to the United States that during the year 1935 the commerce of this Nation rose to the stupendous sum of 453,000,000 tons.

To the Members who come from the Northwest, representing districts in States that border on the Great Lakes, it ought to be, and I am sure is, of some interest to you to know that of that great amount of commerce, between one-quarter and one-third originates and moves on the breast of the fresh water seas, the Great Lakes.

The projects in this bill are many. While it has been stated by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DRIVER] that it includes 119 projects, by amendment the number is about 125; and, in addition to that, the bill also includes about 125 surveys, so that 250 different items are included in the rivers and harbors bill, the first bill in 2 years to be presented to the Congress of the United States by the Rivers and Harbors Committee. Therefore the bill represents the work of 2 years on the part of your committee.

I call the attention of the House to the further fact that while the bill of 1935 carried $660,000,000 in authorized projects this bill carries less than $34,000,000, or about 5 percent of the amount in the bill 2 years ago. It is the smallest sum included in a river and harbor bill since 1920. There is a reason for that, and that is that a great many of the projects on rivers and harbors have been paid for or had funds allotted to them, not only by specific appropriation but also by emergency-relief funds.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The bill at that time was a 5-year accumulation and this is a 2-year accumulation.

Mr. DONDERO. Yes. The Chairman is entirely correct about that. The bill of 1935 carried 5 years' work. This bill carries but 2 years' work.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield.

Mr. DOWELL. Is it contemplated that any other money will be used in addition to the amount in this bill on these projects?

Mr. DONDERO. I may inform the gentleman, of course, that this is not an appropriation bill.

Mr. DOWELL. I understand that.

Mr. DONDERO. This is an authorization bill, and the amount of money that will be required to carry on these projects will have to be appropriated by the proper committee of the Congress.

Mr. DOWELL. But will any other moneys be used aside from the moneys appropriated in these authorizations?

Mr. DONDERO. I am not able to answer that question. Perhaps the chairman of the committee may be more fully informed on that subject.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I will say that I do not know of any funds outside of the regular appropriations through Congress. Formerly we had Public Works Administration funds.

Mr. ENGEL. I understood that the $34,000,000 or whatever the amount may be, was the cost of these projects.

Mr. DONDERO. That is the estimated cost of the projects in the bill. That money, however, will have to be spread over a number of years in order to complete the work. I understand that no part of it will be appropriated this year.

Mr. ENGEL. And that appropriation may be covered either in the rivers and harbors appropriation bill, or in the nonmilitary activities bill of the War Department, or it may come from relief funds?

Mr. DONDERO. From one of those sources.

Mr. ENGEL. But the total cost of the authorized projects is $34,000,000.

Mr. DONDERO. Approximately that.

The bill also carries an item for an airplane base in the Pacific Islands which will serve not only our commercial requirements but the needs for trans-Pacific mail as well.

Since the beginning of the Government, it has been shown that water-borne commerce is the cheapest in the world; and I trust that the time is not far distant when the wisdom of this Nation and that of our friendly neighbor across the border, Canada, will conclude a treaty which will make it possible for the unobstructed passage of water-borne commerce on the greatest fresh-water seas on earth, the Great Lakes, connecting them with the oceans of the world, by completing the St. Lawrence seaway. Whatever we do to improve the navigation and commerce of the country makes it just that much easier to distribute the products of farm and factory to the consuming public, the people who need them. When we make it easier to transport such products we also make it possible to provide such products at lower cost.

The bill now under consideration comes to us with the unanimous approval of every member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee. I desire to point out to the Members who come from the Great Lakes States particularly that in this bill are 19 projects authorized, the estimated cost being about $3,500,000. Although the Great Lakes furnish between one-quarter and one-third of the water-borne commerce of the United States, nevertheless in this bill we receive but one-tenth of the amount of work provided. I desire to point out, however, that sectionalism, partisanship, and politics have no place in a rivers and harbors bill. It is a subject that affects the general welfare of the Nation as a whole and not any particular section of the country. The Members of the House representing the most inland States are interested in this bill for the reason that the products of their States and their districts may have to find their way to the markets of the world and to the ports of the country not only by rail transportation but also by water transportation.

The conclusions as to the merit of the projects included in the bill are not reached without careful consideration. Every item set forth within its pages has been shown to be meritorious and worth while, as well as economically sound. Not only has every project satisfied the members of the committee, but it has also borne the searchlight of the Board of Army Engineers. I doubt if this Government has any other arm or branch in its service which serves better or more efficiently than the Board of Army Engineers serves this Nation in the projects which it recommends to the Rivers and Harbors Committee for the consideration of Congress. [Applause.]

The amount involved is spread over a period of years; and, as I said before, is small. It represents a moderate sum in comparison with the importance of the work involved and the good it will do. There is not a Member of the House who will say that he is not interested, for the reasons I have already stated.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. The question of national defense is interwoven with the commerce of the country; it is a part of this bill; and I trust that the House will give its careful attention to the items mentioned and described, that the bill will have the unanimous support of every Member of this body, and that it will pass when the committee reports it to the House. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN].

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, since my service in this House began I have had a growing conviction, a conviction that increases as the years go by, that the average Member of the House is too modest a personality. When it comes to matters involving his own district he is, of course, rather aggressive; but when it comes to asserting his share in the larger affairs of government he is too modest.

Today, in the chairman of this committee, we have an example of the finest flower of parliamentary development, a real technician in his field, a man who knows the national transportation picture thoroughly yet bears himself with extreme modesty. Speaking from the Republican side of the aisle, I want to say that it is a matter of regret to me that the distinguished occupant of the White House did not call into the executive service and consult more intimately men of the splendid technical equipment possessed by the chairman of this committee. The hope of popular government rests in the continuation of the Mansfield type in the public service. [Applause.] In this House, may I say in passing, there are a hundred technicians in their own fields developed through service on committee who are infinitely superior in the technique of their particular committee, in their loyalty to the public service, and in splendid intelligence to many of the tyros whom the distinguished President has placed in high office. I say to you of the majority that although the soothing effect of Jefferson Island is still in your blood, be mindful that you represent a coordinate branch of the Government, and that in technical equipment you are superior to the tyros, the honest Harolds, and the others of his ilk, by virtue of your long years of faithful service to the people. I say to you on the majority side of the aisle that the fault is not in your stars; it is in yourselves; you make yourselves the underlings.

Mr. Chairman, this bill represents one of the most useful contributions to national development, national growth, and to the comfort and security of the individuals throughout all of America. My friend, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] gave us some figures a moment ago. The items of tonnage referred to the tonnage carried over the waterways which have been improved by this and past Congresses run into the stupendous sum of 599,212,000 tons in 1935, the figures of the last year available. That includes the Pacific, the Atlantic, the intercoastal waterways, the inland waterways, and the Great Lakes system to which he referred. I repeat that that is one part of the public domain that is still serving the public free from the interference of commissions and free from the interference of bureaucracies.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] made some reference to the St. Lawrence seaway, and I desire to emphasize some of his remarks. The treaty, which would make possible this great project, is now in the hands of our Canadian friends, and it is said that they are favorable toward it. I am looking forward to the day when the treaty will be returned to the Senate and its favorable consideration.

The St. Lawrence seaway, of course, has two objects, namely, navigation and power. The construction of this seaway will admit ocean vessels from the Atlantic to the Great Lakes. Ratification of the treaty will add 3,500 miles to the coast line of the United States. It brings the Atlantic Ocean 1,000 miles inland.

It will lessen the economic handicaps of adverse transportation costs to the vast area in the interior of the American Continent. This area embraces more than 22 States. Within these States are more than 40,000,000 people who gain their livelihood from agricultural production and manufacturing. It cannot be denied that the people of this inland section have their progress retarded both from manufacturing and agricultural standpoints by handicaps in transportation.

The building of the Panama Canal left them marooned in the interior of the continent. It placed on them unfair handicaps in the matters of transportation. Never in the history of the Republic has a project been offered that was so fruitful of benefits to the whole country as the St. Lawrence seaway. Its consummation will be in the interests of a real nationalism.

In passing, may I also say to you that by virtue of the development of water transportation by the Rivers and Harbors Committee and in turn by this Congress, that gasoline is selling for an average price of 17 cents in America, whereas if this type of transportation had not been developed and perfected we would be paying an average of 39 cenets for every gallon of gasoline sold in America.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. The average price of plain gasoline without ethyl or special improving processes would be even 2 cents less than the gentleman's statement, and would be still lower if it were not for the gasoline taxes.

Mr. CULKIN. Yes.

Mr. PARSONS. And would be still much lower than that if it were not for the gasoline taxes.

Mr. CULKIN. I think that is undoubtedly true. That reasoning applies to every phase of farm produce, bulk commodities and raw materials, transported over our waterways.

Mr. KITCHENS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. In a moment. A discussion of the rivers and harbors bill would be incomplete if some reference were not made to those great public servants, the Army engineers. During my service on the Rivers and Harbors Committee I have been amazed at the work of the Army engineers. The efficiency and devotion of this group to the cause of America is in large part the basis of our national development. The future engineers were the intellectual leaders at West Point. Under the stress and discipline of this system they were the dominating mental and physical types, and as such were selected for the engineering service. Originally the engineers pioneered the West, built railroads, bridges, and performed other notable service in peacetime. It is, of course, a combatant branch of the United States Army in times of war.

The Nation has expended hundreds of millions of dollars for pioneering purposes, for the improvement of rivers and harbors, and for flood control. This work has been highly technical in character, requiring the exercise of the highest engineering skill. It has all been accomplished successfully, and the Nation, which hears little of this group of technicians, has reaped incalculable economic benefits from their work. It is interesting to note that while all the millions of dollars appropriated for these purposes, running beyond the billion mark, has been expended under the direction of the engineers, there has been but one case of peculation in 110 years of this service. The engineers are the real field marshals of the public domain. They combine extraordinary industry and power of research with the highest order of intellect. Through my 10 years on the Rivers and Harbors Committee, I have been brought in contact with this group of remarkable public servants and have been amazed by the breadth and clarity of their findings on all questions concerning waterways and economics.

I want to call the attention of the Members to the fact that for the past several years there has been a Nation-wide effort through various types of lobbying, perhaps none of it yet venal, to write off and destroy water transportation in fact and in the minds of the people. Every subsidized economist takes a fling at the efficiency of water transportation, upon which I say the very life, the very security, and the comfort of America depends. Today we have pending before one of the committees of the House a bill to place water transportation under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission. May I say in passing that we placed truck transportation under the Interstate Commerce Commission, and immediately truck transportation in most parts of the country doubled. The Interstate Commerce Commission now has jurisdiction where there are joint water-and-rail rates. May I call attention to what the Interstate Commerce Commission has done with water rates where they have had jurisdiction of that matter?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, a report of the Interstate Commerce Commission recommends, and based on what has gone before, it will be adopted, a raise of $1.85 per hundred pounds from New York to New Orleans. The existing rate is about 85 cents. The rate from New York to Buenos Aires, 5,757 miles, is 98 cents. Bear in mind that the distance between New York and New Orleans is approximately 1,800 miles. The freight rate per 100 pounds from New York to Cape Town, 6,786 miles, is 90 cents per hundred pounds, and so all along the scale. To Kobe, Japan, over 10,000 miles, the rate is 90 cents. Yet the Interstate Commerce Commission is prepared to write into law, and it will be law if you give them jurisdiction of this question, a provision making the rate to the American people, because they are the ones who pay the freight, from New York to Gulf ports $1.85 per hundred pounds.

I wonder sometimes just who the Interstate Commerce Commission thinks it serves. I am wondering if it thinks it has a definite direction from Congress to destroy water or other types of transportation by raising the rate up to the level of the rail rate, and whether or not it considers the fact it is the representative of the people.

I now yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. KITCHENS].

Mr. KITCHENS. In connection with the question of water transportation and reducing and holding down the price of gasoline, may I say you can ship 100 pounds of gasoline from Memphis, Tenn., to El Dorado, Ark., for 15 cents.

Mr. CULKIN. By water?

Mr. KITCHENS. By rail. This is because they ship the gasoline up the Mississippi River and load it at Memphis. But if you ship a hundred pounds of gasoline from El Dorado to Memphis it costs you 30 cents. That is the difference. In other words, the country west of the Mississippi River is discriminated against in that we have to pay twice as much in freight rates.

Mr. CULKIN. That is always the fact; and, as the gentleman suggests, where there are competing waterways the saving to the people is tremendous. May I say in that connection, in my own State it has been stated by excellent economists that the mere presence of the Erie and Oswego Canals, if not a pound of freight moved over them, results in a potential saving to the people of the State of $50,000,000 a year.

Mr. KITCHENS. The refining company in Eldorado, Ark., is located 36 to 40 miles from the Ouachita River. There is a picture in the paper this morning which shows that company has gone to the expense of thousands of dollars in order to build a loading place on the Ouachita River. They are going to haul the oil 40 miles by truck, then ship it down the Ouachita River. It will take 25 days for them to move that gasoline from El Dorado, Ark., to Memphis, yet it is cheaper for them to do that than to utilize the railroad from El Dorado to Memphis.

Mr. CULKIN. Except for the interior waterways and the inland waterways, which this bill develops, the people's economic life and their comfort would be strangled.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I may say to the gentleman that the States of Texas and Oklahoma produce approximately one-third of the cotton crop of the United States. Practically none of it is milled in those States. It has to go into either the export trade or to the New England or Eastern Atlantic coast mills. The rate by rail from Texas to Massachusetts mill towns is on an average $1.54 a hundred pounds, or $7.70 a bale. The ship rate from Galveston to those points is 35 cents a hundred pounds or less than $2 per bale. If the bill the gentleman refers to is enacted into law and these rates are equalized, the cotton farmers of Texas and Oklahoma especially will have to pay approximately $5 a bale additional in transportation charges on each bale of cotton.

Mr. CULKIN. Exactly; and that is the definite trend of the Commission's decisions.

Mr. SHORT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. In a minute.

The Interstate Commerce Commission should be led to understand by some procedure that it represents the public and that that was the conception of the Commission when it was established in 1887. But, thus far, as near as I can analyze the situation, it does not consider the public at all. It is railroad minded to the last degree, and if the Congress of the United States does not watch out, the country will find itself in the grip of a transportation monopoly which will be murderous not only to the farmers but to the city dwellers whose comfort will be seriously affected.

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. PIERCE. The gentleman referred to the trend of the Interstate Commerce Commission's decisions. Do those decisions not show clearly that the object it has in view is the fixing of such a rate structure as to pay dividends upon stocks and bonds which, if the water was squeezed out of them, would result in lower freight rates?

Mr. CULKIN. I agree with the gentleman, it is an unpleasant topic and reminiscent of an evil past. The country, under the theory of the Interstate Commerce Commission, is now paying for the past financial sins of the railroads, the Jay Goulds and Jim Fiskes and their ilk. Even in these days the so-called Wall Street banker, when he gets his teeth into a situation, always pours in three or four million dollars of water for his own purpose and for his own fee. I have no hesitancy in saying to the gentleman that at the present time in the railroad set-up, with a capitalization of $26,000,000,000, there is at least $8,000,000,000 of water.

Mr. PIERCE. At least one-third.

Mr. CULKIN. On the mistaken and unholy theory of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the people of the United States have to pay freight rates based on that capitalization. To this end they are going to drag the trucks up to the cost of railroad transportation and drag water transportation up to the level of the trucks.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. As a matter of fact, the policy which has been adopted of reducing freight rates to water points in order that the railroads may compete with water transportation, and which has been carried through Congress in the Pettengill bill to reduce further freight rates to water points, is simply discriminating against the people in the interior. We in the interior, who do not live on the rivers, are with you on this legislation, but we are paying a terrific penalty in exorbitant freight rates as a result of this policy, which Congress has not manifested an inclination to check but has promoted by its passage of these measures which further discriminate against the people in the interior.

Mr. CULKIN. I agree with the gentleman. I think Congress took a definite step back, and went back half a century, when it passed the Pettengill bill. [Applause.] Here is a more serious menace. Preliminarily may I say in that connection that the whole theory of water transportation, the whole theory of the engineers, the economic theory on which water transportation is brought to this floor and passed is that the savings in the cost of transportation are passed on to the people. I say that water transportation is the last of the public domain which the people have in an unhampered and unadulterated form. If the people pass this on to a bureaucratic outfit—I do not say a venal but an uneconomic outfit from the standpoint of people like the Interstate Commerce Commission—the American people will be in the grip of a monopoly alongside of which the Standard Oil in its lush days was a white angel.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. CULKIN. I want you to think over what I have said about this question. It is not pleasant to inveigh against the railroads. They are doing a better job than they have been doing. They have their function and they have their place in national economics, but water transportation and truck transportation also have their place in the economics of the people. No one type of transportation should be permitted to surround, engulf, and destroy the others to the detriment of all the people.

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. Is it not a fact that freight rates have gone up nearly one-third since the World War? It is true.

Mr. CULKIN. Yes; I think that is true.

Mr. PIERCE. Why? To pay dividends on this watered stock.

Mr. CULKIN. There is one case on the books where steamers left Florida carrying fruit several days a week. On those days the Interstate Commerce Commission lowered the rates by rail. The thing is barefaced, it is indefensible, it is hopelessly destructive of the interests of the farmer—East, West, North, and South. It is destructive of the consumer. I say to Congress in that connection, "Watch your step." [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I was very much interested in the statement of the gentleman that there is $8,000,000,000 of watered stock in the capitalization of the railroads. What is the capitalization of the railroads of this country?

Mr. CULKIN. Twenty-six billion dollars.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. What is the physical valuation as expressed under the La Follette Act?

Mr. CULKIN. I think that was entirely a synthetic valuation. It was based on the reproduction value and represents, of course, little more than sheer economic nonsense.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. It cost about $100,000,000 to make the valuation. I am wondering to what extent the valuation was correct.

Mr. CULKIN. I think the theory of it is wrong. I think the valuation of the railroads would be very high at $18,000,000,000.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART].

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Chairman, the improvement of navigation upon the various rivers of the country is one of the most important duties of the Congress, a duty which down through the years the Congress has discharged with credit to itself and untold benefit to the Nation. I, too, desire to add my congratulations to the Rivers and Harbors Committee and to its distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD], for the excellence of the legislation which is offered for our consideration today.

Because of the authorizations contained in this bill which have to do with the promotion of navigation upon the Sacramento and San Joaquin Rivers in California—the great water arteries of that State—I am deeply interested in the ultimate passage of the legislation we are considering at this moment.

Not only will the interests of navigation be served but, as a consequence of the improvement of these two great waterways, a control of the water resources of California's Great Central Valley will be achieved—a control which is vital to the future development of this great Western Commonwealth.

In river control lies the hope of the ultimate realization of our "dream of dreams", the Central Valley water project of California. The enactment of the technical provisions of this bill will do much to translate that which is today but a paper conception into a pulsating actuality, a boon to mankind, indeed.

Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding the impression that may have been created to the contrary, there is not any shortage of water in the Great Central Valley of California. There is plenty of water there to adequately supply all of the domestic, agricultural, and industrial demands as well as the necessities of navigation.

The problem is merely one which has to do with the scientific placement upon the proper lands of the waters which nature has so abundantly supplied.

The Great Central Valley in the north produces more water than is needed by the people who reside there. In the south there is not enough water to meet the minimum necessities of the people, to adequately care for the thousands of settlers who have already established themselves in that remarkably fertile area.

So the problem is merely one of collecting the water where it is plentiful and taking it to the places where it is scarce; and in order to produce this result so devoutly to be desired, the project has been devised. The Central Valley water project is a complete, self-sufficient, self-sustaining, self-operating single unit, though it is composed of a variety of different works of various kinds.

The Central Valley water project is the answer to the one overshadowing problem of this great inland empire, that is, the efficient spread of the water over all of the irrigable lands through the length and breadth of the Great Central Valley of this golden State of romance.

In the control of the water and its transport to the places where it can be most profitably used, certain things are accomplished which are in themselves subsidiary to the main objective but which are, nevertheless, highly valuable in the development of the State as a whole.

First. Control over the flood menace will be achieved by virtue of the construction of two great dams, one on the San Joaquin River in the south and the other on the Sacramento River in the north. From these dams the State will obtain protection from an annual property loss, which has mounted into millions of dollars during the last few years.

Second. In the obtaining of that flood control, the holding back of waters during the flood season, the releasing of waters in a regulated flow from the river's source in its race to the sea, the navigability of these two great rivers will be greatly improved, stabilized, and extended far beyond the highest point now reachable. The regulation of the flow of the Sacramento River will render that great river navigable some 50 or 60 miles beyond the point to which it is navigated today.

Third. The regulation of the natural flow of water to the sea through the control established by the construction of the dams above will insure a steady pressure of fresh water against the salt water of San Francisco Bay, thereby terminating the saline menace which now threatens the destruction of some 400,000 acres of delta lands, the finest in the world, all of which are today in danger of being rendered absolutely unusable by man.

Fourth. Incidental to the main objective of the great dam and reservoir on the upper Sacramento River of furnishing urgently needed water supplies for many purposes, a billion and a half kilowatt-hours of hydroelectric energy will be generated, one-fifth of which will be consumed in operating the project, the balance to be sold for public or private use. That there will be a ready market for the electricity, there can be no question, as the great privately owned public utility which is now serving northern California has offered to purchase the entire output as fast as it can be generated. The profits from this phase of the enterprise will add greatly to the certainty of success of the project, insofar as its financial feasibility is concerned.

Control and regulation of flow having been established, the surplus waters of the Sacramento Valley in the north will be taken to the south portion of the San Joaquin Valley, where the water is sorely needed today, and where, if water is not produced in the near future, a great land area, consisting of some 450,000 acres, will, because of an increasing scarcity of waters formerly plentiful, gradually return to the conditions of the desert; that is, to conditions under which it will no longer be possible for man to profitably till the soil.

Now, I want to emphasize one thing about this project. It is no longer necessary to defend it in respect to its engineering feasibility, because it has been investigated, time and time again, by engineers of the greatest ability, representing various public and private agencies, and there has not been one of them who has rendered an adverse report.

There has not been a single report rendered by a financial expert, who is willing to say over his signature, that the project is not financially feasible. All are in agreement, lavish in their praise.

The approval of this project by the committee, its early construction, is of untold importance insofar as the development of the State of California is concerned.

Without it the steady march of civilization in this great western Commonwealth will be halted; the further development of this Pacific coastal State will fall into retrogression. It means that the thousands upon thousands of Americans for whom we had hoped to provide homes will have to seek homesteads elsewhere.

It is natural that you, if your consideration of our great problem is superficial, will jump to the conclusion that this is merely a California development; that we are asking for something for ourselves alone. In this connection let me point out that the estimates of the Bureau of the Census demonstrate convincingly that this great valley will in but a short time provide homes for millions and millions of people who do not live there today. When we ask for governmental assistance in the development of this valley we are asking not so much for the improvement of California for Californians alone, as for its development for the benefit of all of the people of the United States, for the tens of thousands of people—yes; the hundreds of thousands of people from all over the Union that are coming to California to establish their homes in its Great Central Valley.

So when the Government offers in this instance its helping hand to California, it is in fact furthering a plan which will eventually provide homes not only for California, but for an untold number of people who are destined to come to California to settle upon the lands which this inspiring project will make available.

It is a great enterprise. Today, it contemplates merely the saving of land which is already in a high state of productivity. In the future, when the demands of that day require it, 10 or 15, 20 or 30 years from now, the plan may be extended to include lands which are unused today, but that is only remotely within the contemplation of those who are pleading for this project. Since no new lands are to be immediately brought into use the fears that have been expressed by some that increased agricultural production will but add to the embarrassing surpluses which already burden the Nation are quite unfounded. Even if new acres were to be brought into production, this result which is giving our people such concern, could not develop for the reason that very few of our California crops are in competition with the products of other States which are suffering in value because of overproduction. The crops raised in the Great Central Valley are specialized crops in the production of which we have practically no competition from without our borders. We are producing crops which we sell to the entire world, not to the East alone.

We would have to multiply many times over the acreage now devoted to our specialized crops, produced, as they are, on irrigable lands, before we will approach the production of a surplus in any one of them.

Certainly, if the construction of the Central Valley project would appreciably embarrass the agricultural situation in the Nation, the opposition of the Department of Agriculture would have been long ago manifested. On the contrary, the Honorable Henry A. Wallace, the Secretary of Agriculture, has frequently stated that neither he nor the Department over which he presides has any objection to the immediate development of the plan. In support of this contention I quote a paragraph from a letter I received from Mr. Wallace but a few weeks ago:

DEAR MR. GEARHART: A couple of years ago I indicated to persons interested in the Central Valley water project that I thought it unobjectionable and, in general, in line with the desirable policy of taking care of people already on irrigated lands. It is therefore our purpose not in any way to object to the project.

A careful reading of this pronouncement ought to dispel all doubts and fears that anyone may have heretofore entertained that the construction of this great project would adversely affect the general agricultural situation.

This is one of the greatest projects which has ever been devised by man for the improvement of conditions of mankind. When it is carried into fulfillment, it will indeed make the valley of the San Joaquin blossom as the rose, make of it all that man has dreamed of—man's paradise on earth.

A hasty review of these great benefits which will flow from the construction of the Central Valley water project in its entirety convinces us that it is indeed worth while to improve the navigability of California's two greatest rivers, contributing as this work will to the attainment of so many coordinated facilities. I, therefore, beseech your favorable consideration of this bill which the Rivers and Harbors Committee offers to us for our consideration today. [Applause.]

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER].

Mr. DITTER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, the Nation is in a grave crisis. Justice has been flouted. For months lawlessness has been rampant. Properties have been illegally seized and held. Incalculable economic losses have been inflicted upon wage earners, businessmen and women, upon the whole people. Bombings, shootings, riots, defiance of court orders and of the duly constituted law-enforcement agencies are matters of daily news in the press of the country. Marauders have marched upon and have terrified entire communities. Men have been killed, women have been wounded, little children have been injured. The laws have been scoffed at and violated times without number. Thousands of men and women are being denied their constitutional rights of protection as they seek to follow peacefully their vocations in an effort to make a living for themselves and their families. Power systems, water systems, transportation systems, fire-protection systems, and even the United States mail service have been disrupted; and the air is filled with threats of more depredations to come. Terrorism pervades the industrial field in every section of the country.

For months the Secretary of Labor has given by word and deed aggressive encouragement to the groups who have been perpetrating these outrages. Now the citizens of many States are organizing themselves into vigilantes and arming themselves through sheer desperate necessity for self-protection in the face of the break-down of duly constituted law-enforcement agencies.

Congress and the whole Nation have for months been demanding that the Federal Government move to end this reign of lawlessness and anarchial industrial disorder. The country has been waiting for the President, with the influence of his high office and the power of his prestige, to speak the words which would recall these lawless elements to sanity and order.

Mr. Chairman, the mountain has labored and brought forth a mouse!

Finally, the President of the United States, after long, silent acquiescence, has no word of his own to speak, but must needs go back to William Shakespeare for the words to express his attitude:

A plague o' both your houses!

And no sooner had the words fallen from his lips then his secretaries were scurrying about explaining that he did not mean the C. I. O. or John L. Lewis, but he meant those engaging in violence and those who will not submit to coercion and sign contracts to avoid these lawless conditions.

With the urgent need for a forthright stand, a firm declaration that law and order must be upheld, that orderly and lawful procedure must be followed by both employer and employee, the President gives voice to no stronger statement than "A plague o' both your houses." The country is disappointed. It had the right to expect a positive declaration. It had the right to expect candor, high moral courage, and perfect frankness. It had the right to expect that the persuasiveness of the President would be exercised for the maintenance of law and order. Disappointment and foreboding are its portions. Industrial differences provide no excuse for mob rule, nor for the wanton destruction of property, nor for the defiance of accepted rules of law and order.

The blessings of liberty depend to a large degree upon domestic tranquillity, and domestic tranquillity depends upon the maintenance of law and order. The protection of the lives and property of the citizens against acts which are in violation of every established rule of society is a duty of government. Representative democracy does not mean mob rule. Liberty does not mean license. Obedience to law is still the heart of self-government, and respect for law still determines the capacity of a people to govern themselves. If self-government is to be perpetuated, order cannot become anarchy, might cannot be right, and the defined processes of established government cannot become the riotous confusion of rebellious barbarism.

The President has never been at a loss for words with which to lash the money changers. He has never lacked a vocabulary with which to denounce the economic royalists. He has never had to hunt for phrases with which to condemn the tax evaders. He has never been at a loss for cutting expressions with which to castigate those who opposed him. Why is it now, knowing, as he does, that a firm declaration for law and order from him would end this reign of terror and would restore the dignity of the law and the stability of government, why, I ask, can he find no statement stronger than "a plague o' both your houses"?

Have we come to the point where the President does not dare declare for law and order? Have we come to such a pass that the President of the United States, because of political ties and obligations, does not dare act to uphold the constitutional rights of our people?

The country has looked to the President to end this intolerable condition of affairs by a determined declaration. He has thus far disappointed the Nation which believed in his courage, his fairness, and his concern for the orderly processes of government.

Does the President fear to speak out in this crisis? For him to declare for law and order, to condemn lawlessness and terrorism, does not necessitate his taking sides in the conflict. It does necessitate his being the spokesman for the millions of helpless consumers, the unprotected and unorganized householders, the small business men and women, and the thousands of industrious workingmen who are being daily made the victims of these lawless groups of industrial marauders who are spreading terror under the cloak of labor organization.

The peace of this Nation is in peril, and the time has come for plain speaking. Does the President intend to take a firm stand for law and order, and if not, what is it that seals his lips?

Is this menacing condition to be permitted to grow worse and worse until a dictatorship under a declaration of martial law is invited? Does this account for the Presidential silence?

Does the President condemn this reign of terror, or does he regard it with complacence, if not acquiescence? The Nation is entitled to know. [Applause.]

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, the bill as it is before the House today, insofar as Minneapolis is concerned, is not complete, but this is no fault of the chairman of the committee [Mr. MANSFIELD] or the members of the committee, who have been untiring in their efforts.

The 9-foot channel will be completed during the latter part of next summer, when they will impound the water above each of the 26 dams that will be completed at that time; but it appears that the 9-foot channel in Minneapolis will only come to the Washington Avenue Bridge, which is a mile and a half from the nearest point in the industrial area of the city.

In order to bring the Mississippi River and the 9-foot channel up to a city of half a million people, which is the head of navigation, one project will have to be completed in addition to the work that has been done on the river, and this is the building of two locks through St. Anthony Falls.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. To carry the navigation channel up to the point the gentleman speaks of would carry it above St. Anthony Falls, would it not?

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Yes; it would. It would carry it above St. Anthony Falls, and it was previously thought, perhaps, not practical from an engineering standpoint because of the numerous bridges above the falls, to bring the 9-foot channel up into the upper harbor; but now, due to the development of Diesel-powered tugs, you can tug your barges into the upper harbor without changing the bridge construction in that area. The Army engineers have not completed the report on this project, and, of course, the committee does not desire to incorporate such an amendment in the bill until this report has been received from the Army engineers.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. I yield.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Does the gentleman propose to offer an amendment to this bill to include that part of the river near St. Anthony Falls?

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. I may say to the gentleman from the first district of Minnesota that such a bill was introduced at the beginning of the session, and if an amendment were to be offered today it would have to be offered at page 12, line 23, but I do not believe the committee would accept such an amendment, and I withhold offering the amendment because of the fact that the report of the engineers has not been received by the committee.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Minesota. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. Does not the gentleman think the more orderly procedure would be, in view of the fact the gentleman is going to get a report shortly, to put the amendment on in the Senate, if it is approved?

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Yes. The only reason I am bringing this up today is because of the fact that you will have spent in 1938, $148,000,000 to put in a 9-foot depth in the Mississippi River, but the big city above St. Louis is Minneapolis, and Minneapolis yearly ships 10,000,000 tons of freight, of which about 55 percent is available for water transportation. So it seems to me good business, if you are going to make the $148,000,000 bring a real, economic return, to bring the river up to the industries, up to the mills of Minneapolis, up to the factories, and up to the cold storage houses above St. Anthony Falls, and I would like to have the RECORD contain this statement, because the Ohio River yearly ships 20,000,000 tons, and even with a 6-foot channel, the Mississippi River, which, at low water has only a 5-foot channel during the summer, last year carried over 1,500,000 tons. We have great faith in the Inland Waterways Corporation, under Major General Ashburn. They have done a good job, and the Army engineers have done a good job, but to complete this real job, the House and the Senate, after the report of the Army engineers is in, should extend the channel to the north limits of Minneapolis and put the 9-foot channel right up to the industries of the city of Minneapolis, which has a population of half a million people.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN].

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I probably should discuss the bill without taking the time to make the statement which I am going to make, but I could not help but be reminded a few moments ago, when the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER] was addressing the committee, of something that happened only a few weeks ago. When the so-called antilynching bill was before the House, I made the statement that if the good Lord would save the South from our so-called reformers to the north of us, I thought we would recover, and at the same time it would give those gentlemen more time to look around and discover the terrible conditions growing and existing in their own back yards. I regret that the conditions are as they are today, but I am delighted they have found time to give them some thought and I hope they will be able to work the problems out satisfactorily.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. I cannot yield at this point. I say that merely because I somehow dislike to hear a man get up and try to throw dust in somebody else's face.

With reference to the river and harbor bill, I am interested to report this fact to the House. That in the $34,000,000 worth of work covered in this bill, there are 37 projects involving less than $30,000 each. That to me is a very significant fact. It shows that not only the Rivers and Harbors Committee, but the Corps of Army Engineers are interested in developing the small projects which take care of the small communities and give the man with a small boat an opportunity to make a better living, and to serve in a better way and at the same time conserve and make more available our natural resources.

I could mention one little harbor in my district—Atlantic, N. C. The improvement cost only approximately $15,000. The project was pushed along by a public-spirited gentleman named Capt. Jim Morris. He believed in it, and finally the engineers made a favorable report. On the first day that little port was open the amount received from the sale of fish alone over that dock was over double the cost of the entire project, and over 200 boats called into that port. So one can see the extent of the benefits to be derived from these small projects.

Let me say a word now about the Army Engineers. In my opinion they are one of the most efficient agencies in the Government. They have cooperated 100 percent with the Rivers and Harbors Committee and with the chairman of that committee. I would hate very much to see anything take place that would in any way disturb the organization to which I refer. They are doing a fine piece of work; they are giving proper attention to the needed waterways; and they are approving waterways that are carrying freight and paying to the users a rich dividend. Not only that, but I may also say they are in operation, and in case of war they are most familiar with their work and ready for action at all times. They, too, are entitled to a great deal of credit for this bill, and that would not in any way detract from the credit due our most efficient chairman, who, in my opinion, knows more about the waterways in the United States than any man in it. [Applause.]

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I consider the bill now before us one of the most important that has been before the House at this session of Congress. It is a broad and comprehensive program of waterways development in our country, which will carry these developments to practically every part of the country where waterway possibilities exist. The authorization is very small comparatively speaking, only about $34,000,000.

ARMY ENGINEERS EFFICIENT

I was particularly impressed by the statement made by my colleague from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN] concerning the efficient manner in which the Board of Army Engineers operate in river and harbor matters. I should be very much displeased to see the Congress in any manner dislodge the existing functions and powers now handled by the Board of Army Engineers under the War Department. It happens that in a century of experience no one can ever point the finger of accusation against this Board for any wrongdoing or the exercise of any favoritism to any community in the United States or to any individual. Their examinations and surveys are made impartially, and with only one thing in mind, finding what are the needs of communities, and what are the possibilities of a community and commerce as a result of any expenditure which may be recommended through their reports.

RIVER AND HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS NOT SECTIONAL

I was also particularly impressed by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO], when he mentioned the fact that river and harbor authorizations have always been nonpartisan, also nonsectional, and have reached to all parts of the country, and I venture the prophecy now that the gentleman's cherished St. Lawrence waterway development is only a matter of time. This great waterway, which would carry great benefits to the American people, is going to be carried out. The project will ultimately be carried out because there is public demand for it. If you will notice the history of our country, the centers of population have grown up first where they could have waterway transportation facilities.

Your farming areas are adjacent more or less to the waterway transportation facilities. Within 50 miles of water transportation facilities you will find 85 percent of American industry. Within 50 or 75 miles of direct waterway transportation facilities you will find about 75 percent of the farm-producing areas of the United States. That is most significant. Regardless of the efforts of the rival transportation facilities, and their ally, the Interstate Commerce Commission, water transportation development shall go on in the United States in the future. Rival transportation facilities have been subsidized in value more than a billion dollars in American lands and American moneys. It is true the Congress has spent almost an equal amount for our waterways development. For transportation facilities to try to throttle and lobby and work against water transportation facilities is undoubtedly selfish and contrary to the best interest of the rank and file of the American people—the great mass of American consumers.

RAILROADS SUBSIDIZED

America has in the past aided, assisted, and substantially subsidized transportation facilities. This is particularly true in the case of subsidies, grants, and gifts given to railroads. Adequate transportation facilities have always been essential to general prosperity and the economic life and welfare of our Nation. Our country has quite properly recognized this and gone the limit in subsidizing railroads. The railroads should now be the last ones to yell and cry about the Government's spending money on waterway transportation facilities.

According to reliable authority, Federal railroad grants have been as follows:

Federal railroad grants

	Acres
Estimated total area granted	190,000,000
Estimated area forfeited	35,000,000
Estimated area of unforfeited grants	155,000,000
Area patented to June 30, 1910	113,660,000
Remainder pending adjustment (probably greater part available)	41,340,000

Federal wagon-road grants

	Acres
Estimated total area granted	3,229,000
Area patented to June 30, 1910	2,987,000
Remainder pending adjustment (practically all available)	242,000

Texas was an independent sovereignty before its admission to the United States and the treaty of union provided that the State should retain the ownership of all public lands within its boundaries. It has given to railroads land grants amounting to approximately 32,400,000 acres, over one-sixth of the area of the State.

FLORIDA GAVE ONE-THIRD HER AREA TO RAILROADS

In my own great State of Florida, it is as follows:

	Acres
Land grants made to the railroads by the Federal and State Governments	2,220,779
Land grants made to the railroads by the State government	9,070,156

When you consider that Florida has only about 32,000,000 acres of land, do you not think we have been exceedingly liberal in giving more than one-third of this to the railroads to encourage them to build and operate their transportation facilities for us? Railroad development in Florida has meant much to its economic life. But it seems to me now that this interest could hardly have the nerve to come in and oppose waterway transportation facilities in Florida.

THE FLORIDA CANAL

Now, Mr. Chairman and my colleagues, I have particularly in mind the steamship canal across Florida. This canal, when constructed, will connect up our great waterway transportation facilities of the Atlantic and Gulf of Mexico. For more than 10 years the Board of Army Engineers made exhaustive, detailed, and thorough studies of this project. Authorization for these studies and surveys was based upon bills which it was my pleasure to introduce and which the Congress passed in 1927 and 1930. They spent probably one-half million dollars in the surveys and called in the best talent within their organization and also outside of their organization in order to arrive at the facts in the case. Probably no other engineering project has by Americans ever been examined more thoroughly, exhaustively, and competently than has been the Florida canal. After these exhaustive studies, the Chief of Engineers, through the Secretary of War, on April 1, 1937, transmitted his report to your Committee on Rivers and Harbors. This report was ultra favorable and recommended completion of the canal.

The House Rivers and Harbors Committee, of which I happen to be a member, held exhaustive hearings for more than 21 days. At these hearings, the Chief of Engineers and officers of his corps, the Chief of the United States Geodetic Survey, and a large number of other witnesses appeared. Your committee voted by an overwhelming vote to complete the canal and favorably reported H. R. 6150, which I introduced, for the completion of the canal. This bill is now on the calendar and you will in the future be called upon to act upon it.

THE CANAL IS A NATIONAL PROJECT

The canal across Florida is a national project and, practically speaking, its benefits will apply to the United States as follows:

	Percent
Population	74
Number farms	70
Acreage farms	73
Income farms	72
Manufactures	73
Wholesale and retail trade	84
Forests	53
Minerals	82
Finances	84

No other American project can show anything like half these benefits; therefore, Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, it is truly a national project and cannot be considered as a local or sectional project.

In stressing the national importance of this project and its far-reaching benefits to the entire Nation, I call attention to the communication received by me from Hon. John L. Bogert, editor of the Marine News, and also a statement appearing in the May issue of the Marine News, as follows:

THE NEW YORK MARINE NEWS CO., INC.,
New York, May 18, 1937.

Hon. LEX GREEN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. GREEN: With rail charges for grain haulage 13.9 mills per ton-mile from Yankton, S. Dak., to Duluth, and water rates but 2.6 mills per ton-mile on the New York State Barge Canal, it is imperative to utilize the all-water route down the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers to New Orleans, and thence up the coast to Atlantic ports. A canal across Florida becomes a necessity, since river barges cannot go to sea around Florida, and transshipment at New Orleans uneconomic. A canal shortens the haul 460 miles and links up the Gulf and Atlantic intracoastal waterways.

Very truly yours,

JOHN L. BOGERT, Editor.

THE CASE FOR THE FLORIDA CANAL

The Missouri, Mississippi, and Ohio Rivers, with their tributaries, constitute a chain of navigable waterways 15,000 miles long, but it is improbable that the time will ever come when 75 percent of these rivers will be navigable for vessels drawing more than 9 feet of water. Such being the case, barges, both self-propelled and towed, must constitute the bulk of that immense flotilla of freight carriers, that can alone insure to the dwellers of our vast interior sufficiently low-cost transportation.

The Department of the Interior has issued a pamphlet which shows that many of our Middle West States, which were at one time the granary of the world, are now losing their inhabitants; and their farms, which were years ago the producers of great national wealth, are now being abandoned. High transportation costs will always arrest the growth in population of any land.

Montana, North Dakota, Wyoming, Nebraska, Kansas, Iowa, Missouri, Oklahoma, Arkansas are all seriously handicapped by the high cost of rail transportation. Congressman PETTENGILL, in a pamphlet entitled "Giving All Shippers an Even Break", makes the statement that in 1910, 38 percent of our people lived within 50 miles of salt water or the Great Lakes, and in 1930 this percentage had grown to 45. Coupled with that he calls attention to the fact that two-thirds of our growth in population had taken place in that strip of 50 miles from salt water or from the shores of the Great Lakes.

If those figures prove anything, they prove that people cannot afford to stay anywhere where there is no cheap water transportation available. There is but one lesson to be learned from such figures, and that is the importance from a national standpoint of extending cheap water transportation throughout our interior. To fancy that this natural drift to the shores of waterways can properly be arrested by abandoning the waterways and forcing into bankruptcy all transportation systems that utilize those same waterways is the height of absurdity. Cheap transportation means extended markets, and etxended markets means a higher standard of living.

It is easy to demonstrate from the history of the great State of New York that a perfectly adequate waterway paralleling a railroad, not only does not injure that railroad, but builds it up and increases its earning capacity. There are three trunk lines that cross the State diagonally from New York to Buffalo, with a mileage haul of about 436 miles. The New York Central, paralleling the Hudson to Albany, and from Albany paralleling the New York State Barge Canal for its 340 miles to Buffalo, is several miles longer. Nevertheless, the New York Central has assisted in the building up of five cities of over 100,000 inhabitants, while Binghamton alone, of all the cities and towns on the Erie, Delaware, Lackawanna & Western and Lehigh Valley Railways, has as much as 78,300. The conclusion is inescapable that cheap water transportation is absolutely essential for rapid growth in population.

Congressman PETTENGILL'S figures don't begin to tell the tale so far as the State of New York goes. We understand that 85 percent of the entire population of New York is located within 10 miles of its great waterway route up the Hudson to Troy, and thence to Buffalo. And Albany, Troy, Schenectady, Utica, Rome, Syracuse, and Rochester are the prosperous growing cities they are, just because they are not at the mercy of "all the traffic will bear" railroad freight rates.

Suppose we contrast the happy fate of these prosperous cities with the melancholy fate of the grain growers of South Dakota. If we do, we will speedily discover ample reason why the farm population of the Central West is shrinking. From Yankton, S. Dak., to Duluth, Minn., is but 424 miles by rail and the railroad charge is 15.9 cents per bushel of heavy grain, which on the basis of 60 pounds to the bushel would be closely 14 mills per ton-mile, or $5.93 for the ton haul. Now contrast that with what the railroads ask to haul that same bushel of wheat from Buffalo to New York—4 cents per bushel. The distance is 436 miles, so the rate per ton-mile is but 3.4 mills. Now, if the railroads can afford to haul grain through the State of New York for 3.4 mills per ton-mile, what earthly right have they to ruin the poor farmer of the Dakotas by mulcting him 14 mills per ton-mile? Nevertheless, the Interstate Commerce Commission permits just such discrimination.

There is salvation for the western farmer, however, but it does not lie in any route through the Great Lakes; it lies down the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers. The annual report of the Inland Waterways Corporation for the year 1935 conclusively proves the possibility of a "down stream" rate for bulk cargoes as low or even lower than 1 mill per ton-mile. Therefore the Yankton, S. Dak., farmer can have his heavy grain hauled down the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers 2,050 miles to New Orleans for 5.5 cents per bushel. That is but little more than one-third of what the railroads ask him to land it at the head of Lake Superior, 4,576 miles from Liverpool; to be exact, 10.4 cents less. Now, that 10.4 cents per bushel will go a long way to pay the cost of the ocean haul from New Orleans to Liverpool, a distance around through the Florida Straits of 5,266 statute miles.

It must be evident that every mile cut off this long haul will be a distinct benefit to the shipper; a saving of 400 statute miles (350 nautical miles) would reduce this ocean haul to 4,866 statute miles. At 1 mill per ton-mile, 10.4 cents saving per bushel would pay for a haul of 3,892 miles. So down the Missouri River to its junction with the Mississippi River, thence down the Mississippi River to New Orleans, and from thence across Florida, 15.9 cents per bushel would pay for the transportation of that South Dakota heavy grain to within 1,000 miles of Liverpool. Think of it, ponder over it, hauling heavy grain by water nearly 6,000 miles for the same price as is demanded by the railroads to haul it 424 miles. There is nothing extraordinary about hauling a busbel of grain 6,000 miles for 15.9 cents by a water route. The Argentinian, 7,178 miles away from Liverpool at Buenos Aires, has during the recent depression had his coal brought to him for 10 shillings per ton and his grain hauled back to Liverpool for 20 shillings per ton. Prices are higher now, but still well under a mill per ton-mile. In sailing vessels grain has been carried from Australia to Liverpool, 15,000 miles, for $6 per ton, or six-fifteenths of a mill per ton-mile. This compares very favorably with bulk-cargo haulage on the Great Lakes, where coal and grain have been carried for as little as three-eighths of a mill per ton-mile.

In view of the Report of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, bearing date of February 24, 1937, which after advocating dimensions for the canal of "35 feet increased in the rock sections to 36 feet and 37 feet in the Atlantic and Gulf entrances, with a minimum width of 400 feet in the land cuts increased to 600 feet in open water" it seems pertinent to point out that it is perfectly possible to construct any canal of such excessive cross-section for the canal prism, that the visible traffic would be utterly inadequate to economically justify its construction. This the Board of Engineers and Harbors seems to have done.

Justification for the foregoing conclusion can be pointed out by considering the case of the St. Mary's Canal on the Great Lakes. Here is a canal that passes the largest tonnage of any canal in the world, tonnage that carries cargoes at rates as low as any on any sea, lake, or river anywhere. Furthermore, the bulk cargo vessels that ply through this canal are of considerable length; the steamer Harry Coulby is 604 feet long, 65 feet beam and 33 feet depth. Yet these vessels carry cargoes as large as 15,000 tons on less than 20 feet draught. At no time in the last 25 years has the recommended draught exceeded 21 feet.

There are no tankers as yet built that are as long as 600 feet; a standard size may be taken as 500 feet long, 68 feet beam carrying 15,500 tons on 30 feet draught. But it is perfectly possible to build tankers longer than 500 feet and drawing less water than 30 feet when fully loaded; the ratio of length to draught in our large trans-Atlantic passenger vessels is much greater than what obtains in the modern tanker. It can be taken as axiomatic that vessels will always be built to suit the canal locks they must traverse. So it must be obvious to anyone that General Markham is perfectly justified in restricting the cross-section of the Florida Canal prism to such dimensions as he feels the visible traffic warrants.

So far as the needs of vessels that can navigate the upper reaches of our inland waterways is concerned, a canal across Florida that will accommodate barges drawing but 8 feet of water fully loaded will meet their requirements, but no such limited draft would suffice for the trade that will use this most desirable waterway. With the deepening of the New York State Barge Canal, barges drawing 14 feet of water will be constructed in large numbers, and it would be folly to restrict the possible use of the canal to only river barges.

It seems pertinent to point out here that the tank trade is a one-way trade and that upon its return voyage south to the Gulf, in ballast, these tankers which draw 30 feet fully loaded will rarely draw more than 20 to 21 feet aft and but little more than half that forward. So the very largest tankers in ballast will never call for more than 25 to 30 feet.

There is one other advantage that inheres to the Florida canal route. As everyone knows, the Gulf Stream pours out through the Florida Straits at the rate of 3 to 3½ knots, and for a tanker to go south she must buck this same Gulf Stream. But below Hatteras there is a counterflow current close in to shore running south. So a direct course for Jacksonville would be favorable, while any course around the lower end of Florida would be against the current. It is therefore absurd to suppose that tankers will not use the Florida canal when built, in any event on their south-bound, in-ballast condition. There is a further reduction in fuel consumption when the speed is cut down in transiting the canal. As every naval architect knows the power needed is proportional to the cube of the speed, so that theoretically but one-eighth of the normal power is required when the speed is reduced one-half. While the mechanical losses of the propelling machinery remain nearly constant, so that the fuel consumption does not follow closely any such rule as one-eighth fuel consumption for one-half speed, it is none the less true that in transiting such a canal as the Florida canal, a 15,000 D. W. tanker might save 15 tons of fuel oil in a 24-hour passage, owing to the reduction in speed.

It must always be borne in mind that the cutting of this canal across Florida will permit shoal draft vessels that are utterly unsuited to ocean navigation to pass from the intracoastal waterways of the Gulf to those of the Atlantic. There are over 1,000 miles of these intracoastal waterways in the Gulf and 1,431 miles of them on the Atlantic; this canal will join them.

It will be of interest to all of my colleagues, particularly those from the southern section of our country, to know the substance of a brief statement taken from a recent issue of the Manufacturers Record. This statement gives enlightening information relative to the Nation's oil reserves, and is as follows:

SIXTY-THREE PERCENT OF NATION'S PROVEN OIL RESERVES IN THE SOUTH

An increase of 886,000,000 barrels of petroleum in the proven reserves of the United States on January 1, 1937, over the January 1, 1935, figure is estimated by the American Petroleum Institute. During this 2-year period approximately 2,044,000,000 barrels were produced, but discovery of new pools and development of old ones have covered this and the total reserves of the country are placed at 13,063,000,000 barrels, of which 8,242,000,000 barrels, or 63 percent, are in the southern oil-producing States.

The increase in the South since the last estimate 2 years ago is 1,032,000,000 barrels, compared with a decline of 146,000,000 barrels in the oil regions of the rest of the country, principally California.

"These figures", the president of the A. P. I., Mr. Axtell J. Byles, explained, "do not mean that the country has available only 13,063,000,000 barrels of oil, but that it has proved reserves up to that amount. * * * The probability is that these proven reserves constitute only a small portion of the supply which will be made available. But these reserves do assure that there is no imminent danger of shortage."

Following is a table showing the distribution of reserves in southern fields:

Proven petroleum reserves, Southern States

(As estimated by the American Petroleum Institute for Jan. 1, 1937)

	Barrels
Arkansas	84,000,000
Kentucky	39,000,000
Louisiana	524,000,000
Oklahoma	1,141,000,000
Texas	6,422,000,000
West Virginia	32,000,000
Total	8,242,000,000
Total, United States	13,063,000,000

The American Petroleum Institute is authority for the above statistics, and it is noteworthy that the South supplies two-thirds of the country's petroleum energy and that it has an estimated investment of $6,000,000,000 in southern oil reserve and production enterprises. This tonnage—the bulk of it—will find its way through the Florida Canal.

2½ DAYS SAVED FROM ATLANTIC TO GULF

Mr. Chairman and my colleagues, with our rapidly growing population and rapid exhaustion of our national resources, it is imperative that Americans look scientifically toward economies in transportation. This canal will save in ship-operating costs about $10,000,000 annually. It will reflect three times this amount in a lessened transportation cost to the American consumers. [Applause.]

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Florida 1 additional minute.

Mr. GREEN. Thank you, Judge MANSFIELD.

It will save 2½ days' time in making a boat round-trip from New York and European ports to New Orleans and other Gulf ports. From New York to New Orleans this will gain about one round-trip in five. More than 10,000 ships annually will transit it. Practically all engineering and commercial minds of the country admit that it will carry more than twice the annual tonnage of the Panama Canal. The best national defense minds in the country say that from a national defense point alone it is worthy of construction.

It will save numerous lives and hundreds of thousands of dollars storm damage annually by eliminating the necessity of boats going through the hazardous straits south of Florida. It will be a permanent structure and will carry these benefits to each succeeding generation. Each 15 years after its construction, it will return in transportation savings to the American people the cost of its construction.

I earnestly urge you to cooperate for passage of legislation for its completion. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE].

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, it was once my good fortune to serve on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. I desire to express my high regard for the chairman of that great committee, Judge MANSFIELD. He always commanded the profound respect of the members of the committee by reason of his great capacity and his comprehensive knowledge and his modesty, his fine character and his many good qualities have not only endeared him to the members of the committee but to all the Members of the House.

I am not going to discuss the technical features of this bill. There is a matter in the bill in which I have a very great interest.

Section 5 of H. R. 7051, the bill under consideration, contains the provisions of H. R. 2300, a bill introduced by me to provide for a survey of the Ohio River and its tributaries with the view to preventing their pollution.

The question of the elimination of stream pollution is one of transcendent importance to the people of the district I represent and is rapidly becoming a matter of vital importance to all the people of the United States.

The Ohio River is probably more highly improved for the purposes of navigation than any other river in the Nation. It is locked and dammed, and in times of low water it constitutes a series of stagnant pools, one of such pools extending from Coney Island, 7 or 8 miles east of Cincinnati, to Fernbank, a few miles west of Cincinnati. Into that pool flows the domestic sewage and industrial waste of 600,000 people on the Ohio side and 150,000 on the Kentucky side, and out of the pool comes their water supply. It is an indefensible and intolerable condition and one that must be remedied in the near future.

The ordinary processes of coagulation to treat turbidity of aeration and filtration could not produce potable water from the Ohio River if the process of chlorination was unknown. It is necessary to use chlorine in the water plants in the smaller towns to such an extent that it can be plainly tasted in the drinking water.

I voted for the Barkley-Vinson bill which placed this matter entirely in the hands of the Health Department. It will always be necessary for the Health Department to establish standards, but the ultimate solution, it seems to me, is an engineering problem. The water cannot be purified after it is polluted. We must prevent the pollution. That is an engineering problem. It can only be done by interception sewers and disposal plants. However, there will be enough work for all departments in the solution of this great problem.

It is my thought that the Ohio River should be the laboratory where this problem could be solved, not only for the people living in the Ohio Valley, but for the people of the Nation. The Ohio River, by reason of its small volume of water in many seasons of the year, and the fact that it drains a basin with an area of 200,000 square miles with a population of almost 20,000,000 people, and by reason of the great volume and variety of industrial waste and domestic sewage that flows into the river, should be the laboratory in which this problem should be worked out.

In Secretary Woodring's report on H. R. 2300, which is section 5 of the bill under consideration, and which report is included in the report on the pending bill, he said:

> It is the view of the Department that any plan for the abatement of pollution in the drainage areas of the United States must be based upon results of further investigations and studies of definite streams in which pollution may be acute. The size and importance of the Ohio River and the present condition of pollution in certain reaches of the river indicate that this river and tributaries warrant such a study. The administration of the provisions of the proposed bill can be coordinated with the prosecution of the preliminary examinations and surveys now conducted by the Department.

The larger cities along the Ohio River, by the application of the processes known to science, have made the water fairly potable, but the smaller towns have no capacity to spend the immense sums of money necessary for this purpose. They have largely obtained their water supply from artesian wells and they have lived under the delusion that the water thus obtained was pure and healthful. However, by constant use of the subterranean waters the water table has been lowered in some instances, I have been informed, from the depth of 12 to 80 feet, and the polluted percolating waters of the Ohio River have mingled with the subterranean waters to such an extent that the use of these waters for human consumption is a real source of peril.

Under the commerce clause of the Constitution, the Federal Government retains jurisdiction over all navigable waters. At the time of the formation of our Government almost all the commerce was water-borne. The railroads had not yet come, there were few roads and all of them were almost impassible, so the Nation depended for its commerce upon the rivers and navigable waters.

It was very important that the navigable rivers should be improved and that the great seaports and lake ports should be adequate to care for our commerce. The Corps of Engineers of the United States Army from its beginning has been closely associated with our Federal program of internal improvement and today is still the only general engineering organization in the Government service. In times of peace the War Department's most important civil-engineering activity is the improvement of our waterways for navigation and the control of floods.

The first river and harbor legislation enacted by Congress in 1789 consisted in assenting to certain improvements sponsored by the individual States. The first appropriation for river and harbor improvements was made in 1802, and from 1826 to the Civil War Congress periodically provided appropriations for this purpose. The close of the Civil War and the return of industrial activity brought to the front the necessity for a still more comprehensive program to provide reasonable facilities for our ever-growing commerce. From 1866 to 1920 Congress continued the passage of these periodical river and harbor bills, and in 1920 adopted its present policy of enacting general river and harbor legislation to include the authorization of definite projects and the expenditures necessary for the completion of these projects every several years, and making available in the annual War Department appropriation a lump sum for application to these authorized projects.

Congress has appropriated a total of $2,260,000,000 for maintenance and improvement of our navigable waterways, which carry an annual commerce of 583,800,000 tons, valued at $24,311,000,000.

Advance planning for additional future works of river and harbor improvement and of flood control has continued with the prosecution of works under construction. Plans are prepared for the prompt commencement of further works of improvement of widespread public benefit, all of which have been maturely investigated on the initiative of Congress and recommended by the Chief of Engineers.

Including the reports on the tributary streams of the Mississippi, is the comprehensive survey of approximately 200 streams and their tributaries in the combined interests of navigation, flood control, power development, and irrigation.

The War Department engineers have presented to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House numerous concrete and definite projects, with specific recommendations, and from these we have the bill that is before you now.

In the matter of flood control, the dispatch with which the Army engineers are able to furnish information to Congress and to present reasonable plans was clearly demonstrated this year. In an incredibly short period after the greatest flood of all time had passed down the Ohio River the Chief of Engineers was able to report to Congress a plan designed to prevent a recurrence of this national disaster. These data, with recommendations for other great tributaries of the Mississippi, are now in the hands of the Flood Control Committee.

The present national policy of the Rivers and Harbors Committee has greatly facilitated waterway improvement work and placed it on a sound working basis. This policy of enacting every few years general river and harbor legislation authorizing appropriations for definite projects, with a view to their completion over a period of years, and of making available in the annual War Department appropriation a lump sum for application to these authorized projects provides for the modern and extensive program we now have. While the legislation necessary to carry out this policy and provide for a comprehensive program might at first appear to be an insuperable task, since both preliminary and final decisions depend upon agreement in the committee and on the floors of both Houses of Congress, the records of the past decade stand as monumental evidence that our river and harbor work has functioned efficiently and expeditiously.

Certainly the engineers of the War Department, who have such great knowledge upon the subject of our navigable waters, acquired over the years, should have their proper place in the important work of eliminating stream pollution.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] has expired.

Mr. MANSFELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SMITH] such time as he may desire.

MERIT OF RIVER AND HARBOR PROJECTS—LABOR EMPLOYED

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I have requested this time in order to briefly point out to Congress and to the country the fact that there is probably no type of Federal project, I care not what its nature may be, which receives the thorough, painstaking study and consideration to which a river and harbor project is subjected before it is authorized by Congress and the money is actually appropriated by Congress.

The local community initiates the project for the dredging or improving of the river or harbor in question, to serve the local community by providing low-cost water transportation, and to aid commerce and navigation at that point. The project is discussed in the community, the citizens themselves see the possibilities and advantages which would accrue, and therefore they agitate and advocate the project and local industries join with them in favoring it; then their representative in Congress is called upon and introduces a bill for a survey which is essential in the case of every new project. He presents the matter to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, which submits it to the United States Army Engineers having jurisdiction of rivers and harbors, who determine whether a survey is necessary and desirable and recommend accordingly. This results in the bill either being passed separately or included in the omnibus river and harbor bill, such as the pending measure, which includes numerous surveys. If the project is one for the modification or change of an existing project, then a resolution for review of prior reports is sufficient and the Representative sponsors such a resolution which is submitted to the Army engineers and later to the committee which passes it and refers it back to the Army engineers for the desired report.

The project is then referred to the district engineer, of whom there are 42 in the United States, embracing every section of the country. He calls a hearing in the local community and all those who might be interested are notified and afforded an opportunity to be heard and present testimony and arguments showing the need for the improvement and evidence in support of the merits of the project. It is a public hearing, the public is invited and welcomed, and all those who indicate a desire to be heard either for or against the project are heard. It is in the nature of a quasi-judicial hearing. The district engineer, after considering all the testimony, makes recommendations and refers the project to the division engineer, of whom there are 10 in all sections of the Nation, the last division engineer's office to be established being at Portland, Oreg., in charge of Col. T. M. Robins, who was transferred from San Francisco on account of the large Bonneville Dam project on the Columbia River, in Oregon and western Washington.

The division engineer reviews the recommendations and report of the district engineer. He then makes his report and recommendations and sends the project on to Washington, D. C., where it is again reviewed and considered by the Board of United States Army Engineers, at which time the Representative in Congress is again heard in behalf of the project. The Board consists of seven members. They have served as district and division engineers in various parts of the Nation and like them were honor students at West Point and took the special course at the engineering school at Fort Belvoir, Va., prior to serving as district and division engineers before being promoted to membership on the Board. The members of the Board have no local interest to serve whatsoever; they consider each project from a national viewpoint, how it will affect the navigation and commerce of the United States. They are far removed geographically from each project. These skilled engineers are absolutely divorced from politics. They are nonpolitical and nonpartisan and consider and decide the project solely upon its merits and demerits. The final decision rests with the Chief of the United States Army Engineers, who reviews the report and recommendations of the Board.

After the project has run the gantlet of the district engineer, division engineer, Board of Engineers, and Chief of Engineers, these reports are submitted to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, which hears the project de novo and listens to the presentation made by the local Congressman and representatives of the office of the United States Army Engineers and either approves or rejects the project, preparatory to its inclusion in an omnibus river and harbor bill. I repeat the assertion made at the outset that the scrutiny and searching investigation which I have described is probably not equaled or even approached by any other class of projects or expenditures of the Federal Government.

Mr. Chairman, not only are river and harbor projects based upon merit, but they also result in a greater proportionate expenditure for labor, direct and indirect, than almost any other class of public-works projects. To substantiate and prove this fact I call attention to the following statement prepared under the direction of Maj. Gen. E. M. Markham, Chief of Engineers, United States Army, furnished to me under date of June 25, 1937. The total percentage, direct and indirect, of labor costs ranges from 78.5 to 87.9 percent, demonstrating conclusively the soundness and desirability of river and harbor projects as labor-employment projects.

The statement of General Markham referred to is as follows:

Percentages of labor costs, direct and indirect, to total cost for work completed with Government plant and hired labor by the Corps of Engineers, U. S. Army, between September 1933 and June 30, 1936

	Dredging, regular funds	Dredging, N. I. R. A. and P. W. A. funds	Operating and care of canals, regular funds	Dike construction, N. I. R. A. and P. W. A. funds	Revetment construction, N. I. R. A. and P. W. A. funds	Lock and dam construction, regular funds	Levee construction, regular funds
1. Direct labor:
Labor used in construction including plant operation	29.7	33.5	57.2	31.9	34.6	30.0	34.0
Labor used in plant repairs	12.7	11.3	3.8	4.4	3.8	4.0	10.0
Labor used in surveys, superintendence, and overhead	9.0	6.0	7.2	5.4	6.8	7.2	9.0
Miscellaneous services							3.5
Total, direct labor	51.4	50.8	68.2	41.7	45.2	41.2	56.5
2. Indirect labor:
Material and supplies used in construction	18.0	19.3	17.5	35.8	33.7	32.9	14.0
Material and supplies used in plant repairs, etc	9.4	9.0	2.2	2.3	2.1	2.8	5.6
Miscellaneous supplies							2.4
Total, indirect labor	27.4	28.3	19.7	38.1	35.8	35.7	22.0
3. Total direct and indirect labor	78.8	79.1	87.9	79.8	81.0	76.9	78.5
4. Other costs:
Basic materials	13.5	13.3	9.2	17.2	15.7	16.1	10.5
Depreciation	7.7	7.6	2.9	3.0	3.3	7.0	11.0
Total other costs	21.2	20.9	12.1	20.2	19.0	23.1	21.5
Total	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FORAND] such time as he may desire.

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Chairman, I am happy, indeed, on my first occasion in the Well of this House, to pay my respects to the genial chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD].

I heartily subscribe to what has been said here today by my colleagues in praise of the qualities and virtues of Judge MANSFIELD.

When I first came to Congress in January I was to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD] absolutely unknown; but upon approaching him with reference to projects within my district, one the deepening and widening of the channel of the Providence River and Harbor, and the second a preliminary survey of Warren River and Barrington Harbor, he practically took me by the hand and led me to the point where both these projects are included in this bill. I want to express my thanks to the gentleman from Texas for his courtesy.

Mr. Chairman, the deepening and widening of the channel in the Providence River and Harbor is a matter of deep interest to the State of Rhode Island and to its business. This bill provides for a channel 35 feet deep and generally 600 feet wide from deep water in the upper Narragansett Bay to the turn below Fields Point, from which point the channel would continue at a depth of 35 feet, and would widen up to 1,700 feet to Fox Point.

At the present time the channel is only 30 feet deep and cannot accommodate the larger steamers which could be used to advantage to deliver petroleum products to terminals in Providence Harbor.

The deepening and widening of the channel as proposed in this bill has been recommended by the Army engineers, who have evaluated the benefits to accrue from such improvements at $195,000 annually, which, I believe, fully justifies the expenditure of $1,580,000 as provided in this bill.

The city of Providence, a city of nearly 300,000 inhabitants, is the principal port of the State of Rhode Island. The record shows that in 1934 the commerce of the harbor, exclusive of cargo in transit, amounted to nearly 6,000,000 tons. This is high-class commerce.

It may be noted here that Providence is a distributing center for petroleum products for a considerable area in New England and provides, in addition to the regular commercial terminals, a very fine public terminal on which in excess of $2,000,000 has been spent by the local community. Commodities received and shipped through Providence Harbor include coal, both anthracite and bituminous, coke, petroleum products, lumber, metals, chemicals, sand, stone, coal tar, and freight packages with a value during 1935 in excess of $143,000,000, of which amount nearly $2,000,000 was foreign commerce. There are 23 terminals already doing business on the harbor's 4½ miles of frontage, included in which are 7 petroleum products terminals with a total of 5,000 linear feet of berthage, all with adequate storage facilities and including 1 refinery with pipe line distributing to Worcester and Springfield, Mass. There are 3 lumber terminals with a total berthage of 2,450 feet and adequate back storage and five wholesale and retail coal terminals, each averaging more than 600 feet of berthage and all supplied with storage and trans-shipping facilities. One package freight steamer line, Providence to New York, has about 1,000 feet of berthage, and the local gas company owns and uses about 625 feet. All of these terminals are privately owned and not open to public use. There is a railroad pier with 1,925 feet of berthage with rail and unloading facilities. A terminal warehouse pier, the State pier, and the municipal wharf are open to use on equal terms to all. The State pier is a modern structure, 120 feet wide and 600 feet long, with transfer shed, dock storage, and about 4 acres of general storage.

The municipal wharf at Fields Point is a quay wall about 3,000 feet long, of which 800 feet is open for general use and the balance leased. Closed and open storage, crane service, and rail sidings are available. A project is now on foot for an extension of the municipal wharf to provide greater facilities. This project, it is estimated, will cost approximately $2,000,000.

In view of the great amount of commerce using the port of Providence and the fact that the city of Providence and the State of Rhode Island have shown through the expenditures of large sums of money their willingness and desire to cooperate with the Federal Government in the further development of this great port, I sincerely hope that this bill will pass and that the deepening and widening of the channel in the Providence River and Harbor will become an accomplished fact in the not distant future.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. ELLIOTT] such time as he may desire.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Chairman, we have under consideration today the Rivers and Harbors Act of 1937, one section of which deals in a very important and substantial manner with the Central Valley project of California. For more than 25 years I have had direct personal opportunity at the very door of my home to watch the effect of the creeping paralysis of water shortage on highly developed lands in great areas of the Central Valley of California. Tulare County, Calif., in which is my home, is one of the counties most acutely affected by this water shortage. Likewise, large parts of Kern County, to the south, and of Fresno and Madera Counties, to the north, as well as Kings County, on the west, face the certainty of reverting from splendidly developed areas contributing enormously to the annual national income by the production of specialized crops, to desert or pasture, unless additional water is brought to their parched lands. I know from personal observation over many years, as well as from studies of official reports, that unless the Central Valley project is brought to completion so as to furnish this additional water, the ensuing 10 years will, in the counties I have named, with mathematical certainty, eliminate from 200,000 to 400,000 acres of these developed lands from production. Already the doom of economic extinction and abandonment due to failure of water supply has fallen upon approximately 50,000 acres.

This presents only the picture as to the southern part of the Central Valley of California, which southern part is called the San Joaquin Valley. In the northern part, called the Sacramento Valley, situations equally as acute but of a different nature exist. In many years floods of devastating extent sweep this area. These floods carry to the sea and waste water, vast quantities of water, constituting the most precious natural resource of California. On their way to the sea in seasons of flood, which occur in the winter or early spring, these floods ravage the countryside, doing great harm. Millions of dollars have been spent by the United States and the State of California in efforts to control these floods, and that money has been in the main wisely expended, but the peak floods of the Sacramento River still remain uncontrolled above certain stages of flow, which higher stages occur all too frequently. Then, when the floods have subsided and the long dry summer comes, as it comes every year in California, the draft on the diminishing flow of both the Sacramento and San Joaquin Rivers for irrigation so reduces the flow of those rivers that their combined outflow into upper San Francisco Bay through the delta channels at the mouths of these rivers becomes too weak to hold back the salt waters creeping up those delta channels by tidal action from San Francisco Bay. Those delta channels traverse an area of 400,000 acres of the most fertile lands in the United States. By way of example, I may state that from these delta lands comes more than 90 percent of all the canned asparagus consumed in the United States. The creeping paralysis of salt water intrusion into that delta is slowly but steadily extinguishing forever the productive fertility of thousands of its best acres. I say forever. Once those lands become impregnated with salt there is no known method of redeeming them.

The cause of all this is the inequality of the distribution of the waters which nature supplies annually to California. Three-fourths of the annual supply in the shape of rain and snow which falls upon the State comes to the northern one-fourth of the State. Three-fourths of the irrigable lands of the State lie south of that heavily watered area. The remedy for this maldistribution of water supply is the Central Valley project.

It has required nearly 20 years of investigation, negotiation, and study to formulate the design and plan of the Central Valley project and bring it to where it is now—ready for construction. California has spent more than $1,000,000 from its treasury in those studies, and the United States has contributed the detailed efforts of its Army engineers and Reclamation engineers. Never has any water project been so exhaustively studied from every angle in advance, and never has any such project been so unanimously approved. There is not one dissent from either Federal or State engineers in approving it, and it bears the official approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and finally of the President of the United States.

Twenty years have been a long time to work on preliminaries to construction. More years cannot be spared for that purpose. The need is now to press forward with construction to the full limit of speed commensurate with economical operations. At best the life-giving water to be supplied by the completed project will arrive too late to avert a vast amount of irretrievable loss.

Of course there are and will be a great number of problems both of engineering and law to solve in connection with the building of the Central Valley project. Some of these problems have already delayed the start of construction on one or two units of the project.

What is urgently needed is to vest in the Bureau of Reclamation such powers and authorization as are necessary to enable it to attack and solve these problems with all its strength in the way they must be solved—justly, but promptly. That power and authority will be vested in the Reclamation Bureau by the provisions of the Rivers and Harbors Act of 1937, now before this House. I cannot find words to convey to you with what prayerful anxiety thousands of people in California whose whole life's efforts and savings have gone into the development of the lands which the Central Valley project will save, are awaiting the decision of this Congress on this act.

May I, in conclusion, summarize a few vital facts as to the Central Valley project.

First. It is not in any sense a promotion scheme for the development of new lands. It is a rescue project to save lands already developed.

Second. The waters from this project will produce almost entirely specialized crops, scarcely in competition with any other parts of the United States, such as grapes, figs, walnuts, vegetables, and citrus fruits. Other crops that may be produced under the project are marketed at a time when there is little or no competition between them and similar crops from other areas. There need, therefore, be no fear that the Central Valley project will add to the problem of surplus in agricultural products. No better evidence of this need be furnished than the fact that after exhaustive investigation the project was officially endorsed by the last national convention of the American Farm Bureau Federation.

Third. The project is and will be absolutely self-liquidating and will repay to the United States Treasury within a reasonable term of years every dollar used from that Treasury for its construction. There is a market and a demand now for every kilowatt of electric energy and every drop of water to be made available by the project, more than sufficient to guarantee by firm contracts repayment of the construction costs.

Fourth. Every aspect, engineering, legal, economic, and financial, of the project has been checked and rechecked by Federal and State agencies. They are unanimous in their approval of the project as a whole, unanimous in urging the pressing necessity for its early construction.

The plans are now being completed, the engineers and the workmen have started, the only obstacle remaining is clear and definite authorization from this Congress to the Reclamation Bureau to go ahead. Let us not seal the doom of more fertile acres in California by withholding that authorization another day. [Applause.]

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, as there are no further requests for time, I ask that the bill be read for amendment.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent, inasmuch as there are no controversial matters in the first 12 pages of the bill, these pages including the names of the project, that the reading of the first section of the bill be dispensed with, but that it be printed in the RECORD at this point; that then the committee amendments may be offered at the proper places on each page, and after they are disposed of, if there are any other amendments, either to strike out or to insert, that these amendments be in order. I do this to expedite consideration of the bill.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, the gentleman's request is confined to the first section of the bill ending on page 12?

Mr. PARSONS. The gentleman is correct. Section 2 contains the matters that might be controversial.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, as I understand the gentleman's request, it does not include the second section.

Mr. PARSONS. It gives an opportunity for any Member to offer any amendment he may wish, either to strike out or to insert.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Section 1 of the bill follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following works of improvement of rivers, harbors, and other waterways are hereby adopted and authorized, to be prosecuted under the direction of the Secretary of War and supervision of the Chief of Engineers, in accordance with the plans recommended in the respective reports hereinafter designated and subject to the conditions set forth in such documents; and that hereafter Federal investigations and improvements of rivers, harbors, and other waterways shall be under the jurisdiction of and shall be prosecuted by the War Department under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, except as otherwise specifically provided by act of Congress:

Chelsea River or Creek (Boston Harbor), Mass.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 24, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Town River, Quincy, Mass.; House Document No. 96, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Scituate Harbor, Mass.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 26, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Cuttyhunk Harbor, Mass.; House Document No. 81, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Edgartown Harbor, Mass.; Senate Commerce Committee Document, Seventy-fourth Congress;

New Bedford and Fairhaven Harbor, Mass.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 25, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Providence River and Harbor, R. I.; House Document No. 173, Seventy-fifth Congress;

New London Harbor, Conn.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 82, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Milford Harbor, Conn.; House Document No. 77, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Bridgeport Harbor, Conn.; House Document No. 232, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Stamford Harbor, Conn.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 29, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Greenport Harbor, N. Y.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 88, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Long Island Intracoastal Waterway, N. Y.; House Document No. 181, Seventy-fifth Congress;

New York Harbor: Ambrose, Anchorage, and Hudson River Channels; Senate Commerce Committee Document, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Fire Island Inlet, N. Y.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 33, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Newtown Creek, N. Y.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 4, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Irvington Harbor, N. Y.; House Document No. 244; Seventy-fifth Congress;

Raritan River, N. J.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 74, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Lemon Creek, Staten Island, N. Y.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 27, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Cohansey River, N. J.; Senate Commerce Committee Document, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Barnegat Inlet, N. J.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 85, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Delaware River between Philadelphia, Pa., and Trenton, N. J.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 90, Seventy-fourth Congress;

St. Jones River, Del.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 18, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Mispillion River, Del.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 83, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Rock Hall Harbor, Md.; House Document No. 204, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Island Creek, Md.; House Document No. 75, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Waterway from Little Choptank River to Choptank River, Md.; House Document No. 91, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Cambridge Harbor, Md.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 7, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Fishing Bay, Md.; House Document No. 186, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Nanticoke River, Md.; House Document No. 242, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Wicomico River, Md.; Senate Commerce Committee Document, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Upper Thoroughfare, Deals Island, Md.; House Document No. 76, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Crisfield Harbor, Md.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 2 and House Document Document No. 72, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Cypress Creek, Md.; House Document No. 161, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Northeast River, Md.; House Document No. 248, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Back Creek, Anne Arundel County, Md.; House Document No. 73, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Fishing Creek, Md.; House Document No. 241, Seventy-fifth Congress;

St. Jeromes Creek, Md.; House Document No. 174, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Neale Sound, Md.; House Document No. 159, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Chincoteague Bay, Va.; House Document No. 233, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Onancock River, Va.; House Document No. 74, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Coan River, Va.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 30, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Hoskins Creek, Va.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 8, Seventy-fifth Congress;

James River, Va.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 68, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Deep Creek, Va.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 76, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Lafayette River, Va.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 5, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Cashie River, N. C.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 31, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Pamlico and Tar Rivers, N. C.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 22, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Waterway connecting Pamlico Sound and Beaufort Harbor, N. C.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 92, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Bay River, N. C.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 72, Seventy-fourth Congress, and House Document No. 185, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Morehead City Harbor and Beaufort Inlet, N. C.; Senate Committee Document, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Inland Waterway, Beaufort, N. C., to the Cape Fear River, including waterway to Jacksonville, N. C.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 16, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Cape Fear River, N. C., above Wilmington; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 17, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Intracoastal Waterway from Cape Fear River, N. C., to Savannah, Ga.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 6, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Ashley River, S. C.; House Document No. 449, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Waterway between Beaufort, S. C., and St. Johns River, Fla.; Senate Commerce Committee Document, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Intracoastal Waterway from Jacksonville to Miami, Fla.; House Document No. 180, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Melbourne Harbor, Fla.; House Document No. 390, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Miami Harbor, Fla.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 86, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Caloosahatchee River and Lake Okeechobee Drainage Areas, Fla.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 28, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Charlotte Harbor, Fla.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 95, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Sarasota Bay, Fla.; House Document No. 80, Seventy-fifth Congress;

St. Petersburg Harbor, Fla; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 71, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Steinhatchee River, Fla.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 87, Seventy-fourth Congress;

St. Marks River, Fla.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 77, Seventy-fourth Congress;

St. Josephs Bay, Fla.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 10, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Carabelle Bar and Harbor, Fla.; House Document No. 184, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Pensacola Harbor, Fla.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 96, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Mobile Harbor, Ala.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 69, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Vinton Waterway, La.; House Document No. 160, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Waterway from White Lake to Pecan Island, La.; House Document No. 78, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Sabine-Neches Waterway, Tex.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 3, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Louisiana and Texas Intracoastal Waterway, La. and Tex.; Senate Commerce Committee Document, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Brazos Island Harbor, Tex.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 32, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Ouachita and Black Rivers, Ark. and La.; Senate Commerce Committee Document, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Black River, Wis.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 23, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Indiana Harbor and Canal, Ind.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 19, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Ontonagon Harbor, Mich.; Senate Commerce Committee Document, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Cornucopia Harbor, Wis.; Senate Commerce Committee Document, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Green Bay Harbor, Wis.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 73, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Big Suamico River, Wis.; House Document No. 468, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Manitowoc Harbor, Wis.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 80, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Pensaukee Harbor, Wis.; House Document No. 478, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Harbors at Washington Island, Wis.; House Document No. 90, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Grand Haven Harbor, Mich.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 1, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Frankfort Harbor, Mich.; House Document No. 511, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Detroit River, Mich.; House Document No. 205, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Cheboygan Harbor, Mich.; House Document No. 134, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Saginaw River, Mich.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 21, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Put in Bay, Ohio; House Document No. 132, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Rocky River Harbor, Ohio; House Document No. 70, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Cleveland Harbor, Ohio; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 84, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Fairport Harbor, Ohio; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 79, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Ashtabula Harbor, Ohio; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 78, Seventy-fourth Congress;

San Diego Harbor, Calif.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 89, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Newport Bay, Calif.; Senate Commerce Committee Document, Seventy-fifth Congress;

San Francisco Harbor, Calif.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 12, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Humboldt Bay and Harbor, Calif.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 11, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Crescent City Harbor, Calif.; Senate Commerce Committee Document, Seventy-fifth Congress;

San Joaquin River, Calif.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 15, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Suisun Channel, Calif.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 97, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Old River, Calif.; House Document No. 151, Seventy-fifth Congress;

De Poe Bay, Oreg; House Document No. 202, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Skipanon Channel, Oreg.; House Document No. 201, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Columbia River between the mouth of the Willamette and Vancouver, Wash.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 81, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Columbia and Lower Willamette Rivers, below Vancouver, Wash., and Portland, Oreg.; House Document No. 203, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Westport Slough, Oreg.; House Document No. 79, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Elokomin Slough, Wash.; House Document No. 510, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Columbia River between Vancouver, Wash., and Bonneville, Oreg.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 94, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Bellingham Harbor, Wash.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 70, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Olympia Harbor, Wash.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 75, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Tacoma Harbor, Wash.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 91, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Douglas Harbor and Juneau Harbor, Alaska; House Document No. 249, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Wake Island; House Document No. 84, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Welles Harbor, Midway Island; House Document No. 49 and Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 9, Seventy-fifth Congress;

Guayanes Harbor, Puerto Rico; House Document No. 243, Seventy-fifth Congress;

St. Thomas Harbor, Virgin Islands; House Document No. 200, Seventy-fifth Congress;

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 15, strike out the word "Massachusetts:" and insert in lieu thereof "Massachusetts;".

Page 3, line 8, after the word "Waterway", insert the words "New York."

Page 6, after line 20, insert "Channel from Back Sound to Lookout Bight, N. C.; House Document No. 251, Seventy-fifth Congress."

Page 7, line 13, strike out "Congress." and insert "Congress;".

Page 11, after line 13, insert "Yaquina Bay and Harbor, Oreg.; Senate Commerce Committee Document, Seventy-fifth Congress."

Page 12, line 15, strike out "Douglas Harbor and."

Page 12, line 24, strike out "Islands:" and insert "Islands;".

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I offer a number of additional committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendments offered by Mr. MANSFIELD: On page 2, between lines 19 and 20, insert "Newport Harbor, R. I.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 36, Seventy-fifth Congress."

On page 3, between lines 11 and 12, insert "Flushing Bay and Creek, N. Y.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 35, Seventy-fifth Congress."

On page 7, between lines 10 and 11, insert "Shipyard River, S. C.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 38, Seventy-fifth Congress.

"Savannah River below Augusta, Ga.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 39, Seventy-fifth Congress."

On page 8, between lines 19 and 20, insert "Bayous Petit Anse, Tigre, and Carlin, La.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 40, Seventy-fifth Congress."

On page 8, after line 26, insert "Channel from Pass Cavallo to Port Lavaca, Tex.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 37, Seventy-fifth Congress."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 9, between lines 5 and 6, insert: "Mississippi River between Missouri River and Minneapolis, Minn.: The existing project is hereby modified in accordance with the recommendation of the district engineer in the report submitted in Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 34, Seventy-fifth Congress."

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, it might be well to have some discussion on the amendment just read, for it pertains to seepage on the Mississippi River and is a new proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I may say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. EICHER] that we are now on this seepage proposition and I want the Members of the House to understand it because it is a new proposition. It is something we have never done before. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman to explain it to the House.

Mr. EICHER. Mr. Chairman, this is a provision to take care of the seepage, backwater, and extra pumping-cost damages that will be caused to about 25 drainage and levee districts along the Mississippi River between Muscatine, Iowa, and St. Louis, Mo., by reason of the locks and dams of the 9-foot channel. It is a matter that has been under consideration by the Rivers and Harbors Committee for 7 or 8 years, I would say, and has been given very careful thought and study. The amendment that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD] just referred to has been adopted by the Rivers and Harbors Committee upon the recommendation of the Corps of Engineers of the War Department. I do not believe that the House, with the confidence it has in the conscientious study that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors always gives to matters that are presented to it for consideration, cares to have me take time to go into a detailed explanation of what this involves. Numerous and exhaustive hearings have been held by the committee, which are available to Members who may wish to inform themselves more fully.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment. The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROBERTSON: Page 2, line 3, after the words "acts of Congress", insert "which said investigation and improvements shall include a due regard for wildlife conservation."

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, it frequently occurs in river work and construction of dams that by due regard to conservation interests a dual purpose can be served. I do not imagine that anybody will have any objection to the insertion of the words carried in this amendment, that in formulating plans hereafter for the improvement of rivers and harbors the War Department, through the Secretary of War and the Corps of Engineers, shall give due regard to conservation interests.

I have in mind one particular example. During the war they wanted to expedite shipping in the Albemarle-Chesapeake Canal and they took out the locks. The salt water and the pollution from the harbor seeped into the Sound and into Back Bay, two of the greatest ducking areas on the Atlantic Coast were seriously affected. Conditions became so bad in those areas that the Government had to put the locks back, and it cost $500,000 to restore them. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] reminds me that it took us 7 years to get them put back, during which time a great industry and a great natural resource was almost wiped out in that area.

I have shown this amendment to the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors who has no personal objection. I do not imagine any member of the committee will object, and I feel it may add something to the administrative value of this measure. The Corps of Engineers of the War Department is a brilliant organization and one of high efficiency. It will be encouraging to the conservationist of the country to have it give due regard to wildlife conservation in connection with its river and flood-control work.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, as one member of the committee, may I say I am very much in sympathy with this amendment, and I feel it will in no way hinder the river and harbor work. I feel it is a very constructive step toward the conservation of wildlife.

While it is true the committee did not consider this amendment, I am sure there is no objection from any member of the committee to the amendment.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I favor the amendment offered to this omnibus river and harbor bill by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON]. I desire, however, to protest the present policy of the War Department in connection with the acquisition of lands on the upper Mississippi River between the mouth of the Missouri River and the cities of St. Paul and Minneapolis. I do not know whether all the Members of the House are familiar with the vastness of the 9-foot channel project on the Mississippi or not. It will cost the Federal Government about $148,000,000 before it is complete—the construction program extending over a period of years. Most naturally it is necessary for the engineers to acquire outright or to obtain flowage rights in order to have some place for the water to go when this 9-foot channel project is placed in operation, it being, incidentally, a lock and dam project, from the head of the river down to just above St. Louis.

The Corps of Engineers, in my opinion, has been rather ruthless in their acquisition of land that is very suitable for conservation purposes. In the district I represent a good many citizens have invested large sums of money for camps, hunting lodges, and places to go fishing and are perfectly willing in most cases to grant the United States Government flowage rights upon the payment of $1, and take their chance with reference to where the stage of water will be when the project is completed. But apparently that is contrary to the fixed policy of the Corps of Engineers, and I may say in passing I have no criticism of the Corps of Engineers and their fine work.

I think it is one of the outstanding departments of the Federal Government, but I disagree with their policy of taking over this land and not permitting owners to hold it and use it mostly for recreational purposes. In some cases where condemnation proceedings to take over this land used for recreational purposes has been started, the Corps of Engineers is cutting down all the trees, tearing out all of the underbrush, and every element that we commonly know in this country as suitable for wildlife conservation.

I think the Congress should take cognizance of this and action commenced in this body along the line suggested by the gentleman from Virginia to the end that what little wildlife we have in the Middle West may be preserved, and the owners of these hunting lodges and fishing shacks, if they may be called that, be permitted to retain their holdings and enjoy wildlife sports as they have for many, many years. I hope, therefore, that the committee will adopt the amendment now pending before the committee, because I believe it is a step in the right direction. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PETERSON of Florida: Page 8, after line 15, insert the following:

"Clearwater Harbor, Fla., including Big Pass, 12 feet deep by 200 feet wide, provided local interests guarantee maintenance satisfactory to the Chief of Engineers."

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, this involves an improvement costing only $31,500. The situation actually is this: Upon a survey it has been determined that the improvement will be of great benefit, and that the expenditure of this amount is justifiable questioning only this fact: The cost of cutting the pass is the small amount I have mentioned, but it was thought by the Corps of Engineers that in order to prevent the cut from silting it would be necessary to have jetties built, which would cost $175,000. However, in the report of the Board of Engineers it is stated that it is conceivable the silting might be gradual over a period of time. This report came in only 2 days after this bill was reported by the committee, so we have not had time to have the necessary resurvey. However, in order not to embarrass the Committee, to be fair, and to show our interest in this project, in the amendment which I have proposed I have provided the following conditions, "Provided local interests guarantee maintenance satisfactory to the Chief of Engineers."

This project is a needed improvement. As a matter of information to the House the F. E. R. A. built a fish-canning and processing plant there, which, according to the report, will employ workers to the number of between 300 and 400. However, the channel is such that deep-draft fish boats cannot get into the harbor.

The amount involved is only $31,500. We are willing to guarantee any form of maintenance the Chief of Engineers wants, and I have so provided in this amendment. We would also contribute a part of the cost. I sincerely trust the House will agree to the amendment.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Yes.

Mr. DONDERO. Is the condition the gentleman sets up satisfactory to the Corps of Engineers?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. They think the cut will silt in, but they do not know over how long a period of time.

Mr. DONDERO. Perhaps this suggestion may solve the gentleman's problem: Wait until the bill reaches the Senate, see if a report cannot be obtained from the Corps of Engineers, and then ask that the amendment be added when this bill reaches the Senate for consideration.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I think the engineers have made a report.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Yes. The report is adverse, based upon supposition that the maintenance cost might be too great, and that protecting jetties would be needed. Frankly, the Corps of Engineers think it is too big an undertaking for us to attempt the maintenance of this channel, but my people are willing to maintain it and are willing to guarantee it. We will make the form of guaranty acceptable to the Army engineers.

I hope you will agree to this amendment.

Mr. CARTER. Has this matter ever been considered by the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. No; not formally. The report came in 2 days after the bill was reported by the committee. Frankly, the report is adverse. I do not mean to tell the Committee it is not, but the improvement is needed and this is recognized in the report, and the silting may be gradual.

Mr. CARTER. Then the gentleman is asking the Committee to agree to his amendment in face of the fact the gentleman has had an adverse report on his project and the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has never seen the gentleman's proposal at all. Is this the situation?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. The rivers and harbors bill was reported out before the report of the Army engineers was received. The proposed amendment was submitted to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. CARTER. Yes; but the Committee on Rivers and Harbors considered a number of proposals which came in after the bill was reported. I think the gentleman is making a most unreasonable request when he comes in with an adverse report on a proposal which has never been considered by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and asks this committee to insert in the rivers and harbors bill an amendment covering his proposal. I sincerely trust the Committee will not establish a precedent of this kind.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. They were favorable reports, as I understand. The adverse report is based solely on the question of maintenance. Other passes are not jettied. Our engineers and the district engineers approve. Time alone will show, and we feel so sure that we will guarantee any form of maintenance the committee wants to write into the amendment.

I hope you will vote for the amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the law provides that in making up rivers and harbors bills we shall first submit a survey to the Corps of Engineers of the War Department. They go upon the ground, make a thorough investigation, and report back every fact, with their recommendation either for or against the proposed improvement. After this is done, the committee goes further and holds most thorough investigations upon the proposals. We do not even adopt every project upon which the engineers report favorably, but we have never and cannot under the law report a project which has not been favorably reported upon by the engineers.

To abolish this rule will be to go back to the old pork-barrel schemes of 40 years ago, and the whole program will come into disgrace not only here but in the eyes of the country at large. We are getting a fairly clean program of river and harbor improvements now, and we have done so only by adhering strictly to the law. I have two projects in my district upon which I have unfavorable reports, both of which are far superior to the one now under consideration. I am not asking that they be put into this rivers and harbors bill, because it would be inconsistent for me to do so. I am not going to break the rule, and I hope the House will not break the rule and override the law. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PETERSON].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of sections 2, 3, and 4, beginning at the top of page 13 and ending with line 7, on page 23, may be dispensed with and this portion of the bill printed in the RECORD, and that following the consideration of the committee amendments, amendments which any Member may desire to offer may be considered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARSONS. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. We have a number of surveys to add.

Mr. PARSONS. I am including them in this request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The sections of the bill referred to are as follows:

SEC. 2. That the $12,000,000 recommended for expenditure for a part of the Central Valley project, California, in accordance with the plans set forth in Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 35, Seventy-third Congress, and adopted and authorized by the provisions of section 1 of the act of August 30, 1935 (49 Stat. 1028, at 1038), entitled "An act authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes", shall, when appropriated, be available for expenditure in accordance with the said plans by the Secretary of the Interior instead of the Secretary of War: Provided, That the transfer of authority from the Secretary of War to the Secretary of the Interior shall not render the expenditure of this fund reimbursable under the reclamation law: Provided further, That the entire Central Valley project, Calif., heretofore authorized and established under the provisions of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 (49 Stat. 115) and the First Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1936 (49 Stat. 1622), is hereby reauthorized and declared to be for the purposes of improving navigation, regulating the flow of the San Joaquin River and the Sacramento River, controlling floods, providing for storage and for the delivery of the stored waters thereof, for the reclamation of arid and semiarid lands and lands of Indian reservations, and other beneficial uses, and for the generation and sale of electric energy as a means of financially aiding and assisting such undertakings and in order to permit the full utilization of the works constructed to accomplish the aforesaid purposes: Provided further, That, except as herein otherwise specifically provided, the provisions of the reclamation law, as amended, shall govern the repayment of expenditures and the construction, operation, and maintenance of the dams, canals, power plants, pumping plants, transmission lines, and incidental works deemed necessary to said entire project, and the Secretary of the Interior may make and enter into repayment contracts with the Water Project Authority of the State of California and other necessary contracts, and may acquire by proceedings in eminent domain, or otherwise, all lands, rights-of-way, water rights, and other property necessary for said purposes: And provided further, That the said dam and reservoirs shall be used, first, for river regulation, improvement of navigation, and flood control; second, for irrigation and domestic uses; and, third, for power.

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of improving navigation, controlling floods, regulating the flow of streams, providing for storage and for delivery of stored waters, for the reclamation of lands, and other beneficial uses, and for the generation of electric energy as a means of financially aiding and assisting such undertaking, the project known as "Marshall Ford Dam, First Stage", Colorado River project, in Texas, is hereby authorized and adopted and all contracts and agreements which have been executed in connection therewith are hereby validated and ratified, and the Secretary of the Interior, acting through such agents as he may designate, is hereby authorized to construct, operate, and maintain all structures and incidental works necessary to such project, and in connection therewith to make and enter into any and all necessary contracts including contracts amendatory of or supplemental to those hereby validated and ratified.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause preliminary examinations and surveys to be made at the following-named localities, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for such purposes: Provided, That no preliminary examination, survey, project, or estimate for new works other than those designated in this or some prior act or joint resolution shall be made: Provided further, That after the regular or formal reports made as required by law on any examination, survey, project, or work under way or proposed are submitted no supplemental or additional report or estimate shall be made unless authorized by law: And provided further, That the Government shall not be deemed to have entered upon any project for the improvement of any waterway or harbor mentioned in this act until the project for the proposed work shall have been adopted by law:

Inland waterway between Merrimack River, Mass., and Hampton Harbor, N. H., by way of Black Rock Creek and Blackwater River.

Harbor of refuge at or in the vicinity of Swampscott, Mass.

Scituate Harbor, Mass.

Saugus River, Mass.

Nantasket (Hull) Gut, Mass.

Wellfleet Harbor, Mass.

Padanaram Harbor, at South Dartmouth, Mass.

Warren River and Barrington Harbor, R. I.

Connecticut River, below Hartford, Conn., including North Cove in the town of Old Saybrook.

Mianus River, Conn.

Westcott Cove, Conn.

Norwalk Harbor, Conn.

Greenwich Harbor, Conn.

Orowoc Creek, N. Y.

Huntington Harbor, N. Y.

Northport Harbor, N. Y.

Bronx Kills and Harlem River, N. Y.

Cedar Creek, N. J.

Inland waterway through Cumberland, Cape May, and Atlantic Counties, N. J., connecting the mouth of Portescue Creek with Atlantic City.

Waterway from Pleasantville, N. J., through Lake Bay, to deep water at Atlantic City, including connecting channel to Ocean City.

Choptank River, Md.

Duck Point Cove and Tedious Creek, Md.

Lower Thoroughfare, Deals Island, Md.

Town River, at Oxford, Md.

Hearns Creek, Dorchester County, Md.

Middle River and Dark Head Creek, Back River to Chesapeake Bay via Harts Island Narrows, and a cut-off channel from Gunpowder River to Chesapeake Bay via Spry Island Narrows, Md.

St. Patricks Creek, St. Marys County, Md.

Sloope Cove, an arm of Stoney Creek, Anne Arundel County, Md.

St. Catherines Sound, St. Marys County, Md.

Mill Creek, Anne Arundel County, Md.

Plum Point Creek, Calvert County, Md.

Channel to Island Creek, St. Georges Island, St. Marys County, Md.

Channel connecting Herring Bay via Rockhole Creek to West River, Anne Arundel County, Md.

Smallers Drain, Assateague Island, Va.

Channels at and near Hog Island, Va., with a view to their protection and preservation; also the protection of Hog Island and property thereon from erosion and storms.

Assateague Channel, Accomac County, Va., with a view to its protection and preservation; also the protection of Chincoteague Island and property thereon from erosion and storms.

Channel leading from Broadway Road, near Cashville, Accomac County, Va., to deep water in Onancock River.

Chincoteague Bay, Accomac County, Va., with a view to providing a protected anchorage and harbor for small boats at Chincoteague, Va.

Hulls Creek and Rogers Creek, Northumberland County, Va.

Greenvale (Fairweather) Creek, Lancaster County, Va.

Whitings Creek, Middlesex County, Va.

Meachims Creek, Middlesex County, Va.

Queens Creek, Mathews County, Va., to provide adequate channel to deep water in Hills Bay.

Garden Creek, Mathews County, Va.

Western shores of Chesapeake Bay from Plum Point, York County, Va., to the waters of Hampton Roads, with a view to protecting the navigable waters of Chesapeake Bay and Hampton Roads from shoaling.

Roanoke River, N. C., from Weldon to Williamston, with a view to improvement in the interest of navigation and flood control.

Contentnea Creek, N. C., from a point near Wilson to its confluence with the Neuse River, with a view to improvement in the interest of navigation and flood control.

Waterway, approximately 8 feet deep and 50 feet bottom width, from Crescent Lake, Fla., by way of Haw Creek to Bunnell, thence by way of a land cut to the sea at Flagler Beach.

Canaveral Harbor, Fla.

Channel from the Intracoastal Waterway to a point at or near Vero Beach, Fla.

Waterway from Punta Rasa, Fla., by way of the Caloosahatchee River and Canal, Lake Okeechobee, and St. Lucie Canal and River, to the Intracoastal Waterway at Stuart.

Hillsboro River, Fla., from the upper end of the existing project to Sulphur Springs.

Anclote River, Fla.

Pithlachascotee River, Fla.

Hudson Creek, Pasco County, Fla.

Weekiwachee River, Fla.

Florida River, Liberty County, Fla., and the Apalachicola River at and near the mouth of the Florida River.

Waterway between a suitable point on the channel from Apalachicola River to St. Andrews Bay, Fla., and a suitable point in St. Josephs Bay where the depth of said bay is 30 feet or more.

East Pass Channel from the Gulf of Mexico into Choctawhatchee Bay, Fla.

Valley Creek, Ala., to a point at or near Birmingham.

Back Bay of Biloxi, Miss.

Lake Pontchartrain, La., between the New Basin Canal and the Industrial Canal, for a harbor of refuge.

Deep-water channel from New Iberia to the Gulf of Mexico.

Sabine-Neches Waterway, Tex.

Texas City Channel, Tex.

Channel from Palacios, Tex., and Camp John A. Hulen to the Intracoastal Waterway.

Corpus Christi, Tex., with a view to its protection by the construction of breakwaters, sea walls, or jetties.

Carter Lake, Iowa and Nebr.

Meredosia Bay, Illinois River, Ill.

Tanners Creek, Dearborn County, Ind.

Gladstone Harbor, Mich.

Escanaba Harbor, Mich.

Miller Bay, Lake Winnebago, Wis.

Mona Lake (Lake Harbor) Channel, Mich.

Kenosha Harbor, Wis.

The Indiana shore of Lake Michigan, with a view to the establishment of a harbor at the most suitable site.

Harbors at Glen Haven and Glen Arbor, Mich.

The coasts of the Great Lakes, with a view to the establishment of harbors of refuge for light-draft vessels.

Grand Traverse Bay, Mich.

Put-in Bay, Ohio.

Ottawa River, Ohio.

Wilson Harbor, N. Y.

Upper Newport Bay, Calif.

Harbor at Playa Del Ray, Calif.

Monterey Harbor, Calif.

San Lorenzo River, Calif.

Sonoma Creek, Calif.

Benicia Harbor, Solano County, Calif.

Smugglers Cove (Short Sands Beach), Oreg.

Channel at Knappton, Wash.

Columbia River at and in the vicinity of Camas, Wash.

Unga Harbor, Alaska.

Seldovia Harbor, Alaska.
Waterway to connect Tenakee Inlet and Port Frederick on Chichagof Island, Alaska.
Wrangell Harbor, Alaska.
Craig Harbor, Alaska.
Grantley Harbor at Teller, Alaska.
Mount of Sinuk River, Alaska.
Elfin Cove, Alaska.
Myers Chuck Harbor, Alaska.
Jobos Harbor, Guayama, P. R.
Fajardo Harbor, Fajardo, P. R.
Guayanilla Harbor, Guayanilla, P. R.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 11, after the word "may", strike out the remainder of line 11 and all of lines 12 and 13, and insert the following: "enter into repayment contracts, and other necessary contracts, with State agencies, authorities, associations, persons, and corporations, either public or private, including all agencies with which contracts are authorized under the reclamation law."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, after line 14, insert:
"Beresford Creek, S. C., from river to Bridge Farm Wharves."

The amendment was agreed to.

Page 20, after line 4, insert:
"Waterway from Anclote River, by way of Lake Butler, to a point near Safety Harbor on Old Tampa Bay, Fla."

The amendment was agreed to.

Page 20, after line 20, insert:
"Gulfport Harbor, Miss.
"Bayou Legare, Miss., at the mouth of the Jordan River."

The amendment was agreed to.

Page 22, after line 9, insert:
"Collinsville Cut, Solano County, Calif.
"Werner Cut, near Werner, Contra Costa County, Calif."

The amendment was agreed to.

Page 23, after line 1, insert:
"Hilo Harbor, Hawaii, including consideration of methods to prevent shoaling by the flow of lava."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I offer a number of further committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendments offered by Mr. MANSFIELD: On page 16, between lines 10 and 11, insert:
"Boston Harbor, Mass."

The amendment was agreed to.

On page 17, between lines 2 and 3, insert:
"Rondout Harbor, N. Y.
"Great Kills, Staten Island, N. Y.
"Inland waterway from Delaware River to Chesapeake Bay, Delaware and Maryland, with a view to dredging a turning basin in the vicinity of the Chesapeake Cruising Club Docks at Chesapeake City."

The amendment was agreed to.

Page 17, line 20, strike out "Sloope" and insert "Eli."

The amendment was agreed to.

On page 18, between lines 4 and 5, insert:
"Pocomoke River, Md., from a point above Snow Hill to deep water in Pocomoke Sound.
"Inland waterway from Ocean City, Md., to Chincoteague Bay."

The amendment was agreed to.

On page 19, between lines 7 and 8, insert:
"Burwells Bay, Va.
"Southern branch of Elizabeth River, Norfolk Harbor, Va.
"Inland waterway from Norfolk, Va., to Beaufort Inlet, N. C., with a view to the protection of lands in the vicinity of the lock at Great Bridge against flooding by storm tides.
"Belhaven Harbor, N. C.
"Neuse River, N. C., with a view to improvement for navigation and flood control between the Johnson County line and New Bern."

The amendment was agreed to.

On page 19, between lines 23 and 24, insert:
"Channel from main channel of the Intracoastal Waterway to the mainland of Sebastian, Fla."

The amendment was agreed to.

On page 20, between lines 8 and 9, insert:
"Fenholloway River, Fla."

The amendment was agreed to.

On page 20, after line 24, insert:
"Mississippi River at and near New Orleans, La."

The amendment was agreed to.

On page 21, between lines 8 and 9, insert:
"Channel connecting San Antonio Bay, Tex., with the Gulf of Mexico."

The amendment was agreed to.

On page 21, between lines 21 and 22, insert:
"Petoskey Harbor, Mich."

The amendment was agreed to.

On page 22, between lines 8 and 9, insert:
"Noyo River, Calif., including harbor at the mouth thereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WARREN: On page 19, strike out lines 8, 9, and 10.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, it is quite evident that lines 8, 9, and 10, on page 19, were placed in the bill by mistake, as the survey for this river is now going on.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WARREN: Page 19, after line 7, insert the following paragraph:
"Channel leading from the southeasterly end of Rollinson Channel, N. C., to the wharves in front of the town of Hatteras, N. C."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, also the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, insert the following paragraph:
"Channel from Pamlico Sound through Pugh's Channel to the town of Rodanthe, N. C."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CARTER: After line 12, on page 22 insert the following:
"Alamitos Bay, Los Angeles, Calif."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. First of all, on behalf of the people of my district I wish to express my gratitude to the Rivers and Harbors Committee for the careful consideration given us in our part of Connecticut. We feel that the Rivers and Harbors Committee, so far as we are concerned, has done a fine, conscientious job, and, regarding other districts, too, I think that is the general feeling in the House.

Having said that, I call the attention of the Members of the House, and of course, respectfully, that of the chairman and members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, to a salient omission in the bill and that is the omission of an amount of money specifically designated to reopen the old closed railroad canal across New Jersey. I remind the committee that should anyone desire to navigate a pleasure craft or in fact any kind of a craft, inland, from New London, Conn., to Florida, that individual could complete that navigation with a small craft all the way from New London, Conn., to Florida, with the exception of a short strip of only 44 miles up and down the whole eastern seaboard of the United States, that is, 44 miles across the State of New Jersey. According to figures which I have, and which I believe to be correct, for the sum of $22,000,000—that is a lot of money, but think what we would get for it—those 44 miles across the State of New Jersey could be reopened and traffic could go inland all the way from New London, Conn., to Key West, Fla., and into the Gulf. But because of those 44 miles what must now be done? A craft must navigate outside in the Atlantic Ocean. Somebody may say that this takes only 2 hours.

This is true, but that craft in navigating during those 2 hours must navigate across waters, if it is lucky enough to do it, where the Morro Castle disaster took place, and where the Vestris disaster also took place. Turning the matter around positively, think what it would mean to the shipyards, think what it would mean to the resorts, and to the merchants up and down the Atlantic seaboard if those 44 miles could be reopened. I trust, and the people of my district hope, that before another river and harbor bill is brought before the Members of this House, $22,000,000, or if it can be done for less, so much the better, may be appropriated to reopen those 44 miles of closed canal. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS. Yes.

Mr. GREEN. I am in sympathy with the project mentioned by the gentleman. It is obvious that this New Jersey canal should be opened. Then there will be an inland waterway to Jacksonville, Fla., and on to Miami, and with the completion of the canal across Florida, then we will have with the completion of the canal to which the gentleman refers in New Jersey, an inland protected waterway all the way from Boston to the Rio Grande River.

Mr. PHILLIPS. That is correct.

Mr. GREEN. It is obvious that those two links will be constructed, and I am glad the gentleman favors it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment to ask a question of the chairman of the committee. It is my understanding that projects in connection with the Delaware River are being considered right now by the Army engineers. However, I do not see them listed among those surveys which are authorized. Can the chairman tell me if they have been authorized by prior acts?

Mr. MANSFIELD. In reply to the gentleman I will say that the river and harbor bill of 1935 embraced the surveys for those projects which are now being considered by the engineers of the War Department. They have not yet reported upon them and therefore they do not appear in the present bill. We will endeavor to consider them impartially when the reports come in.

In regard to the Raritan Canal, I join with the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. PHILLIPS] in his remarks. That lack of waterway across the State of New Jersey has been referred to as the "missing link" in the intercoastal waterway from Boston to Miami. However, that is also in the hands of the Army engineers. We have been working on that matter for years and years. They have submitted partial reports on several occasions, but the cost was so tremendously great that they have never been adopted. That canal was constructed many years ago by private interests. It fell into the hands of the Pennsylvania Railroad and, I now understand, belongs to the State of New Jersey, does it not?

Mr. PHILLIPS. Yes, sir; it does.

Mr. MANSFIELD. It is a complicated proposition.

In time a channel will be cut across New Jersey to connect the ports of Philadelphia and New York, not only for a barge canal but for a ship channel, and perhaps you may get it as soon as the gentleman from Florida gets his Florida ship canal. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made of the Ohio River and its tributaries to ascertain what pollutive substances are being deposited, directly or indirectly, therein and the sources and extent of such deposits, and with a view to determining the most feasible method of correcting and eliminating the pollution of these streams.

The survey herein authorized shall include comprehensive investigations and studies of the various problems relating to stream pollution and its prevention and abatement. In making these investigations and studies, and in the development and formulation of corrective plans, the Secretary of War may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, secure the cooperation and assistance of the Public Health Service, and may allot funds from the appropriation hereinafter designated to pay for such cooperation and assistance. The survey shall be completed as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, and the Secretary of War shall report the results thereof to the Congress, together with such recommendations for remedial legislation as he deems advisable.

The cost of the survey, and such incidental expenses as may be necessary in connection therewith, shall be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

SEC. 6. That all of that portion of Scajaquada Creek, Buffalo, N. Y., above a line 130 feet west of the west line of Niagara Street, be, and the same is hereby, declared to be a nonnavigable stream within the meaning of the Constitution and laws of the United States of America. That the right of Congress to alter, amend, or repeal this section is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, section 6 should be eliminated. A bill has already passed the House, reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, covering this matter. I ask that it be stricken from the bill.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out section 6.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BEITER: Beginning on page 24, line 8, strike out all of section 6.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, in making this request I might explain to the committee that at the time the City Council of the City of Buffalo requested Scajaquada Creek to be declared a nonnavigable stream I asked the War Department to draft a bill for me that I might present to the House. At the time two bills were drafted. One was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and the other was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I find that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce reported the bill on March 1, 1937, along with Report No. 332. It was on the House calendar and passed the House on March 15, 1937. It was reported in the Senate on April 29, 1937, and passed the Senate on May 3, 1937. It was approved on May 14, 1937, and is now Public Law No. 80. Therefore the legislation is unnecessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, section 6 having been stricken out necessarily changes the numbers of the following sections. I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may make all necessary corrections to correspond.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That the project for the maintenance and operation of the lock and dam at Little Callao Landing, mile 62, Big Sunflower River, Miss., be, and the same is hereby, abandoned. That the right of Congress to alter, amend, or repeal this section is hereby expressly reserved.

SEC. 8. That the project for improvement of the existing channel of that section of the Sabine-Neches Waterway, Tex., south and west of Harbor Island from a point opposite Orleans Street, in the city of Beaumont, Tex., to the junction of the main channel in the Neches River, be, and the same is hereby, abandoned. That the right of Congress to alter, amend, or repeal this section is hereby expressly reserved.

SEC. 9. That authority is hereby granted to the State of Oregon, acting through its highway department, and to the city of Eastside, Coos County, Oreg., a municipal corporation organized under the laws of the State of Oregon, to construct, maintain, and operate, at a point suitable to the interest of navigation, a dam and dike for preventing the flow of tidal waters into Willanch Slough in Coos County, Oreg.

Work shall not be commenced on such dam and dike until the plans therefor, including plans for all accessory works, are submitted to and approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War, who may impose such conditions and stipulations as they deem necessary to protect the interests of the United States.

The authority granted by this section shall terminate if the actual construction of the dam and dike hereby authorized is not commenced within 1 year and completed within 3 years from the date of the passage of this act. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 25, line 21, strike out the word "act" and insert the word "section."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. That authority is hereby granted to the State of Oregon, acting through its highway department, to the North Slough Drainage District, and to the North Slough Diking District, organized under the laws of the State of Oregon, to construct, maintain, and operate, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, a dam and dike for preventing the flow of tidal waters into North Slough in Coos County, Oreg., in township 24 south, range 13 west, Willamette meridian.

Work shall not be commenced on such dam and dike until the plans therefor, including plans for all accessory works, are submitted to and approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War, who may impose such conditions and stipulations as they deem necessary to protect the interests of the United States.

The authority granted by this act shall terminate if the actual construction of the dam and dike hereby authorized is not commenced within 1 year and completed within 3 years from the date of the passage of this act. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 17, page 26, strike out the word "act" and insert the word "section."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That the laws of the United States relating to the improvement of rivers and harbors, passed between March 4, 1913, until and including the laws of the first session of the Seventy-fifth Congress, shall be compiled under the direction of the Secretary of War and printed as a document, and that 600 additional copies shall be printed for the use of the War Department.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LUCAS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 7051, pursuant to House Resolution No. 241, he reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gross.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

On motion by Mr. MANSFIELD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Speaker, in the name of the people of the Twentieth Congressional District of California, I want to take this opportunity to thank the Members of the House and, in particular, the members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee for the consideration they have given the problem of dredging in San Diego Bay.

The Federal Government, with an investment of some $40,000,000 and an annual pay roll of almost half that much, is deeply interested in the proper development of my part of the country.

Because of our strategic location, San Diego always will be the southwestern outpost of our national-defense structure. The greatest minds of this country are aware of the value of a properly developed harbor in the first locality available within the continental limits of the United States north of the Panama Canal.

With only three natural harbors on the Pacific coast of the United States, we must ever guard most jealously, and conserve to the extent of our national ability, the superiority which the land-locked harbor of San Diego affords this Nation in its vital problem of national defense.

San Diego belongs to the Nation in an especial manner and in a more vital way than do most other sections of our great country. I am glad to see that San Diego's God-given advantages are recognized and that they receive the consideration to which their importance entitles them.

San Diego is proud to be of service to the Nation. It only asks that its natural advantages be fully developed for the benefit not only of its own citizens but for the greater benefit of all America. [Applause.]

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, the bill (H. R. 7493) entitled "An act making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes", insists upon its amendments to said bill, requests a conference with the House thereon, and appoints Mr. COPELAND, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. OVERTON, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. MCADOO, Mr. SHEPPARD, Mr. TOWNSEND, Mr. BRIDGES, Mr. MCNARY, and Mr. AUSTIN to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made in the Committee on the rivers and harbors bill and to include therein one or two excerpts from extraneous sources.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

NONMILITARY ACTIVITIES, WAR DEPARTMENT

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7493) making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the amendments of the Senate, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. SNYDER of Pennsylvania, DOCKWEILER, TERRY, STARNES, COLLINS, CANNON of Missouri, POWERS, and ENGEL.

INTERSTATE TRANSPORTATION AND SALE OF NATURAL GAS

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 242.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 242

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 6586, a bill to regulate the transportation and sale of natural gas in interstate commerce, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Michigan desire any time under the rule?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, as far as I know, there is no opposition to the rule or to the bill. Some Members on this side would like a few minutes to discuss the bill, but we do not care to take any time on the rule.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, this is a rule for the consideration of the so-called natural-gas bill. It is an open rule. The Rules Committee were informed that the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee were unanimous in their report.

I do not believe there is need for further discussion under the rule.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the rule.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6586) to regulate the transportation and sale of natural gas in interstate commerce, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6586, with Mr. FADDIS in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, as stated by the chairman of the Rules Committee, this bill was reported unanimously by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

The statistics of the last 12 years tell an amazing story in reference to the gas industry of the United States. Today we have over 50,000 wells, located in 24 States, furnishing gas to consumers in 35 States. There are about 8,000,000 consumers in these 35 States.

In 1934, 1,770,000,000,000 cubic feet of gas was produced in this country. For this gas the consumers paid $394,000,000; of which amount $260,000,000 was paid for gas transported in interstate commerce.

Today we have 65,000 miles of gas-main pipe lines in the United States. In 1930, 302,000,000,000 cubic feet of gas was transported in interstate commerce. The amount today is the figure I just stated. Today over 41.5 percent of the gas produced in the United States moves in interstate commerce.

The domestic rates paid by the consumers at the present time is: For domestic use, 74.6 cents per 1,000 cubic feet; for commercial use, 49.6 cents; and for industrial use, 16.9 cents.

From 1934 to March 1936; the Federal Trade Commission investigated the gas industry for the purpose of recommending legislation to Congress. Thirty-six of the thirty-eight interstate gas companies reporting to the Federal Trade Commission reported a ledger value of these companies of $1,600,000,000. This is the statistical background that gives the setting for this legislation.

The primary purpose of the pending bill is to provide Federal regulation, in those cases where the State commissions lack authority, under the interstate-commerce law. This bill takes nothing from the State commissions; they retain all the State power they have at the present time. This bill would apply to the transportation of natural gas in interstate commerce and to the sale of natural gas in interstate commerce for resale or public consumption.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. I yield.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Is there anything in this bill that would affect the relationship through which the large industrial consumer buys natural gas directly from the pipe-line company and not through a local distributing company or agency?

Mr. LEA. The question there involved is whether the purchase is for private consumption or resale to the public.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. It would be for private consumption.

Mr. LEA. If it is for private consumption, it would not be affected by this act. If it were for public consumption, the gas rate would be regulated.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. There is an industry in my district, I may say to the gentleman, which I understand buys natural gas directly from the pipe-line company. It has established its own connection. As I understand, this bill does not purport to regulate such a transaction or existing contracts of that nature.

Mr. LEA. Not unless it falls within the class of public consumption. A natural-gas company engaged in the transportation or sale of gas, as I have just indicated, is subject to regulation under this bill.

Mr. GREEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. I yield.

Mr. GREEVER. Do I understand from the gentleman's statement that where, for instance, each of two States has a public-service commission with jurisdiction of pipe lines this bill in no way affects their control of gas flowing through these pipe lines?

Mr. LEA. Well, it would depend on other circumstances. This bill would not affect the local distribution of gas, but it might affect the city-gate rate that the local company would pay if it bought from an interstate company.

Mr. GREEVER. Then it would affect it to that extent?

Mr. LEA. Oh, yes, indeed. So far as the interstate price is concerned, it may very materially affect it. The interstate price would be subject to regulation by the Federal Power Commission. The city-gate rates in an interstate shipment could be controlled by the Federal Power Commission under this bill.

Mr. GREEVER. In other words, it would take the power away from the State commission to that extent?

Mr. LEA. The State commission does not have that power now.

The object of this bill is to supply regulation in those cases where the State commission has no power to regulate.

There are, however, some situations defined in the bill to which this regulation does not apply. One is local distribution on the principle that where commerce passes in interstate commerce and reaches the point of broken package, the local State commission then has the regulatory power. That same general rule applies to the transportation and sale of gas. So this act does not affect the local distribution of gas. It affects the local consumer's price only by regulating the price at the city gates. The facilities for local distribution are not within the power of regulation provided in the bill.

The bill does not apply to the production and gathering of gas.

Every gas company will be permitted to go into territories without restriction, with two exceptions: One is in the case of exportation or importation of gas over international boundaries, it will be necessary under those circumstances to get a permit from the Power Commission before that transaction may be carried on; the other exception is where one company enters a territory occupied by another, permission from the Federal Power Commission will be necessary to conduct that class of business.

In the main, this is what might be called standardized legislation. There is nothing particularly novel or new in the provisions of the bill.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. In reference to the statement made just now, if a company wants to go into another territory, it must get permission from the Federal Power Commission?

Mr. LEA. To go into an already occupied territory.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. That eliminates competition, does it not?

Mr. LEA. There is no prior competition there. Before you can have competition in the same territory a permit must be secured from the Power Commission; but there is no general certificate of convenience and necessity required in order for a company to expand.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. Will not the effect of this bill be to limit the competition in any field, or in any State?

Mr. LEA. It will be left to the Federal Power Commission.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. And will not this regulation tend to increase the price to consumers?

Mr. LEA. No; it will not. The State commissions have been very strong in supporting this bill; believing it will save millions of dollars to the consumers of the country.

There are the usual provisions. Without attempting to go into detail, what I call usual provisions are those such as we find in all regulatory measures enacted by the Congress. This bill contains, for instance, administrative provisions; for rules affecting just and reasonable rates; for the power of the Commission to fix maximum or minimum rates or a specific rate after hearing; for the rule against discriminations and preferences as between consumers or localities; for the requirement that the schedules be kept open for public inspection; for the power of the Commission to suspend the rates where deemed unduly high. The bill covers the question of accounting, following standard lines; of giving the Commission the power to control the accounts, including the depreciation account; and of requiring the gas companies under the regulation of this bill to conform to those accounting practices.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOUSTON. Where two competing companies are in competition with one another in one community, is that under the State regulation?

Mr. LEA. That remains as at the present time, if they are already there.

Mr. HOUSTON. If one gas-distributing company gets its gas from out of the State and brings it in, and the other gets its gas from within the State, how does the bill affect those companies?

Mr. LEA. In attempting to fix the rates of the company using the interstate gas, the city-gate rate would be fixed by this Commission.

Mr. HOUSTON. It would be fixed at the city gate in either event?

Mr. LEA. No.

Mr. HOUSTON. The State regulatory body takes care of the company within the State?

Mr. LEA. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Let us assume a State where they have a public service commission now and a company that brings gas in from another State. Can the State's public service commission regulate the price?

Mr. LEA. They cannot regulate the interstate transportation. They cannot regulate the city gate price; but they can fix the local rate within the State.

The bill makes provision for complaints and provides for hearings and has the usual provisions in reference to the production of testimony and rehearings by the Commission on petition, court review of the orders of the Commission, and, a rule, that the findings of the Commission, if supported by substantial testimony, are conclusive upon courts in connection with questions that may be taken to the courts.

Those are what might be called the principal provisions of the bill.

Mr. HOOK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOOK. Will this in any way limit competition as between gas companies?

Mr. LEA. It will be subject to regulation by the Power Commission in every instance; whether or not one company may enter the territory of another, in a community already occupied, will be up to the Power Commission. But there is no exclusion of any company by law.

Mr. HOOK. It would be under the supervision of the Power Commission?

Mr. LEA. Yes. The Federal Power Commission has absolute supervision of rates within its jurisdiction.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOUSTON. I understood the gentleman to say a moment ago that the committee unanimously reported this bill.

Mr. LEA. Yes; they did.

Mr. HOUSTON. May I ask whether any opposition to the bill was indicated in the hearings; and if so, from what source it came?

Mr. LEA. Some of the representatives of the gas companies opposed the bill. Most of the discussion in criticism of the bill was in connection with the suggestions of certain amendments or changes. However, the committee worked out this bill, which seems to be pretty generally accepted without opposition.

Mr. HOUSTON. There is no opposition to speak of from any of the distributing companies, gathering companies, or pine-line companies?

Mr. LEA. No; they have taken the general attitude that while they do not advocate it, if we are going to have a bill, they have no particular objection to this bill.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LEA. Yes.

Mr. SACKS. In the operation under this bill, will the commission have the authority to order a cut in the rate, pending a hearing when it finds a rate is excessive?

Mr. LEA. It will.

Mr. SACKS. In other words, the commission can order a cut in the rate and then hold a hearing later, if it sees fit under the circumstances?

Mr. LEA. Yes; they have the 5 months' suspension rule.

The gentleman from Illinois, I believe, mentioned this matter a few moments ago. I have statements indicative of the attitude of the commissions of a number of the States, as expressed to the committee. For example, Mr. Booth, of the Illinois Commission, appeared before the committee and made the following statement:

> It is my opinion that if Congress does not confer upon the Federal Power Commission the power promptly to control interstate natural gas wholesale rates, the people of Illinois may be compelled to pay, during the next 10 years, from twenty to thirty-five million dollars in excessive charges.

I do not know that he is exactly right on the figures, but I mention this to show the attitude of the State commissions, as reported to the committee.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. Yes.

Mr. PHILLIPS. The gentleman stated a few minutes ago that no natural-gas company could come into a field already occupied by a company without a hearing by the Commission. Do I correctly understand that is the effect of this bill?

Mr. LEA. Yes.

Mr. PHILLIPS. How would that serve to keep down charges to the ultimate consumer? I should think it might keep charges up, due to the fact the monopoly was preserved.

Mr. LEA. Ordinarily the community wants the services performed by one company; because, in such a case, the people can have better service than they can have with the facilities of two companies going through the streets of the same community.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Suppose the company which wanted to come in would offer a cheaper rate?

Mr. LEA. The Commission has power to let them come in.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. When a company came in and offered to sell at a lower rate, would not the issue then be before the Commission as to which company was right, and would not the company already on the ground, but charging a higher rate, offer evidence that its rate was fair? Would not this issue then be submitted to the Commission?

Mr. LEA. Absolutely.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. Then, would not this tend to put the price higher all the time?

Mr. LEA. It is the duty of the Commission to allow a reasonable rate—reasonable to the consumer and reasonable to the company.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. The Commission would have power to deny to the company, which wanted to compete and sell at a lower rate, an opportunity to enter the field and sell at that lower rate?

Mr. LEA. The Commission decides the question from the viewpoint of the public interest and not from the viewpoint of the welfare of that company.

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. Yes.

Mr. VOORHIS. Is it not true that in any community where there is a duplication of public-service facilities, such as parallel gas mains, and so forth, inevitably the community must pay for this additional and unnecessary expense in higher charges before it gets through?

Mr. LEA. It does.

Mr. VOORHIS. Therefore, the only solution is the one suggested in this bill, namely, effective regulation of rates with one company?

Mr. LEA. Duplication means inferior service or, in the end, higher prices.

This act proposes Federal regulation of the transportation of natural gas in interstate commerce, which, in the final analysis, contemplates Federal regulation of indiscriminate interstate duplication of service, interstate service of inferior character, and fair and reasonable interstate rates.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WOLVERTON].

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this bill is to provide Federal regulation and control of the interstate transportation and sale of natural gas.

Over a period of years the need for this type of legislation has become increasingly apparent. The State regulatory bodies have wide and comprehensive jurisdiction to fix rates and otherwise regulate and control the sale of natural gas to consumers within the State but do not have any jurisdiction in fixing the rate to the distributing company or the municipality when the purchase of the gas is made from an outside source. This comes within the field of interstate commerce and the jurisdiction over such is denied entirely to the State regulatory bodies and lodged completely in the Federal Congress.

It can be readily seen that the price to be paid by the consumer depends largely upon the price the local distributing company or municipality has been required to pay to the outside producer. Therefore, if the consumer is to be given the benefit of purchasing gas at fair and reasonable rates there must be some regulation of the producing company engaged in the interstate transportation and sale of gas. It is therefore the purpose of this legislation to close the gap now existing between Federal and State regulation and control and confer upon the Federal Power Commission the right, duty, and authority to exercise such regulatory power in fixing a fair and reasonable rate for gas that is a part of interstate commerce. It seeks to give similar power to regulate and control interstate commerce in gas as now exists in State regulatory bodies with respect to transactions entirely within the States.

The enactment of this legislation is sought by the utility commissioners of the several States, by municipalities and States, and by the consuming public. It is meritorious and of a type that past experience has shown to be necessary in the public interest. There are also provisions within the proposed law that seek to provide some measure of conserving the great natural-gas fields from unnecessary use and consequent waste.

The bill has had careful study and consideration by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce during the last session of Congress and also at the present session. It has the unanimous approval of the membership of the committee and deserves the favorable consideration of the membership of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, I think the purposes of this bill have all been rather well stated, but possibly I can add a few words which may explain the purposes a little more clearly to the membership of the House.

In the past few years the interstate transportation of gas in large pipe lines at high pressure had been growing by leaps and bounds. Gas is brought from the producing areas in these pipe lines and sold at the city gates to the public utilities which distribute the gas to the consumers. It is obvious the distribution of the gas by the local distributing company is subject to State regulation and the interests of the consumers are protected by State regulation. However, the transportation of gas in interstate commerce in the pipe lines and its sale to the distributing companies for resale is not subject to State regulation, and as a result, we have had a situation under which the price charged the distributing company at the city gate has been fixed wholly by the judgment, discretion, or action of the interstate company. It is charged that in many cases that price is excessive. This bill seeks to regulate those prices.

Now, some question has been raised here about the possibility of setting up a monopoly under the provisions of this bill and that effects on price to the consumer arising out of competition might be destroyed. May I point out in this connection that the reason for this bill, the reason the cities and the consumers' representatives asked for this bill is that they say that competition has heretofore failed to bring the wholesale price down. In other words, competition has not operated to keep the price down and as a result they say to Congress, "This gap that has existed must be filled by the intervention of the Federal Government."

There is ample precedent for this sort of legislation, not only in other measures heretofore enacted by Congress affecting interstate activities of other similar utilities, but there is ample precedent in the action of the States by which they have undertaken to regulate rates of natural gas companies in intrastate business. The States, as I have suggested, have not been able heretofore to regulate the wholesale price in interstate commerce.

Competition in this regard has been ineffective, and as a result, even though the prices of the distributing company to the consumers have been kept within reasonable limits, insofar as the activities of the distributing company are concerned, real protection has not been available to the ultimate consumer, because in many instances the transportation company, transporting in interstate commerce, has charged a rate which is higher than is deemed fair and reasonable.

So it occurs to me this is an entirely proper field for governmental intervention.

The question was asked as to whether or not the price that might be charged to a manufacturer who buys direct from the transportation company would be affected by this bill. As I view it, the answer to that question is that this bill seeks only to reach those sales where the sale is for resale to the ultimate consumer. So a purchaser for industrial use, who bought the gas, not for resale, but for consumption in his own plant, would not be reached by the measure. Any purchase from an interstate carrier by a distributor for the purpose of resale for ultimate public consumption would be reached.

We have heretofore enacted in the Congress a bill to regulate the bituminous-coal industry. We have Federal regulation of the interstate transportation and sale of electrical energy. They all deal with public utilities or businesses said to be charged with a public interest. That is the reason this bill, dealing as it does with a competing commodity and a competing service, should, in my opinion, be passed to the end that the natural-gas industry shall be brought within the realm of Federal regulation so that the public interest and the interest of the ultimate consumer generally shall be protected.

My opinion is that the operations of the Federal Power Commission in applying this act will be in the regulation of rates downward, not in the regulation of rates upward, and I am inclined to believe that if this regulation is to be applied that the public interest will be served by putting into effect the certificates of convenience for which this bill provides, to the end that the companies coming under this bill, and to be regulated by it, may know that they may extend their facilities under the protection of this bill. In the long run such a provision will promote the public interest.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield.

Mr. HOUSTON. Where a distributing or pipe line or gathering company in interstate commerce brings the gas into a State and then sells at the city gates to a distributing company, which is their own company under a different name, would not this regulation have a tendency to lower the price rather than to raise it? As I understand, heretofore they can charge any rate they want at the city gates and the city or distributing company has to regulate their rates according to the prices they pay the carrier.

Mr. HALLECK. That is right.

Mr. HOUSTON. This bill would regulate that, and has it not been a further fact that in a great many instances where the carrier has been attempted to be regulated by the State, they have prevented that by saying that the Federal Government should do it, although heretofore we have not had any Federal Government regulation.

Mr. HALLECK. That is correct.

Mr. HOUSTON. And when the Federal Government attempts to do something along that line they say that it is a matter of State rights, but this bill will reach that entire situation.

Mr. HALLECK. I think the bill reaches what has heretofore been an unregulated field in interstate commerce, and, of course, in my opinion, the bill will reach exactly the situation to which the gentleman refers, otherwise there would be no excuse for its enactment.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is not this a bill that was originated about 2 years ago, or about the time the utility question was up for consideration, and this measure was not perfected at that time?

Mr. HALLECK. I think the principal agitation for the bill has arisen in the last few years, and probably as a result of the fact that in earlier years the gathering, transportation, and sale of natural gas was largely an intrastate matter. More recently many of the States that had a small supply are now without a local supply, and as a result the great end of the natural-gas business involves interstate commerce and transportation of the gas in interstate commerce.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is right. When an interstate company brings gas into a State and turns it over to a distributing company for industrial needs, it is regulated under this bill?

Mr. HALLECK. If they sell to the industrial user who is to use it rather than resell it, they are not reached by this bill; but if they sell to a distributor who distributes, say, to commercial users and domestic users, then that commercial use would be reached by this bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. What kind of a situation would we have if an intrastate company, a gas pipe line, a carrier in a State in competition with the other, would have to resell it to a distributor?

Mr. HALLECK. Of course, this bill would not reach it at all if it is intrastate. That would be without the realm of Federal regulation.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. If that is true, the interstate carrier would come under the control of the State regulatory body, if it became a distributor for State use.

Mr. HOUSTON. I guess that is right.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE].

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, the House should realize that the measure we are dealing with today is of extreme importance, more so than the attendance and the time taken in the discussion would seem to indicate. It is the culmination of one of the most far-reaching, intensive studies of the Federal Trade Commission I assume that that Commission ever conducted, and last year found a place in not identical language but very similar in the Rayburn bill, the famous holding-company bill, as part 3 thereof. Our committee eliminated part 3, as members will recall, and saved it for a separate measure reported out as it was last year, which was not considered by the House, but is here today in improved form.

Briefly I want to reply to the question, if I may supplement what the distinguished chairman of our committee said, of the gentleman from Kentucky as to what effect this bill will have in requiring certificates of necessity for an area already served. This bill means the same as in railroad regulation, that it is foolish to permit another railroad to come into an area already adequately served, charging rates under the regulation of a commission, such as the Federal Power Commission, unless justification therefor can be shown. As the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOUSTON] pointed out so appropriately a moment ago, the main trouble with the natural-gas problem today—an industry supplying more fuel and power than the electric utilities of this country do, coming into all the large cities of this Nation, charging what they please at the city gate, a price determined by a private contract with a local company under regulation as to everything except the price paid to the interstate activity coming from the Panhandle and other parts of the country, which the courts locally cannot reach. Under the passage of this bill a company enjoying, you might say, a monopoly in the city of Chicago, if but one line serves that city, would be forced to charge a fair and reasonable rate, and our Commission, if we have confidence in them, as we do, would see to that, and of course the public could not obtain any benefit by competition coming in, because that competition would be likewise regulated.

I remind the House of this fact. When we pass this bill without any apparent opposition, the people of this country demanding it, it will affect not only the great cities where gas is consumed, but the little fellow in my State back through the rural sections in whom I am interested, where these pipe lines have been running for years, and perform no service to the people along them. They are under no regulation whatever. After this bill is passed, I think the rural sections, having given the rights away to these lines feeding the great metropolitan sections of the country, will find through the machinery of this law a medium of relief so that service will come to them. I remind the House that in passing this bill, without opposition, it is going to cost a considerable sum for the Federal Power Commission to enforce it, as I think all of us want to see it enforced. Do not be surprised, therefore, if the Federal Power Commission, seeking to operate under this new law, not only asks for adequate money to improve the rate structure at the city gate, but under the more important provision goes down into the great gas fields of this country and appraises them for the first time, giving to us a physical valuation of this wonderful resource, in building up a proper rate structure. I hope that the Committee on Appropriations of this House will not try to dictate from a legislative standpoint what the policy of the Federal Power Commission will be, a practice they are falling into so conspicuously lately, especially the subcommittee on War Department appropriations. I remind that committee that this bill is going to cost no small amount to enforce, and, with the unanimous approval that this bill is receiving from the House we expect that kind of reception at the hands of the Appropriations Committee. It should not be other than the policy of the Appropriations Committee to carry out the mandates of the Congress as dictated from a policy standpoint by the legislating committees.

I hope to obtain permission to extend my remarks, and at greater length will insert some interesting statistics from the hearings and some law pertaining to this subject, which law and statistics will furnish an interesting summary and abundance of reason for the wise step taken in this legislation.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER].

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, sometime ago the Federal Trade Commission made a very thorough investigation of the facts underlying the gas situation in the United States. They did remarkably good work in their investigation and made appropriate recommendations. It is very desirable that the recommendations of the Commission be made effective and the legislation now before us is for that purpose.

For many years I have advocated this type of legislation for the regulation of the sale of natural gas. There has been much trouble on the part of local communities in their efforts to secure a fair rate from the gas companies. Most of the people in the eastern part of the United States consume gas that is produced in another State. As a consequence, any regulation that is attempted either by cities or by public-utility commissions of the States is almost useless. This is so because the people of such cities are required to pay to the producing company in another State a price generally unreasonable because there is no constitutional authority in the city councils nor the public-utility commissions of the State in which such cities are located which enables them to order the sale, at a reasonable rate, of gas produced in another State.

A very glaring example of what happens as a result of this lack of authority is the case of West Virginia and Virginia. In West Virginia they pay 35 cents per thousand cubic feet for gas. From the same gas pipes gas is delivered just a few miles over the border in Virginia, at Lexington, at a price of $1 per thousand cubic feet. That is possible only because Virginia has no authority to fix the price at which the West Virginia Co. must sell in Virginia. The same thing is true in the case of Ohio and West Virginia. When the local company in Ohio had their rates challenged by the city authorities in the first place, and later by the State public-utilities commission, the distributing company answered that it was compelled to pay a certain price to the Hope Gas Co., which was a West Virginia company, and so had to charge the Ohio cities accordingly. The Hope Co. and the East Ohio Gas Co., which sold the gas to the Ohio consumers, were owned and operated by one holding company, the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey. That is what occurs throughout the country.

This legislation will protect the public from being charged wholly unreasonable prices for gas. There should be no opposition to this bill. I hope that it will pass unanimously. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed 4 minutes.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE].

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] that this is a piece of legislation we should have had for a long time. In my own State we have a situation where we buy gas produced in the panhandle of Texas that is moved through one corner of the State of Oklahoma and back into Texas, and it is interstate commerce. The Texas Railroad Commission cannot control it. We need the regulation. People who are paying for that gas, as small consumers, are entitled to have that regulation. But, on the other hand, this question arises—and I think it is fair that it should have consideration: If we give the Federal Power Commission the right to control these rates, they will have a right, and it will be their duty, to regulate the price of industrial gas, which is in direct competition with other forms of fuel, as well as to regulate the price of gas consumed by the individual in his home. I know there will probably be an amendment offered to exempt industrial gas from the regulation; but if you exempt industrial gas from the regulation and still allow the Commission to fix the price on the domestic consumers' gas, you have to allow a fair return on the entire investment.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Does the gentleman mean industrial gas as sold by the pipe-line companies or industrial gas sold by the distributing company?

Mr. POAGE. It is always sold by the distributing company, as I understand it. The pipe-line company sells to the distributing company, but under the present set-up they have a different scale of prices to the distributing company, depending upon whom the distributing company is selling it to. As a matter of fact, gas piped out of the Texas Panhandle today to the city of Chicago sells to the domestic consumer, I understand, as high as $1.50 per thousand cubic feet when mixed with artificial gas, but when sold to industrial concerns I have been informed that some of it sells as low as 9 cents per thousand cubic feet. There is a positive loss in the sale of that gas, yet the gas companies, in order to control that market, are taking that loss. If this amendment is placed on here, and it is the only way you can protect the gas, but if you do put it on without anything else you have then opened the door for the gas company to claim they are entitled to charge the domestic consumer sufficient to pay a return on their entire investment. You cannot escape a fair return. They will claim that they are entitled to pay a fair return on the entire investment, probably one-half or one-third of which is being used to transport industrial gas. That is unfair to the domestic consumer. You should put on a further amendment providing that in taking into consideration the amount of the investment, they should not include that portion of the investment that is devoted to the transportation of the industrial gas through these industrial pipe lines.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. If we would put the gentleman's language into the bill, it could not express better the intention of this committee. This matter was discussed in executive session of the committee, and the very argument which the gentleman is making is what controlled the committee.

Mr. POAGE. I thank the gentleman. If this amendment is put on, I then propose to offer an amendment to fix the valuation so that they shall include only that portion of the valuation that is used in moving domestically consumed gas.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, as far as I know, there is no opposition to this bill. I do not know of any Member of the House or anyone else who opposes it. It is supprted by the public utility commissions of the States and by all public bodies, as far as I know, who have anything to do with or have given any particular attention to the question of the distribution and sale of natural gas to the consuming public. As a matter of fact, my attention has not been called to any opposition to it, even on the part of the gas companies themselves.

One of the principal proponents of the legislation to appear before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was the Honorable John W. Smith, formerly mayor of the city of Detroit, who appeared in his official capacity as national chairman of the Cities Alliance, an association of midwestern cities formed some 2 years ago in an endeavor to collaborate and cooperate for the purpose of securing natural gas at proper rates, and as chairman of the Natural Gas Committee of the United States Conference of Mayors. As Mr. Smith said before the committee, he had been working for years to secure natural gas for his city of Detroit and other Michigan cities.

The bill is well drafted. As the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA], the chairman of the committee, has well said, the provisions of the bill are largely the standardized provisions contained in most regulatory acts. The interstate transportation of natural gas is largely the development of the last few years—a trifle over 10 years. It began to expand about the time of the invention and adoption for general use of the seamless pipe. There are now about 50,000 miles of natural-gas pipe lines throughout the country. Its comparatively recent development undoubtedly accounts for the fact that there has been no national legislation upon the subject before. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce reported a bill quite similar to this one in the last Congress, but it was not taken up in the House. This bill contains one provision which was not in that bill—namely, the provision which requires a company desiring to put in a pipe line in competition with an existing pipe line to obtain from the Federal Power Commission a certificate of convenience and necessity before it can install such competing line. This seems to the committee a desirable feature and, as the gentleman from Maryland has said, it is a provision required in railroad and other legislation relating to the regulation of public utilities.

State commissions have power to regulate the distribution and sale of natural gas produced and consumed within the States. They also regulate the distribution and sale at retail of natural gas shipped in interstate commerce after its interstate character ceases, but there is no regulation, either by Federal or State authorities, of the transportation or sale of natural gas in interstate commerce. This bill proposes to fill the gap which now exists. It gives the Federal Power Commission power to fix the cost of the transportation of natural gas shipped in interstate commerce and the wholesale price which may be charged for it at the consuming centers. The State commission will continue to have authority to regulate the retail distribution of the gas after the enactment of this legislation the same as they now have.

The bill contains the usual provisions authorizing the Federal Power Commission to ascertain the actual legitimate cost of the property used in the interstate transportation of natural gas in order to enable it to determine the cost of such transportation and after such determination to fix just and reasonable rates for the transportation of it and just and reasonable prices for the sale of the gas. The Commission in its discretion may require the gas companies to file with it an inventory of their properties and to give the original cost of the same. It may also fix the rates of depreciation and amortization of the property.

The only provision in the bill which seems to look to the conservation of the natural gas resources of the country is contained in the provision relating to the State compacts. It is made the duty of the Federal Power Commission to assemble pertinent information relative to such compacts, to make public and report to Congress information so obtained, together with its recommendations for such further legislation as it thinks desirable to carry out the purpose of any State compact and to conserve the natural gas resources of the United States.

The bill has been carefully considered and worked out by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I believe that it is well drafted and will give the Federal Power Commission the necessary power to carry out the purposes sought to be accomplished by the legislation. It should be speedily enacted into law.

In order to keep the record straight, I propose to offer an amendment to the bill under the 5-minute rule to strike out section 18, which authorizes the Commission to appoint attorneys, experts, officers, and examiners without regard to the civil service and to fix their compensation without regard to the Classification Act. This is an old story and it is unnecessary to dwell upon it at any great length at this time. It is hard to overstate the seriousness of such a provision. It has been generally recognized that a similar provision in the Social Security Act has resulted in something approaching a scandal in that organization, with the result that Congress singled it out and enacted a rider upon a recent appropriation bill requiring that all appointees to positions in that organization receiving a salary of $5,000 or more per year must be confirmed by the Senate, and the other day the President recommended that such positions be filled in accordance with the civil-service laws and regulations. At the proper time I intend to offer a motion to strike out section 18 and to substitute therefor a provision requiring that all employees necessary to be appointed by the Commission to carry out its functions under this act shall be appointed in accordance with the civil-service laws and regulations, and that they shall be paid for their work as provided in the Classification Act.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 mintues to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KENNEY].

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, there is no natural gas produced in New Jersey and none comes into the State so far as I have been able to learn. The State, however, is a big consumer of artificial gas. Natural gas is consumed in 35 of our States, some of which are in the neighborhood of and surrounding New Jersey. I hope that the day is not far distant when natural gas will be piped into our State for use by our people.

Natural gas is produced in 24 of our States, mostly in the West and Southwest. It is piped into the Middle West and over into the East. Many State commissions have had great difficulty in fixing reasonable rates for consumers for the reason that State commissions have had no power over the interstate activities of the pipe-line companies. The pending bill gives to the Federal Power Commission authority to sit as an independent board or with a State board as a joint board to enforce this act and to bring about regulation that will result, I believe, in an improvement of conditions and reduction of rates so that consumers in States using natural gas will have a fair and reasonable rate.

In this bill it is provided that the board shall fix a proper and just depreciation which may be charged by pipe-line companies. Furthermore, it has the power to fix the reserve which pipe-line companies may charge against the consumer.

As the situation stands now, the pipe-line companies owning the oil fields can purchase any amount of land they wish and charge the value of all of that land as a reserve in fixing the rate at which the gas is sold at the city line when it is delivered over for resale in any State or community.

There is no opposition to this bill. I believe that results largely from the time and effort that has been spent on the bill. This bill was a part of the utility holding company bill, constituting title III of that bill. The committee felt it would be better to separate the natural-gas features and give them special care and attention. The bill comes on the floor for consideration after having been fully and carefully considered by the committee. Various phases were considered by a subcommittee which had in charge the oil bill which was enacted by the Congress and reenacted the other day. The chairman of that subcommittee, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE], has given very intensive study to the question and I believe this bill reflects his ability, his energy, and his great concern for the people of this country. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.,

NECESSITY FOR REGULATION OF NATURAL-GAS COMPANIES

SECTION 1. (a) As disclosed in reports of the Federal Trade Commission made pursuant to Senate Resolution 83 (70th Cong., 1st sess.) and other reports made pursuant to the authority of Congress, it is hereby declared that the business of transporting and selling natural gas for ultimate distribution to the public is affected with a public interest, and that Federal regulation in matters relating to the transportation of natural gas and the sale thereof in interstate and foreign commerce is necessary in the public interest.

(b) The provisions of this act shall apply to the transportation of natural gas in interstate commerce, to the sale in interstate commerce of natural gas for resale for ultimate public consumption for domestic, commercial, industrial, or any other use, and to natural-gas companies engaged in such transportation or sale, but shall not apply to any other transportation or sale of natural gas or to the local distribution of natural gas or to the facilities used for such distribution or to the production or gathering of natural gas.

SEC. 2. When used in this act, unless the context otherwise requires—

(1) "Person" includes an individual or a corporation.

(2) "Corporation" includes any corporation, joint-stock company, partnership, association, business trust, organized group of persons, whether incorporated or not, receiver or receivers, trustee or trustees of any of the foregoing, but shall not include municipalities as hereinafter defined.

(3) "Municipality" means a city, county, or other political subdivision or agency of a State.

(4) "State" means a State admitted to the Union, the District of Columbia, and any organized Territory of the United States.

(5) "Natural gas" means either natural gas unmixed, or any mixture of natural and artificial gas.

(6) "Natural-gas company" means a person engaged in the transportation of natural gas in interstate commerce, or the sale in interstate commerce of such gas for resale.

(7) "Interstate commerce" means commerce between any point in a State and any point outside thereof, or between points within the same State but through any place outside thereof, but only insofar as such commerce takes place within the United States.

(8) "State commission" means the regulatory body of the State or municipality having jurisdiction to regulate rates and charges for the sale of natural gas to consumers within the State or municipality.

(9) "Commission" and "Commissioner" means the Federal Power Commission and a member thereof, respectively.

EXPORTATION OR IMPORTATION OF NATURAL GAS

SEC. 3. After 6 months from the date on which this act takes effect no person shall export any natural gas from the United States to a foreign country or import any natural gas from a foreign country without first having secured an order of the Commission authorizing it to do so. The Commission shall issue such order upon application, unless, after opportunity for hearing, it finds that the proposed exportation or importation will not be consistent with the public interest. The Commission may by its order grant such application, in whole or in part, with such modification and upon such terms and conditions as the Commission may find necessary or appropriate, and may from time to time, after opportunity for hearing, and for good cause shown, make such supplemental order in the premises as it may find necessary or appropriate.

RATES AND CHARGES; SCHEDULES; SUSPENSION OF NEW RATES

SEC. 4. (a) All rates and charges made, demanded, or received by any natural-gas company for or in connection with the transportation or sale of natural gas subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, and all rules and regulations affecting or pertaining to such rates or charges, shall be just and reasonable, and any such rate or charge that is not just and reasonable is hereby declared to be unlawful.

(b) No natural-gas company shall, with respect to any transportation or sale of natural gas subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, (1) make or grant any undue preference or advantage to any person or subject any person to any undue prejudice or disadvantage, or (2) maintain any unreasonable difference in rates, charges, service, facilities, or in any other respect, either as between localities or as between classes of service.

(c) Under such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe, every natural-gas company shall file with the Commission, within such time (not less than 60 days from the date this act takes effect) and in such form as the Commission may designate, and shall keep open in convenient form and place for public inspection, schedules showing all rates and charges for any transportation or sale subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, and the classifications, practices, and regulations affecting such rates and charges, together with all contracts which in any manner affect or relate to such rates, charges, classifications, and services.

(d) Unless the Commission otherwise orders, no change shall be made by any natural-gas company in any such rate, charge, classification, or service, or in any rule, regulation, or contract relating thereto, except after 30 days' notice to the Commission and to the public. Such notice shall be given by filing with the Commission and keeping open for public inspection new schedules stating plainly the change or changes to be made in the schedule or schedules then in force and the time when the change or changes will go into effect. The Commission, for good cause shown, may allow changes to take effect without requiring the 30 days' notice herein changes for by an order specifying the changes so to be made and the time when they shall take effect and the manner in which they shall be filed and published.

(e) Whenever any such new schedule is filed the Commission shall have authority, either upon complaint of any State, municipality, or State commission, or upon its own initiative without complaint, at once, and if it so orders, without answer or formal pleading by the natural-gas company, but upon reasonable notice, to enter upon a hearing concerning the lawfulness of such rate, charge, classification, or service; and, pending such hearing and the decision thereon, the Commission, upon filing with such schedules and delivering to the natural-gas company affected thereby a statement in writing of its reasons for such suspension, may suspend the operation of such schedules and defer the use of such rate, charge, classification, or service, but not for a longer period than 5 months beyond the time when it would otherwise go into effect: and after full hearings, either completed before or after the rate, charge, classification, or service goes into effect, the Commission may make such orders with reference thereto as would be proper in a proceeding initiated after it had become effective. If the proceeding has not been concluded and an order made at the expiration of the suspension period, on motion of the natural-gas company making the filing, the proposed change of rate, charge, classification, or service shall go into effect. Where increased rates or charges are thus made effective, the Commission may, by order, require the natural-gas company to furnish a bond, to be approved by the Commission, to refund any amounts ordered by the Commission, to keep accurate accounts in detail of all amounts received by reason of such increase, specifying by whom and in whose behalf such amounts were paid, and, upon completion of the hearing and decision, to order such natural-gas company to refund, with interest, the portion of such increased rates or charges by its decision found not justified. At any hearing involving a rate or charge sought to be increased, the burden of proof to show that the increased rate or charge is just and reasonable shall be upon the natural-gas company, and the Commission shall give to the hearing and decision of such questions preference over other questions pending before it and decide the same as speedily as possible.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LEA: Page 6, line 18, insert, after the word "effect", the following: "Provided, That the Commission shall not have authority to suspend the rate, charge, classification, or service for the sale of natural gas for resale for industrial use only."

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, this amendment has been approved by the committee and also by the Federal Power Commission. The effect of it is to prevent suspension in cases of industrial use where there are short-term contracts for the supply of gas for industrial use only.

Mr. POAGE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. POAGE. I am wondering in that connection, when you do make those exceptions, if you do not inevitably then create a situation whereby the gas company can contend that they have such a tremendous investment involved in furnishing this domestic gas that the domestic rates have to be raised, or at least you will require a raise of the domestic rates by the local rate-fixing agency, because the gas company can say that they have an investment in a pipe line 1,200 miles long and they are only selling so much gas for domestic purposes. You have exempted a part of this gas. Are you not going to have to fix a rate for domestic purposes that will take care of that burden?

Mr. LEA. This amendment would not deprive the Commission of fixing general rates.

Mr. POAGE. I know, but will it not force them to fix a rate that will pay a return on the entire investment when, as a matter of fact, many of those contract rates are actually a loss?

Mr. LEA. Under the principle of this bill they would not have the right to do that. The industrial gas should pay its own rate and should be based on a reasonable rate.

Mr. POAGE. But in that connection, if you allow the company to fix their own rates as to this industrial gas, which in many instances will make up one-half or two-thirds of all the gas it moves through the pipe line, and they do not make and profit on that, or make very little profit on it, would you not be requiring the rate-fixing agency, because they have to fix a rate which will result in a fair return on the investment, to fix a rate for the individual or domestic consumer high enough to pay a return on all of the investment used for the industrial gas?

Mr. LEA. In fixing the industrial rate they may adjust the general rate high enough to cover that.

Mr. POAGE. If they fix the industrial rate, yes; but this amendment exempts that.

Mr. LEA. It only exempts as to a suspension order. There is nothing that prevents the Federal Power Commission from making a rule requiring a rate sufficient to meet the cost.

Mr. POAGE. I think they have got to do that. I do not think they can do anything else.

Mr. LEA. This applies only to new rates as to which a suspension order applies and not to the general rates fixed by a commission.

Mr. POAGE. But if they suspend new rates as they go along, they might as well suspend the entire rate structure.

Mr. LEA. No. A regular rate can be put into effect, and the Commission has the power to fix a maximum, minimum, or a specific rate. The general rule that they may adopt will cover this case and prevent the result the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. POAGE. I think that is what it should do, but if you require them to apply that general rule it might not result in that. I think you have given them the power; but have you got anything in there that will require the exercise of that power?

Mr. LEA. That would be within the discretion of the Commission in fixing a rate. It would be the clear duty of the Commission under this bill to do that. I have consulted with the attorneys for the Federal Power Commission before presenting this amendment. They claim they can control that matter.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] to state the provisions of this act apply only to the transportation of natural gas in interstate commerce, to the sale in interstate commerce of natural gas for resale for ultimate consumption for various purposes, and to natural-gas companies engaged in the transportation of gas for sale, and shall not apply to intrastate transportation or sale of natural gas or to the local distribution thereof.

Will not that provision in the law make it possible for a natural-gas company transporting its gas through pipe lines, say from Oklahoma to Kansas, to have its own establishments where natural gas may be used, or to favor one of its friends doing business in a locality to the detriment and hurt of some other legitimate enterprise carried on there?

Mr. LEA. We cover such a case by a provision on, I believe, page 8 of the bill. What the gentleman states is true. The regulation would then rest with the local commission. However, the Federal Power Commission would have a right to investigate the cost of such transportation and give information as to reasonable rates to the State commission, so the commission could put the rates into effect.

Mr. MASSINGALE. What provision is made for transferring the powers of the National Commission to the State commission?

Mr. LEA. The Federal Commission would give the State commission information showing the cost of the property and the reasonable rate for the service performed.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Then, as I understand the chairman, the situation to which I have just referred in connection with paragraph (b) of section 1 is taken care of in a subsequent section of the bill?

Mr. LEA. Yes; it is. The Federal Government would have no right to regulate the local distribution under the constitutional interpretation, but the local commission would have such authority and the Federal Power Commission would have the authority to give the local commission all the information needed to carry out the provision.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

FIXING RATES AND CHARGES; DETERMINATION OF COST OF PRODUCTION OR TRANSPORTATION

SEC. 5. (a) Whenever the Commission, after a hearing had upon its own motion or upon complaint of any State, municipality, State commission, or gas distributing company, shall find that any rate, charge, or classification demanded, observed, charged, or collected by any natural-gas company in connection with any transportation or sale of natural gas, subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, or that any rule, regulation, practice, or contract affecting such rate, charge, or classification is unjust, unreasonable, unduly discriminatory, or preferential, the Commission shall determine the just and reasonable rate, charge, classification, rule, regulation, practice, or contract to be thereafter observed and in force, and shall fix the same by order.

(b) The Commission upon its own motion, or upon the request of any State commission, whenever it can do so without prejudice to the efficient and proper conduct of its affairs, may investigate and determine the cost of the production or transportation of natural gas in cases where the Commission has no authority to establish a rate governing the transportation or sale of such natural gas.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BOREN: On page 8, line 13, after the word "gas", insert the following: "by a natural gas company."

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Chairman, my amendment has been agreed to by the committee. I offer the amendment in order to keep the jurisdiction of the Federal Government as clearly defined as possible from the jurisdiction of the State government in cases arising under the provisions of this bill.

During the hearings I offered this amendment and made the following statement:

Mr. Chairman, I would like to make this observation for the record and as a challenge to the proponents of this bill: That subsection B of section 5 provides for a growth and for the extension of the influence of a Federal bureau, or commission, in a realm wherein this proposal submits on its own acknowledgment that the Federal authority and responsibility does not rightfully exist.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment clarifies the jurisdiction as between the Federal and State governments, and assures us that the Federal Government will not go into a realm where the State government already has proper authority to handle the problem.

The committee has approved the amendment, and I have nothing further to say.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOREN. Yes.

Mr. JONES. Would the gentleman's amendment prevent the Commission from making an investigation such as the gentleman from Maryland referred to a while ago, with reference to costs of production and the conditions in the various local fields?

Mr. BOREN. I may say to the gentleman from Texas that this amendment would not prevent the Commission from making such investigations. According to the definition of a natural-gas company, this amendment would simply guarantee that the commission would not step out of the realm of interstate commerce, but would make such investigations only where companies engaged in interstate commerce were concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

ASCERTAINMENT OF COST OF PROPERTY

SEC. 6. (a) The Commission may investigate and ascertain the actual legitimate cost of the property of every natural-gas company, the depreciation therein, and, when found necessary for rate-making purposes, other facts which bear on the determination of such cost or depreciation and the fair value of such property.

(b) Every natural-gas company upon request shall file with the Commission an inventory of all or any part of its property and a statement of the original cost thereof, and shall keep the Commission informed regarding the cost of all additions, betterments, extensions, and new construction.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. POAGE: On page 8, line 22, after the word "property", insert the following, "Provided, however, That such portion of the value of such property as is attributable to the production and transportation of natural gas for resale for industrial use will not be taken into consideration in determining a fair return on such property, and it shall be conclusively presumed that the value of that portion of such property attributable to the production and transportation of natural gas for resale for industrial use bears the same relation to the total value of such property as the proportion of natural gas sold for industrial use bears to the entire amount of gas produced and transported."

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is simply an attempt to carry out the purpose I discussed a while ago. I feel there is a real danger that the commission may not actually give the relief it has a right to give under this bill. I think the bill clearly gives the commission the right to give relief to the domestic consumer, and not place the entire burden of paying a fair return on the entire investment on the domestic consumer. I do not think there is any provision in the bill, however, which requires the commission to do this. The bill gives the commission the power to do so. I seek simply to require the commission to place this burden where it falls, to charge the user of industrial gas with bearing the burden of the return on that part of the investment properly attributable to industrial gas, and to charge the domestic consumer only with such portion of the cost as is attributable to the use of the plant for the furnishing of domestic gas.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. Yes.

Mr. KENNEY. Would not the gentleman's amendment operate as a limitation? Would not this amendment tie the commission's hands so that other factors might not enter into its determination?

Mr. POAGE. I do not think it would keep them from including other factors. I think they would have to include these factors. I do not attempt to strike out the provisions which state that other factors which bear on the determination of such costs or depreciation or fair value of the property shall be considered. This amendment states that no matter what other factors they take into consideration, they must take into consideration what percentage of the investment is attributable to the transportation of gas destined for industrial consumption. Otherwise, they would have the power, although I do not know that they would exercise it, to place the burden of the transportation of the industrial gas, on which there will be no profit, or practically none, upon the domestic consumers, and ultimately result in increasing the price to the domestic consumers.

It is for the purpose of making the matter doubly sure that I offer this amendment. I want to make it sure we are not simply relying upon the frailities of human nature or the frailities of a man-made commission, but making certain that they must take into consideration the fact that not all of this investment is attributable to the domestic consumption of gas, and therefore the gas companies should not be allowed to make a reasonable return upon an investment in excess of what they use to furnish gas to the domestic consumers.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Does not the gentleman believe that his amendment more properly should be directed to section 5 of the bill, which is the section dealing with just rates? Of course, if a rate is determined which is not just, because the commission has not taken into consideration the very things the gentleman has pointed out, and which he wants to set forth mandatorily in the bill, it would more properly apply to the establishment of rates and would have little to do with the cost of the property.

Mr. POAGE. I am inclined to agree with the gentleman it would have been better if offered at that place in the bill, but, frankly, I did not have the amendment in type at the time that portion of the bill was read.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. I am frank to say that in determining a just and reasonable rate to be charged I believe the Commission should take into consideration what the gentleman has pointed out.

Mr. POAGE. Frankly, I would have preferred to have the amendment attached at that point, but since we had reached a situation in the consideration of the bill where I could not do that, and since it is a limitation upon the methods by which they should determine valuations, which result in the determination of the proper rates, and the amendment affects the way you determine values, I believe the amendment properly applies to section 6, although it probably would more properly fit section 5. However, it would appear that the same practical result would be reached if offered at either place, and I therefore submit the amendment for the consideration of the Committee.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

There is no question but what the Commission, under this bill, will have full discretion to do what the gentleman desires; in fact, it would be the duty of the Commission to do so. But I think the standard proposed here to cover the action of the committee, in the exercise of its power, is not authorized by the Constitution.

The gentleman's amendment states that it shall be conclusively presumed that the fair valuation of that portion of such property attributable to the production and transportation of natural gas for resale to industrial use bears the same relation to the total value of such property as the proportion of natural gas sold for industrial use bears to the entire amount of gas produced and transported.

This, as a matter of fact, is in defiance of the actual cost of the gas, which goes through the same pipe, but is used for different purposes, and I believe under the definition of fair value as defined by the Supreme Court, the amendment would make it the duty of the Commission to do a thing that is not justified by the interpretation of the term "fair value." We spent a great deal of time on this section, and we had before us another section, such as the gentleman has here suggested, going into more detail, but, in the meantime, a Supreme Court decision came out that made it very clear we should cut out such details and stay with the safe and unquestionably constitutional provision we have here.

So I hope the amendment will not be agreed to, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOOK) there were—ayes 8, noes 21.

So the amendment was rejected.

Te Clerk read as follows:

EXTENSION OF FACILITIES; ABANDONMENT OF SERVICE

SEC. 7. (a) Whenever the Commission, after notice and opportunity for hearing, finds such action necessary or desirable in the public interest, it may by order direct a natural-gas company to extend or improve its transportation facilities, to establish physical connection of its transportation facilities with the facilities of, and sell natural gas to, any person or municipality engaged or legally authorized to engage in the local distribution of natural or artificial gas to the public, and for such purpose to extend its transportation facilities to communities immediately adjacent to such facilities or to territory served by such natural-gas company, if the Commission finds that no undue burden will be placed upon such natural-gas company thereby: Provided, That the Commission shall have no authority to compel the enlargement of transportation facilities for such purposes, or to compel such natural-gas company to establish physical connection or sell natural gas when to do so would impair its ability to render adequate service to its customers.

(b) No natural-gas company shall abandon all or any portion of its facilities subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, or any service rendered by means of such facilities, without the permission and approval of the Commission first had and obtained, after due hearing, and a finding by the Commission that the available supply of natural gas is depleted to the extent that the continuance of service is unwarranted, or that the present or future public convenience or necessity permit such abandonment.

(c) No natural-gas company shall undertake the construction or extension of any facilities for the transportation of natural gas to a market in which natural gas is already being served by another natural-gas company, or acquire or operate any such facilities or extensions thereof, or engage in transportation by means of any new or additional facilities, or sell natural gas in any such market, unless and until there shall first have been obtained from the Commission a certificate that the present or future public convenience and necessity require or will require such new construction or operation of any such facilities or extensions thereof: Provided, however, That a natural-gas company already serving a market may enlarge or extend its facilities for the purpose of supplying increased market demands in the territory in which it operates. Whenever any natural-gas company shall make application for a certificate of convenience and necessity under the provisions of this subsection, the Commission shall set the matter for hearing and shall give such reasonable notice of the hearing thereon to all interested persons as in its judgment may be necessary under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Commission.

ACCOUNTS, RECORDS, AND MEMORANDA

SEC. 8. (a) Every natural-gas company shall make, keep, and preserve for such periods, such accounts, records of cost-accounting procedures, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records as the Commission may by rules and regulations prescribe as necessary or appropriate for purposes of the administration of this act: Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall relieve any such natural-gas company from keeping any accounts, memoranda, or records which such natural-gas company may be required to keep by or under authority of the laws of any State. The Commission may prescribe a system of accounts to be kept by such natural-gas companies, and may classify such natural-gas companies and prescribe a system of accounts for each class. The Commission, after notice and opportunity for hearing, may determine by order the accounts in which particular outlays or receipts shall be entered, charged, or credited. The burden of proof to justify every accounting entry questioned by the Commission shall be on the person making, authorizing, or requiring such entry, and the Commission may suspend a charge or credit pending submission of satisfactory proof in support thereof.

(b) The Commission shall at all times have access to and the right to inspect and examine all accounts, records, and memoranda of natural-gas companies; and it shall be the duty of such natural-gas companies to furnish to the Commission, within such reasonable time as the Commission may order, any information with respect thereto which the Commission may by order require, including copies of maps, contracts, reports of engineers, and other data, records, and papers, and to grant to all agents of the Commission free access to its property and its accounts, records, and memoranda when requested so to do. No member, officer, or employee of the Commission shall divulge any fact or information which may come to his knowledge during the course of examination of books, records, data, or accounts, except insofar as he may be directed by the Commission or by a court.

(c) The books, accounts, memoranda, and records of any person who controls directly or indirectly a natural-gas company subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission and of any other company controlled by such person, insofar as they relate to transactions with or the business of such natural-gas company, shall be subject to examination on the order of the Commission.

RATES OF DEPRECIATION

SEC. 9. (a) The Commission may, after hearing, require natural-gas companies to carry proper and adequate depreciation and amortization accounts in accordance with such rules, regulations, and forms of account as the Commission may prescribe. The Commission may from time to time ascertain and determine, and by order fix, the proper and adequate rates of depreciation and amortization of the several classes of property of each natural-gas company used or useful in the production, transportation, or sale of natural gas. Each natural-gas company shall conform its depreciation and amortization accounts to the rates so ascertained, determined, and fixed. No natural-gas company subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission shall charge to operating expenses any depreciation or amortization charges on classes of property other than those prescribed by the Commission, or charge with respect to any class of property a percentage of depreciation or amortization other than that prescribed therefor by the Commission. No such natural-gas company shall in any case include in any form under its operating or other expenses any depreciation, amortization, or other charge or expenditure included elsewhere as a depreciation or amortization charge or otherwise under its operating or other expenses. Nothing in this section shall limit the power of a State commission to determine in the exercise of its jurisdiction, with respect to any natural-gas company, the percentage rates of depreciation or amortization to be allowed, as to any class of property of such natural-gas company, or the composite depreciation or amortization rate, for the purpose of determining rates or charges.

(b) The Commission, before prescribing any rules or requirements as to accounts, records, or memoranda, or as to depreciation or amortization rates, shall notify each State commission having jurisdiction with respect to any natural-gas company involved and shall give reasonable opportunity to each such commission to present its views and shall receive and consider such views and recommendations.

PERIODIC AND SPECIAL REPORTS

SEC. 10. (a) Every natural-gas company shall file with the Commission such annual and other periodic or special reports as the Commission may by rules and regulations or order prescribe as necessary or appropriate to assist the Commission in the proper administration of this act. The Commission may prescribe the manner and form in which such reports shall be made, and require from such natural-gas companies specific answers to all questions upon which the Commission may need information. The Commission may require that such reports shall include, among other things, full information as to assets and liabilities, capitalization, investment and reduction thereof, gross receipts, interest due and paid, depreciation, amortization, and other reserves, cost of facilities, cost of maintenance and operation of facilities for the production, transportation, or sale of natural gas, cost of renewal and replacement of such facilities, transportation, delivery, use, and sale of natural gas. The Commission may require any such natural-gas company to make adequate provision for currently determining such costs and other facts. Such reports shall be made under oath unless the Commission otherwise specifies.

(b) It shall be unlawful for any natural-gas company willfully to hinder, delay, or obstruct the making, filing, or keeping of any information, document, report, memorandum, record, or account required to be made, filed, or kept under this act or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder.

STATE COMPACTS; REPORTS ON

SEC. 11. (a) In case two or more States propose to the Congress compacts dealing with the conservation, production, transportation, or distribution of natural gas it shall be the duty of the Commission to assemble pertinent information relative to the matters covered in any such proposed compact, to make public and to report to the Congress information so obtained, together with such recommendations for further legislation as may appear to be appropriate or necessary to carry out the purposes of such proposed compact and to aid in the conservation of natural-gas resources within the United States and in the orderly, equitable, and economic production, transportation, and distribution of natural gas.

(b) It shall be the duty of the Commission to assemble and keep current pertinent information relative to the effect and operation of any compact between two or more States heretofore or hereafter approved by the Congress, to make such information public, and to report to the Congress, from time to time, the information so obtained, together with such recommendations as may appear to be appropriate or necessary to promote the purposes of such compact.

(c) In carrying out the purposes of this act, the Commission shall, so far as practicable, avail itself of the services, records, reports, and information of the executive departments and other agencies of the Government, and the President may, from time to time, direct that such services and facilities be made available to the Commission.

OFFICIALS DEALING IN SECURITIES

SEC. 12. It shall be unlawful for any officer or director of any natural-gas company to receive for his own benefit, directly or indirectly, any money or thing of value in respect to the negotiation, hypothecation, or sale by such natural-gas company of any security issued, or to be issued, by such natural-gas company, or to share in any of the proceeds thereof, or to participate in the making or paying of any dividends, other than liquidating dividends, of such natural-gas company from any funds properly included in capital account.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, line 9, strike out the word "made" and insert in lieu thereof the word "make".

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, line 23, after the word "company", insert "or any officer or director of any bank or trust company loaning money to or acquiring securities from any natural gas company."

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve his point of order.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Yes.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that I offer extends the same provisions of the law to any officer or director of any bank or trust company loaning money or acquiring securities from any natural-gas company, as the provisions of the law extended to an officer or director of a natural-gas company. In other words, it seems to those of us who take this view, that no officer or director of any bank ought to receive any private, inside stock because of the fact that he has been responsible in more or less degree for loaning money to a natural-gas company or because of some securities deal which his bank or trust company has had in acquiring securities of that natural-gas company. In other words, if it is a moral wrong for an officer or director of a natural-gas company to have any inside proposition of particular aid financially to him, it is equally morally wrong for any officer or director of any bank having dealings with a natural-gas company as stated to likewise benefit. Hence the reason for this amendment.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to this section for the reason that section 12 deals exclusively with officers and directors of natural-gas companies. It has nothing to do with banks or officials of banks.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Connecticut desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. PHILLIPS. Yes. I respect the opinion of the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. Chairman, but I feel that the point of order is not well taken because of the general provisions of this act as a whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule upon the point of order. Section 12 deals with officers of natural-gas companies. The entire section deals with that particular class and is limited entirely to that. The amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut contains matter entirely foreign to that contained in the paragraph under consideration. The Chair, therefore, holds the amendment not to be germane and sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

COMPLAINTS

SEC. 13. Any State, municipality, or State commission complaining of anything done or omitted to be done by any natural-gas company in contravention of the provisions of this act may apply to the Commission by petition, which shall briefly state the facts, whereupon a statement of the complaint thus made shall be forwarded by the Commission to such natural-gas company, which shall be called upon to satisfy the complaint or to answer the same in writing within a reasonable time to be specified by the Commission.

INVESTIGATIONS BY COMMISSION; ATTENDANCE OF WITNESSES; DEPOSITIONS

SEC. 14. (a) The Commission may investigate any facts, conditions, practices, or matters which it may find necessary or proper in order to determine whether any person has violated or is about to violate any provision of this act or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, or to aid in the enforcement of the provisions of this act or in prescribing rules or regulations thereunder, or in obtaining information to serve as a basis for recommending further legislation to the Congress. The Commission may permit any person to file with it a statement in writing, under oath or otherwise, as it shall determine, as to any or all facts and circumstances concerning a matter which may be the subject of investigation. The Commission, in its discretion, may publish in the manner authorized by section 312 of the Federal Power Act, and make available to State commissions and municipalities, information concerning any such matter.

(b) The Commission may, after hearing, determine the adequacy or inadequacy of the gas reserves held or controlled by any natural-gas company, or by anyone on its behalf, including its owned or leased properties or royalty contracts; and may also, after hearing, determine the propriety and reasonableness of the inclusion in operating expenses, capital, or surplus of all delay rentals or other forms of rental or compensation for unoperated lands and leases. For the purpose of such determinations, the Commission may require any natural-gas company to file with the Commission true copies of all its lease and royalty agreements with respect to such gas reserves.

(c) For the purpose of any investigation or any other proceeding under this act, any member of the Commission, or any officer designated by it, is empowered to administer oaths and affirmations, subpena witnesses, compel their attendance, take evidence, and require the production of any books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, contracts, agreements, or other records which the Commission finds relevant or material to the inquiry. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of any such records may be required from any place in the United States or at any designated place of hearing. Witnesses summoned by the Commission to appear before it shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

(d) In case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpena issued to, any person, the Commission may invoke the aid of any court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such investigation or proceeding is carried on, or where such person resides or carries on business, in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, contracts, agreements, and other records. Such court may issue an order requiring such person to appear before the Commission or member or officer designated by the Commission, there to produce records, if so ordered, or to give testimony touching the matter under investigation or in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. All process in any such case may be served in the judicial district whereof such person is an inhabitant or wherever he may be found or may be doing business. Any person who willfully shall fail or refuse to attend and testify or to answer any lawful inquiry or to produce books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, contracts, agreements, or other records, if in his or its power so to do, in obedience to the subpena of the Commission, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000 or to imprisonment for a term of not more than 1 year, or both.

(e) The testimony of any witness may be taken at the instance of a party, in any proceeding or investigation pending before the Commission, by deposition at any time after the proceeding is at issue. The Commission may also order testimony to be taken by deposition in any proceeding or investigation pending before it at any stage of such proceeding or investigation. Such depositions may be taken before any person authorized to administer oaths not being of counsel or attorney to either of the parties, nor interested in the proceeding or investigation. Reasonable notice must first be given in writing by the party or his attorney proposing to take such deposition to the opposite party or his attorney of record, as either may be nearest, which notice shall state the name of the witness and the time and place of the taking of his deposition. Any person may be compelled to appear and depose, and to produce documentary evidence, in the same manner as witnesses may be compelled to appear and testify and produce documentary evidence before the Commission, as hereinbefore provided. Such testimony shall be reduced to writing by the person taking deposition, or under his direction, and shall, after it has been reduced to writing, be subscribed by the deponent.

(f) If a witness whose testimony may be desired to be taken by deposition be in a foreign country, the deposition may be taken before an officer or person designated by the Commission, or agreed upon by the parties by stipulation in writing to be filed with the Commission. All depositions must be promptly filed with the Commission.

(g) Witnesses whose depositions are taken as authorized in this act, and the person or officer taking the same, shall be entitled to the same fees as are paid for like services in the courts of the United States.

(h) No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, contracts, agreements, or other records and documents before the Commission, or in obedience to the subpena of the Commission or any member thereof or any officer designated by it, or in any cause or proceeding instituted by the Commission, on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture; but no individual shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is compelled to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, except that such individual so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

HEARINGS; RULES OF PROCEDURE

SEC. 15. (a) Hearings under this act may be held before the Commission, any member or members thereof, or any representative of the Commission designated by it, and appropriate records thereof shall be kept. In any proceeding before it, the Commission, in accordance with such rules and regulations as it may prescribe, may admit as a party any interested State, State commission, municipality, or any representative of interested consumers or security holders, or any competitor of a party to such proceeding, or any other person whose participation in the proceeding may be in the public interest.

(b) All hearings, investigations, and proceedings under this act shall be governed by rules of practice and procedure to be adopted by the Commission, and in the conduct thereof the technical rules of evidence need not be applied. No informality in any hearing, investigation, or proceeding or in the manner of taking testimony shall invalidate any order, decision, rule, or regulation issued under the authority of this act.

ADMINISTRATIVE POWERS OF COMMISSION; RULES, REGULATIONS, AND ORDERS

SEC. 16. The Commission shall have power to perform any and all acts, and to prescribe, issue, make, amend, and rescind such orders, rules, and regulations as it may find necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this act. Among other things, such rules and regulations may define accounting, technical, and trade terms used in this act; and may prescribe the form or forms of all statements, declarations, applications, and reports to be filed with the Commission, the information which they shall contain, and the time within which they shall be filed. Unless a different date is specified therein, rules and regulations of the Commission shall be effective 30 days after publication in the manner which the Commission shall prescribe. Orders of the Commission shall be effective on the date and in the manner which the Commission shall prescribe. For the purposes of its rules and regulations, the Commission may classify persons and matters within its jurisdiction and prescribe different requirements for different classes of persons or matters. All rules and regulations of the Commission shall be filed with its secretary and shall be kept open in convenient form for public inspection and examination during reasonable business hours.

USE OF JOINT BOARDS; COOPERATION WITH STATE COMMISSIONS

SEC. 17. (a) The Commission may refer any matter arising in the administration of this act to a board to be composed of a member or members, as determined by the Commission, from the State or each of the States affected or to be affected by such matter. Any such board shall be vested with the same power and be subject to the same duties and liabilities as in the case of a member of the Commission when designated by the Commission to hold any hearings. The action of such board shall have such force and effect and its proceedings shall be conducted in such manner as the Commission shall by regulations prescribe. The board shall be appointed by the Commission from persons nominated by the State commission of each State affected, or by the Governor of such State if there is no State commission. Each State affected shall be entitled to the same number of representatives on the board unless the nominating power of such State waives such right. The Commission shall have discretion to reject the nominee from any State, but shall thereupon invite a new nomination from that State. The members of a board shall receive such allowances for expenses as the Commission shall provide. The Commission may, when in its discretion sufficient reason exists therefor, revoke any reference to such a board.

(b) The Commission may confer with any State commission regarding rate structures, costs, accounts, charges, practices, classifications, and regulations of natural-gas companies; and the Commission is authorized, under such rules and regulations as it shall prescribe, to hold joint hearings with any State commission in connection with any matter with respect to which the Commission is authorized to act. The Commission is authorized in the administration of this act to avail itself of such cooperation, services, records, and facilities as may be afforded by any State commission.

(c) The Commission shall make available to the several State commissions such information and reports as may be of assistance in State regulation of natural-gas companies. Whenever the Commission can do so without prejudice to the efficient and proper conduct of its affairs, it may, upon request from a State commission, make available to such State commission as witnesses any of its trained rate, valuation, or other experts subject to reimbursement of the compensation and traveling expenses of such witnesses. All sums collected hereunder shall be credited to the appropriation from which the amounts were expended in carrying out the provisions of this subsection.

APPOINTMENT OF OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

SEC. 18. The Commission is authorized to appoint and fix the compensation of such officers, attorneys, examiners, and experts as may be necessary for carrying out its functions under this act without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment and compensation of officers and employees of the United States; and the Commission may, subject to civil-service laws, appoint such other officers and employees as are necessary for carrying out such functions and fix their salaries in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendments, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 26, line 4, strike out section 18 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 18. The Commission may, subject to the civil-service laws, appoint such officers and employees as are necessary for carrying out its functions under this act, and fix their salaries in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended."

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I wish I could think that this amendment will be adopted, but in view of the action of the House so many times during this session on similar amendments, it is hard to believe that it will be. However, I do not want a bill coming from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce with a provision of this kind in it to go through the House without calling attention to such provision. The section which I have moved to strike out authorizes the Federal Power Commission to appoint such officers, attorneys, examiners, and experts as may be necessary to carry out the functions of the Commission under this act, without regard to the Civil Service and to fix their compensation without regard to the Classification Act passed in 1923. Some day, some time, the very men who vote for provisions of this kind, and who have been doing so, so many times in the last few years, are going to reverse themselves.

I do not know when that time will come, but I look for it to come within the next 2 or 3 months in the passage of some of the so-called reorganization legislation recommended by the President. When it does come it will be interesting to see the reversal of form on the part of those who have so persistently voted against civil service, and who have repeatedly voted to authorize these commissions and other administrative officers to make appointments without regard to the civil service and to fix the compensation of employees without regard to the Classification Act. Think of it. It is a violent thing for Congress to pass legislation with such provisions in it, but the majority has insisted upon doing so during the last few years over the protest of a great many of us. Some day, some time, this same majority is going to be just as persistent and just as insistent in refusing to pass such legislation. As I say, it is going to be interesting to watch when that time comes.

Mr. Chairman, I am offering this amendment for the purpose of keeping the record straight.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. The provision to which the gentleman takes exception relates to officers, attorneys, examiners, and experts. The general type of employees authorized to be employed are under civil service under this provision. The particular class of officers, which are not under civil service, are required to do such a specialized type of work that it seems to me selection from the civil-service list should not be required. If the Commission does its duty from a business standpoint, it can go out and get these specialized employees to do a better job than you could ever hope to through the mill run of civil-service qualification.

So while I have been for many years generally supporting civil-service legislation, I believe that the departure involved in this section is amply justified.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

REHEARINGS; COURT REVIEW OF ORDERS

SEC. 19. (a) Any person, State, municipality, or State commission aggrieved by an order issued by the Commission in a proceeding under this Act to which such person, State, municipality, or State commission is a party may apply for a rehearing within 30 days after the issuance of such order. The application for rehearing shall set forth specifically the ground or grounds upon which such application is based. Upon such application the Commission shall have power to grant or deny rehearing or to abrogate or modify its order without further hearing. Unless the Commission acts upon the application for rehearing within 30 days after it is filed, such application may be deemed to have been denied. No proceeding to review any order of the Commission shall be brought by any person unless such person shall have made application to the Commission for a rehearing thereon.

(b) Any party to a proceeding under this act aggrieved by an order issued by the Commission in such proceeding may obtain a review of such order in the circuit court of appeals of the United States for any circuit wherein the natural-gas company to which the order relates is located or has its principal place of business, or in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, by filing in such court, within 60 days after the order of the Commission upon the application for rehearing, a written petition praying that the order of the Commission be modified or set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such petition shall forthwith be served upon any member of the Commission and thereupon the Commission shall certify and file with the court a transcript of the record upon which the order complained of was entered. Upon the filing of such transcript such court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to affirm, modify, or set aside such order in whole or in part. No objection to the order of the Commission shall be considered by the court unless such objection shall have been urged before the Commission in the application for rehearing unless there is reasonable ground for failure so to do. The finding of the Commission as to the fact, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive. If any party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for failure to adduce such evidence in the proceedings before the Commission, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Commission and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as to the court may seem proper. The Commission may modify its findings as to the facts by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and it shall file with the court such modified or new findings, which if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive, and its recommendation, if any, for the modification or setting aside of the original order. The judgment and decree of the court, affirming, modifying, or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such order of the Commission, shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in sections 239 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, secs. 346 and 347).

(c) The filing of an application for rehearing under subsection (a) shall not, unless specifically ordered by the Commission, operate as a stay of the Commission's order. The commencement of proceedings under subsection (b) of this section shall not, unless specifically ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the Commission's order.

ENFORCEMENT OF ACT; REGULATIONS AND ORDERS

SEC. 20. (a) Whenever it shall appear to the Commission that any person is engaged or about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of the provisions of this act, or of any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, it may in its discretion bring an action in the proper district court of the United States, the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, or the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, to enjoin such acts or practices and to enforce compliance with this act or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, and upon a proper showing a permanent or temporary injunction or decree or restraining order shall be granted without bond. The Commission may transmit such evidence as may be available concerning such acts or practices or concerning apparent violations of the Federal antitrust laws to the Attorney General, who, in his discretion, may institute the necessary criminal proceedings.

(b) Upon application of the Commission the district courts of the United States, the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue writs of mandamus commanding any person to comply with the provisions of this act or any rule, regulation, or order of the Commission thereunder.

(c) The Commission may employ such attorneys as it finds necessary for proper legal aid and service of the Commission or its members in the conduct of their work, or for proper representation of the public interest in investigations made by it, or cases or proceedings pending before it, whether at the Commission's own instance or upon complaint, or to appear for or represent the Commission in any case in court; and the expenses of such employment shall be paid out of the appropriation for the Commission.

GENERAL PENALTIES

SEC. 21. (a) Any person who willfully and knowingly does or causes or suffers to be done any act, matter, or thing in this act prohibited or declared to be unlawful, or who willfully and knowingly omits or fails to do any act, matter, or thing in this act required to be done, or willfully and knowingly causes or suffers such omission or failure, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or both.

(b) Any person who willfully and knowingly violates any rule, regulation, restriction, condition, or order made or imposed by the Commission under authority of this act, shall, in addition to any other penalties provided by law, be punished upon conviction thereof by a fine of not exceeding $500 for each and every day during which such offense occurs.

JURISDICTION OF OFFENSES; ENFORCEMENT OF LIABILITIES AND DUTIES

SEC. 22. The district courts of the United States, the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have exclusive jurisdiction of violations of this act or the rules, regulations, and orders thereunder, and of all suits in equity and actions at law brought to enforce any liability or duty created by, or to enjoin any violation of, this act or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder. Any criminal proceeding shall be brought in the district wherein any act or transaction constituting the violation occurred. Any suit or action to enforce any liability or duty created by, or to enjoin any violation of, this act or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder may be brought in any such district or in the district wherein the defendant is an inhabitant, and process in such cases may be served wherever the defendant may be found. Judgments and decrees so rendered shall be subject to review as provided in sections 128 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, secs. 225 and 347). No costs shall be assessed against the Commission in any judicial proceeding by or against the Commission under this act.

SEPARABILITY OF PROVISIONS

SEC. 23. If any provision of this act, or the application of such provision to any person or circumstance, shall be held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 24. This act may be cited as the Natural Gas Act.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FADDIS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 6586, pursuant to House Resolution 242, reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en bloc.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

On motion by Mr. LEA, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ACQUISITION OF CERTAIN LANDS IN THE YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 5394, Report No. 1149, to provide for the acquisition of certain lands in the Yosemite National Park and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DEROUEN]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5394) to provide for the acquisition of certain lands for, and the addition thereof to, the Yosemite National Park, in the State of California, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to same.

RENÉ L. DEROUEN,
J. W. ROBINSON,
FRED L. CRAWFORD,
Managers on the part of the House.

ALVA B. ADAMS,
KEY PITTMAN,
HENRY F. ASHURST,
GERALD P. NYE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5394) to provide for the acquisition of certain lands for, and the addition thereof to, the Yosemite National Park, in the State of California, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The House bill (sec. 2) read as follows:

"When title to such of the aforesaid privately owned lands as may be acquired with funds made available therefor has vested in the United States, such lands and all Federally owned lands described in section 1 hereof shall be added to and become a part of the Yosemite National Park and shall be subject to all laws and regulations applicable thereto: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to affect any valid existing rights."

The Senate amendment substitutes the following language in lieu of section 2 of the bill as passed by the House:

"When title to the aforesaid privately owned lands has been vested in the United States, all of the lands described in section 1 hereof shall be added to and become a part of the Yosemite National Park and shall be subject to all laws and regulations applicable thereto: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to affect any valid existing rights."

The amendment appears to affect no material change in H. R. 5394 and to involve merely a matter of draftmanship, and the purpose thereof is to make H. R. 5394 conform to S. 1791, a similar bill which was passed by the Senate on May 27.

RENÉ L. DEROUEN,
J. W. ROBINSON,
F. L. CRAWFORD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

FEDERAL POLICE JURISDICTION OF LAND WITHIN SHENANDOAH NATIONAL PARK

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 7086) to direct the Secretary of the Interior to notify the State of Virginia that the United States assumes police jurisdiction over the lands embraced within the Shenandoah National Park, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, to ask the gentleman a question. As I understand, this is for the purpose of having the United States take jurisdiction over the Federal lands in the national park, whereas at the present time you have no authority of law which will provide for the appointment of a United States commission?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Exactly. We are having over 100,000 visitors per month at this park. The Federal Government is patroling it, but it has no power to enforce its rules and regulations under Federal law. Also, they are anxious to have immediate action on this bill, because the salary of the park commissioner must be provided in the third deficiency bill, which is coming up shortly.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to give notice to the State of Virginia through its Governor, as contemplated by the act of the General Assembly of the State of Virginia approved March 28, 1928, that the United States assumes police jurisdiction over lands lying in the State of Virginia and included within the Shenandoah National Park, title to and exclusive jurisdiction over said lands having been conveyed and ceded under and by authority of said act and accepted by the Secretary of the Interior, saving, however, to the State of Virginia the right to serve civil or criminal process within the limits of the aforesaid park in suits or prosecutions for or on account of rights acquired, obligations incurred, or crimes committed in said State outside of said park; and saving further to the said State the right to tax persons and corporations, their franchises and property on the lands included in said park; and saving also to the persons residing in said park now, or hereafter, the right to vote at all elections held within the county or counties in which said park is situated; and saving further to the said State the right to tax sales of gasoline and other motor-vehicle fuels and oil for use in motor vehicles. All the laws applicable to places under sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States shall have force and effect in said park. All fugitives from justice taking refuge in said park shall be subject to the same laws as refugees from justice found in the State of Virginia.

SEC. 2. That said park shall constitute a part of the United States judicial district for the western district of Virginia, and the district court of the United States in and for said district shall have jurisdiction of all offenses committed within the boundaries of the said park.

SEC. 3. That all hunting, or the killing, wounding, or capturing at any time of any wild bird or animal, except dangerous animals when it is necessary to prevent them from destroying human lives or inflicting personal injury, is prohibited within the limits of said park; nor shall any fish be taken out of any of the waters of the said park, in any other way than by hook and line, and then only at such seasons and at such times and in such manner as may be directed by the Secretary of the Interior. That the Secretary of the Interior shall make and publish such general rules and regulations as he may deem necessary and proper for the management and care of the park and for the protection of the property therein, especially for the preservation from injury or spoliation of all timber, mineral deposits, natural curiosities, or wonderful objects within said park, and for the protection of the animals and birds in the park from capture or destruction, and to prevent their being frightened or driven from the said park; and he shall make rules and regulations governing the taking of fish from the streams or lakes in the said park. Possession within said park of the dead bodies or any part thereof of any wild bird or animal shall be prima-facie evidence that the person or persons having same are guilty of violating this act. Any person or persons, or stage or express company, or railway company, who knows or has reason to believe that they were taken or killed contrary to the provisions of this act, and who receives for transportation any of said animals, birds, or fish so killed, caught, or taken, or who shall violate any of the other provisions of this act, or any rule or regulation that may be promulgated by the Secretary of the Interior, with reference to the management and care of the said park, or for the protection of the property therein for the preservation from injury or spoliation of timber, mineral deposits, natural curiosities, or wonderful objects within said park, or for the protection of the animals, birds, or fish in said park, or who shall within said park commit any damage, injury or spoliation to or upon any building, fence, sign, hedge, gate, guidepost, tree, wood, underwood, timber, garden, crops, vegetables, plants, land, springs, mineral deposits, natural curiosities, or other matter or thing growing or being thereon, or situated therein, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be subject to a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment not exceeding 6 months, or both, and be adjudged to pay all the costs of the proceedings.

SEC. 4. That all guns, traps, nets, seines, teams, horses, or means of transportation of every nature or description, used by any person or persons within the limits of said park when engaged in killing, trapping, ensnaring, taking, or capturing such wild beasts, birds, fish, or animals shall be forfeited to the United States and may be seized by the officers in said park and held pending prosecution of any person or persons arrested under the charge of violating the provisions of this act, and upon conviction under this act of such person or persons using said guns, traps, nets, seines, teams, horses, or other means of transportation, such forfeiture shall be adjudicated as a penalty in addition to the other punishment prescribed in this act. Such forfeited property shall be disposed of and accounted for by and under the authority of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 5. That upon the recommendation and approval of the Secretary of the Interior of a qualified candidate the United States District Court for the Western District of Virginia shall appoint a commissioner who shall have jurisdiction to hear and act upon all complaints made of any violations of law or of the rules and regulatjons made by the Secretary of the Interior for the government of the park and for the protection of the animals, birds, and fish, and objects of interest therein, and for other purposes, authorized by this act. Such commissioner shall have power, upon sworn information, to issue process in the name of the United States for the arrest of any person charged with the commission of any misdemeanor, or charged with a violation of the rules and regulations, or with a violation of any of the provisions of this act prescribed for the government of said park and for the protection of the animals, birds, and fish in said park and to try the person so charged, and, if found guilty, to impose punishment and to adjudge the forfeiture prescribed. In all cases of conviction an appeal shall lie from the judgment of said commissioner to the United States District Court for the Western District of Virginia and the United States District Court in the aforementioned district shall prescribe the rules of procedure and practice for said commissioner in the trial of cases and for appeal to said United States District Court.

SEC. 6. That any and all United States commissioners now or hereafter authorized to act within the western district of Virginia and any and all persons who shall hereafter succeed to the duties, powers, and authority of United States commissioners in and for said district shall have full power, authority, and jurisdiction to act, with respect to offenses or violations of law occurring within the limits of the Shenandoah National Park, as the United States commissioner for the Shenandoah National Park may act with respect to offenses or violations of law occurring within the limits of said park.

SEC. 7. That such commissioner shall also have power to issue process as hereinbefore provided for the arrest of any person charged with the commission within said park of any criminal offense not covered by the provisions of section 3 of this act, to hear the evidence introduced, and, if he is of the opinion that probable cause is shown for holding the person so charged for trial, shall cause such person to be safely conveyed to a secure place of confinement within the jurisdiction of the United States District Court for the Western District of Virginia, and certify a transcript of the record of his proceedings and the testimony in such case to court, which court shall have jurisdiction of the case: Provided, That the said commissioner shall grant bail in all cases bailable under the laws of the United States or of said State.

SEC. 8. That processes issued by the commissioner shall be directed to the marshal of the United States for the western district of Virginia, but nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent the arrest by any officer or employee of the Government or any person employed by the United States, without process of any person taken in the act of violating the law or this act or the regulations prescribed by the said Secretary as aforesaid.

SEC. 9. That the commissioner provided for in this act shall be paid an annual salary, as appropriated for by Congress: Provided, That the said commissioner shall reside within the exterior boundaries of the Shenandoah National Park or at a place reasonably adjacent to the park, the place of residence to be designated by the Secretary of the Interior: And provided further, That all fees, costs, and expenses collected by the commissioner shall be disposed of as provided in section 11 of this act.

SEC. 10. That all fees, costs, and expenses arising in cases under this act and properly chargeable to the United States shall be certified, approved, and paid as are like fees, costs, and expenses in the courts of the United States.

SEC. 11. That all fines and costs imposed and collected shall be deposited by said commissioner of the United States, or the marshal of the United States collecting the same, with the clerk of the United States District Court for the Western District of Virginia.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 15, after the word "vehicles", insert "The Secretary is further directed to give like notice as to lands hereafter conveyed to the United States under like authority at such time or times as he shall determine to be consistent with the interests of the United States."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to extend their remarks on the bill (H. R. 6586) to regulate the transportation and sale of natural gas in interstate commerce, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

GOVERNMENT REORGANIZATION

Mr. FRED M. VINSON, on behalf of the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON], presented a privileged report on the bill (H. R. 7730) to authorize the President to appoint not to exceed six administrative assistants, which was referred to the Union Calendar and ordered printed.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the bill just passed, dealing with interstate transportation and sale of natural gas and to include therein extracts from the hearings and certain citations on the legal aspects of the question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

(Mr. FITZGERALD, Mr. MAVERICK, Mr. CROSSER, and Mr. CREAL asked and were given permission to revise and extend their own remarks.)

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on the bill H. R. 7051.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD my own remarks recently made in Boston.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1938

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 6958) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year 1938 for printing in the RECORD under the rule.

LAURA E. ALEXANDER

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 3259) for the relief of Laura E. Alexander, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment: Page 1, line 6, strike out "$6,349" and insert "$5,000."

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman tell us the effect of the amendment?

Mr. WEAVER. The amendment simply reduces the amount carried by the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TERM OF COURT AT LIVINGSTON, MONT.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 4795) to provide for a term of court at Livingston, Mont., with a Senate amendment and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment: Page 1, line 9, after "Havre", insert: "Miles City."

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the effect of this change?

Mr. WEAVER. This bill, I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts, was introduced by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] to provide for a term of court at Livingston. The Senate added another place, Miles City. I may say to the gentleman, however, that provision is made that the United States shall not bear any of the expense in regard to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 6635. An act to dispense with the necessity for insurance by the Government against loss or damage to valuables in shipment, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6692. An act making appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7726. An act making appropriations for the first half of the month of July 1937, for certain operations of the Federal Government which remain unprovided for on July 1, 1937, through the failure of enactment of the supply bills customarily providing for such operations; and

H. J. Res. 433. Joint resolution making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, for the Civilian Conservation Corps, the railroad retirement account, and other activities, and for other purposes.

The Speaker announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 2156. An act to amend the act relating to the Omaha-Council Bluffs Missouri River Bridge Board of Trustees, approved June 10, 1930, and for other purposes;

S. 2620. An act to amend the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, 1920;

S. 2621. An act to enable the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to authorize the city and county of Honolulu, a municipal corporation, to issue sewer bonds;

S. 2622. An act to authorize the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to create a public corporate authority authorized to engage in slum clearance and housing undertakings and to issue bonds of the authority, to authorize said legislature to provide for financial assistance to said authority by the Territory and its political subdivisions, and for other purposes;

S. 2652. An act to enable the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to authorize the issuance of certain bonds, and for other purposes; and

S. 2653. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to enable the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to authorize the issuance of certain bonds, and for other purposes", approved August 3, 1935.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 563. An act for the relief of E. W. Garrison;

H. R. 607. An act for the relief of Dorothy McCourt;

H. R. 1235. An act for the relief of John Brennan;

H. R. 1310. An act for the relief of Clifford R. George and Mabel D. George;

H. R. 1406. An act for the relief of Frank S. Walker;

H. R. 1689. An act for the relief of Dominga Pardo;

H. R. 1731. An act for the relief of Angelo and Auro Cattaneo;

H. R. 1761. An act for the relief of Paul J. Francis;

H. R. 1851. An act for the relief of W. D. Davis;

H. R. 2404. An act for the relief of James Philip Coyle;

H. R. 2482. An act for the relief of Lonnie O. Ledford;

H. R. 2703. An act to provide for the representation of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia on the annual conference of senior circuit judges;

H. R. 2757. An act to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the claim of the Morse Dry Dock & Repair Co.;

H. R. 2774. An act for the relief of certain employees of the Division of Investigation, Department of the Interior, and certain disbursing officers of the Department of the Interior;

H. R. 2934. An act for the relief of Raymond E. Payne and Anna R. Payne;

H. R. 2983. An act for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Porter;

H. R. 3002. An act for the relief of Timothy Joseph McCarthy;

H. R. 3075. An act for the relief of E. P. Lewis;

H. R. 3123. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to lease to Old Fort Niagara Association, Inc., portions of the Fort Niagara Military Reservation, N. Y.;

H. R. 3262. An act for the relief of John H. Wykle;

H. R. 3284. An act to transfer Crawford County, Iowa, from the southern judicial district of Iowa to the northern judicial district of Iowa;

H. R. 3339. An act for the relief of Allie Rankin;

H. R. 3565. An act for the relief of the Northwestern Ohio Mutual Rodded Fire Insurance Co.;

H. R. 3809. An act for the relief of H. E. Wingard;

H. R. 3967. An act for the relief of Adele Fowlkes;

H. R. 4623. An act for the relief of C. O. Eastman;

H. R. 4679. An act for the relief of John L. Summers, former disbursing clerk, Treasury Department; and Frank White, G. F. Allen, H. T. Tate, and W. O. Woods, former Treasurers of the United States;

H. R. 4682. An act for the relief of W. R. Fuchs;

H. R. 4711. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across Puget Sound at or near a point commonly known as The Narrows in the State of Washington;

H. R. 4942. An act for the relief of A. L. Mallery;

H. R. 5102. An act for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Muzio;

H. R. 5258. An act for the relief of the Jackson Casket & Manufacturing Co.;

H. R. 5337. An act for the relief of Charles B. Murphy;

H. R. 5438. An act for the relief of Richard T. Edwards;

H. R. 5496. An act for the relief of Willard Webster;

H. R. 5652. An act for the relief of Frank A. Smith;

H. R. 5848. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Wabash River at or near Merom, Sullivan County, Ind.;

H. R. 6049. An act to amend the Interstate Commerce Act;

H. R. 6144. An act to amend the Canal Zone Code;

H. R. 6230. An act for the relief of certain former disbursing officers of the Veterans' Administration and of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, Federal Board for Vocational Education, and the United States Veterans' Bureau (now Veterans' Administration);

H. R. 6285. An act authorizing the State Roads Commission of the State of Maryland and the State Road Commission of the State of West Virginia to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Potomac River in Washington County, Md., at or near a point opposite Shepherdstown, W. Va., and a point at or near Shepherdstown, Jefferson County, W. Va., to take the place of a bridge destroyed by flood;

H. R. 6286. An act authorizing the State Roads Commission of the State of Maryland and the State Road Commission of the State of West Virginia to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Potomac River at or near a point in the vicinity of Hancock, in Washington County, Md., and a point near the north end of Morgan County, W. Va., to take the place of a bridge destroyed by flood;

H. R. 6292. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Niobrara, Nebr.;

H. R. 6436. An act authorizing cash relief for certain employees of the Panama Canal not coming within the provisions of the Canal Zone Retirement Act;

H. R. 6494. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Snake River, between Clarkston, Wash., and Lewiston, Idaho;

H. R. 6692. An act making appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6763. An act to extend for 1 additional year the 3½-percent interest rate on certain Federal land bank loans, to provide a 4-percent interest rate on such loans for the period July 1, 1938, to June 30, 1939, and to provide for a 4-percent interest rate on land bank commissioner's loans for a period of 2 years;

H. R. 7021. An act validating and confirming certain mineral patents issued for lands situated in township 5 south, range 15 east, Montana principal meridian, in the State of Montana;

H. R. 7726. An act making appropriations for the first half of the month of July 1937 for certain operations of the Federal Government which remain unprovided for on July 1, 1937, through the failure of enactment of the supply bills customarily providing for such operations;

H. J. Res. 41. Joint resolution authorizing the disposal of certain lands held by the Panama Railroad Co. on Manzanillo Island, Republic of Panama;

H. J. Res. 349. Joint resolution authorizing certain retired officers or employees of the United States to accept such decorations, orders, medals, or presents as have been tendered them by foreign governments; and

H. J. Res. 433. Joint resolution making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, for the Civilian Conservation Corps, the railroad retirement account, and other activities, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, July 2, 1937, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold a public hearing in room 219, House Office Building, Wednesday, July 7, 1937, at 10 a. m., on H. R. 7158, to except yachts, tugs, towboats, and unrigged vessels from certain provisions of the act of June 25, 1936, as amended.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE—POSTPONED

The meeting of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce at 10 a. m., Wednesday, July 7, 1937, on H. R. 5182, and H. R. 6917—textile bills—is postponed until 10 a. m., Thursday, July 8, 1937.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

696. A letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting the draft of a bill to define certain units and to fix the standard of weights and measures in the United States; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

697. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to make available for national-park purposes certain lands within the boundaries of the proposed Isle Royale National Park, Mich.; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. KELLER: Committee on the Library. H. R. 7564. A bill to permit the erection of the Shenandoah Memorial in or near Ava, Ohio; without amendment (Rept. No. 1175).

Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GREEVER: Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation. H. R. 7680. A bill to authorize the construction of a Federal reclamation project to furnish a water supply for the lands of the Arch Hurley conservation district in New Mexico; without amendment (Rept. No. 1176). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah: Select Committee on Government Organization. H. R. 7730. A bill to authorize the President to appoint not to exceed six administrative assistants; without amendment (Rept. No. 1177). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. CASE of South Dakota: Committee on Claims. H. R. 2649. A bill for the relief of Elva T. Shuey; without amendment (Rept. No. 1157). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington: Committee on Claims. H. R. 3723. A bill for the relief of Milton S. Merrill; with amendment (Rept. No. 1160). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. McGEHEE: Committee on Claims. H. R. 3757. A bill for the relief of Rellie Dodgen; with amendment (Rept. No. 1159). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. McGEHEE: Committee on Claims. H. R. 3776. A bill for the relief of T. T. East and the Cassidy Southwestern Commission Co., citizens of the State of Texas; without amendment (Rept. No. 1160). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. ATKINSON: Committee on Claims. H. R. 5615. A bill for the relief of Capt. B. B. Barbee; with amendment (Rept. No. 1161). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Claims. H. R. 5912. A bill for the relief of Judd & Detweiler, Inc.; with amendment (Rept. No. 1162). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Claims. H. R. 5927. A bill for the relief of Walter G. Anderson; with amendment (Rept. No. 1163). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Claims. H. R. 7172. A bill for the relief of Jesse A. LaRue; with amendment (Rept. No. 1164). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Claims. H. R. 7316. A bill to extend the benefits of the United States Employees' Compensation Act of September 7, 1916, to Ethel Smith McDaniel; with amendment (Rept. No. 1165). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. RYAN: Committee on Claims. H. R. 7458. A bill for the relief of John E. T. Clark; without amendment (Rept. No. 1166). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Claims. H. R. 7679. A bill for the relief of Livvie V. Rowe; without amendment (Rept. No. 1167). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington: Committee on Claims. S. 184. An act for the relief of Josephine M. Scott; without amendment (Rept. No. 1168). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. DREW of Pennsylvania: Committee on Claims. S. 826. An act for the relief of the estates of H. Lee Shelton and Mrs. H. Lee Shelton, Mrs. J. R. Scruggs, and Mrs. Irvin Johnson; with amendment (Rept. No. 1169). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington: Committee on Claims. S. 1219. An act for the relief of Pauline McKinney; with amendment (Rept. No. 1170). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. CARLSON: Committee on Claims. S. 1401. An act for the relief of Willard Collins; with amendment (Rept. No. 1171). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. RYAN: Committee on Claims. S. 1640. An act for the relief of Harry Bryan and Alda Duffield Mullins, and others; with amendment (Rept. No. 1172). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. DREW of Pennsylvania: Committee on Claims. S. 1822. An act for the relief of Harry Burnett; without amendment (Rept. No. 1173). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Claims. S. 2399. An act for the relief of R. L. McLachlan; without amendment (Rept. No. 1174). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of rule XXII, the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5878) to authorize the payment of the adjusted-service credit of William Francis Powers to his sister, and the same was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FORAND: A bill (H. R. 7739) to increase the hourly rates of pay for charmen and charwomen in the custodial service of the Post Office Department; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. RAMSPECK (by request): A bill (H. R. 7740) to amend the Classification Act of 1923 (Public, No. 516, 67th Cong.) as amended; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

By Mr. DOUGHTON: A bill (H. R. 7741) to amend the Adjusted Compensation Payment Act, 1936, to provide for the escheat to the United States of certain amounts; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. McREYNOLDS: Joint Resolution (H. J. Res. 437), to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a commission for the settlement of the special claims comprehended within the terms of the convention between the United States of America and the United Mexican States concluded April 24, 1934", approved April 10, 1935, and to redefine the jurisdiction of the Special Mexican Claims Commission in certain particulars; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BACON: A bill (H. R. 7742) for the relief of James Peter Kalogris; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BARRY: A bill (H. R. 7743) to correct the military record of Emil Bayer; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BOYLAN: A bill (H. R. 7744) for the relief of Frank J. Farrish; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CULKIN: A bill (H. R. 7745) for the relief of H. H. Burnham and James W. Hagan; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7746) granting an increase of pension to Martha J. Brownell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FLETCHER: A bill (H. R. 7747) granting an increase of pension to Jane A. Richardson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HAVENNER: A bill (H. R. 7748) for the relief of William Edgar Taylor; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. LEWIS of Colorado: A bill (H. R. 7749) granting a pension to Elizabeth L. Lloyd; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona: A bill (H. R. 7750) to compensate Haldor S. Dever for injuries received on account of a collision with a Government truck, at or near San Carlos Indian Reservation; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7751) to compensate the heirs-at-law of Eleanor Dalrymple, deceased, for alleged wrongful death of Eleanor Dalrymple, on account of a collision with a Government truck, at or near San Carlos Indian Reservation; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7752) to compensate the heirs-at-law of Gilda Lipp, deceased, for alleged wrongful death of Gilda Lipp, on account of a collision with a Government truck, at or near San Carlos Indian Reservation; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 7753) granting a pension to Addie Higginbotham; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. THURSTON: A bill (H. R. 7754) granting an increase of pension to Eva P. Black; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WITHROW: A bill (H. R. 7755) granting an increase of pension to Margaret H. Jones; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

2818. By Mr. BOYLAN of New York: Petition of residents of New York City, opposing change in Supreme Court by legislation without constitutional amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

2819. Also, resolution adopted by the Board of Estimate and Apportionment of the City of New York, approving and urging the passage of House bill 6841; to the Committee on Agriculture.

2820. By Mr. BUCK: Senate Joint Resolution No. 25, in the nature of a memorial, of the Legislature of the State of California, memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States to protect the rights of the State of California to its tidelands and the coastal area lying seaward of the State of California; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

2821. By Mr. COLDEN: Resolution adopted by the Sacramento Americanization Assembly, Sacramento, Calif., opposing the admission of the Territory of Hawaii to statehood; to the Committee on the Territories.

2822. By Mr. FORAND: Petition of the Retail Tobacco Dealers of America, Inc., favoring the enactment into law of House bill 6791, a bill to prohibit travelers from bringing into the United States more than 50 cigars duty free; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

2823. By Mr. GILDEA: Resolution of the Pennsylvania Pharmaceutical Association, urging the enactment of the Tydings-Miller Fair Trade Enabling Act; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

2824. Also, resolution of the thirty-third convention of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, supporting necessary legislation to fully protect the children of today and years to come by enactment of child-labor legislation; to the Committee on Labor.

2825. Also, resolution of the thirty-third convention of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, endorsing the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt's court reform program; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

2826. By Mr. HILDEBRANDT: Petition protesting against the Sheppard-Hill bill; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

2827. Also, resolution regarding crop control and soil conservation; to the Committee on Agriculture.

2828. By Mr. HOOK: Resolution forwarded by John Stone, as chairman of the Finnish American Clubs of the Upper Peninsula of Michigan, urging the Congress of the United States to adopt the amendment to Senate Joint Resolution No. 135, so that Finland and the Finnish people may be invited to participate in the tercentenary celebration of the first permanent settlement of the Delaware River Valley in June 1938; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

2829. By Mr. KRAMER: Resolution of the City Council of the city of Los Angeles, relative to relief appropriations, etc.; to the Committee on Appropriations.

2830. Also, resolution of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, relative to child labor, etc.; to the Committee on Labor.

SENATE

FRIDAY, JULY 2, 1937

(Legislative day of Tuesday, June 15, 1937)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Thursday, July 1, 1937, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States, submitting nominations, were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

ORDER FOR RECESS TO TUESDAY

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its labors today it adjourn until 12 o'clock noon on Tuesday next.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, may I ask a question of the Senator?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am not familiar with the rule, and I must apologize for my ignorance in the matter. If a measure is taken up today as the unfinished business and is not disposed of, does that mean that it goes over until Tuesday as the unfinished business for that day?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; it would. Any measure before the Senate today and not disposed of at the time of adjournment would be the unfinished business on the reassembling of the Senate on Tuesday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas that when the Senate concludes its work today it take a recess until Tuesday next? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Chavez	King	Radcliffe
Andrews	Connally	La Follette	Robinson
Ashurst	Copeland	Lewis	Schwartz
Austin	Davis	Logan	Schwellenbach
Bailey	Donahey	Lonergan	Sheppard
Bankhead	Ellender	Lundeen	Steiwer
Barkley	Frazier	McAdoo	Thomas, Okla.
Berry	Glass	McCarran	Thomas, Utah
Bilbo	Guffey	McGill	Townsend
Black	Hale	McKellar	Truman
Bone	Harrison	McNary	Tydings
Borah	Hatch	Minton	Vandenberg
Brown, N. H.	Hayden	Murray	Van Nuys
Bulow	Herring	O'Mahoney	Wheeler
Burke	Hitchcock	Overton	White
Byrd	Hughes	Pepper
Capper	Johnson, Calif.	Pittman
Caraway	Johnson, Colo.	Pope

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY], the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY], the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I announce that the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is absent from the Senate because of illness.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], my colleague the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-nine Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 88) providing for the participation of the United States in the world's fair to be held by the San Francisco Bay Exposition, Inc., in the city of San Francisco during the year 1939, and for other purposes, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5394) to provide for the acquisition of certain lands for, and the addition thereof to, the Yosemite National Park, in the State of California, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2901) to amend the act of May 29, 1930 (46 Stat. 349), for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service and in certain positions in the legislative branch of the Government to include all other employees in the legislative branch.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to each of the following bills of the House:

H. R. 3259. An act for the relief of Laura E. Alexander; and

H. R. 4795. An act to provide for a term of court at Livingston, Mont.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 6586. An act to regulate the transportation and sale of natural gas in interstate commerce, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7051. An act authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 7086. An act to direct the Secretary of the Interior to notify the State of Virginia that the United States assumes police jurisdiction over the lands embraced within the Shenandoah National Park, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 2254. An act to amend section 460, chapter 44, title II, of the act entitled "An act to define and punish crimes in the District of Alaska and to provide a code of criminal procedure for said District", approved March 3, 1899, as amended;

H. R. 3259. An act for the relief of Laura E. Alexander;

H. R. 4795. An act to provide for a term of court at Livingston, Mont.;

H. R. 5394. An act to provide for the acquisition of certain lands for, and the addition thereof to, the Yosemite National Park, in the State of California, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 434. Joint resolution to amend the act entitled "An act to amend section 4471 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended."

BEQUESTS OF THE LATE JAMES REUEL SMITH

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize the acceptance on behalf of the United States of certain bequests of James Reuel Smith, late of the city of Yonkers, State of New York, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

CLAIM OF LEO L. HARRISON

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, his report and recommendation concerning the claim of Leo L. Harrison against the United States, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by members of Farmers Union Local No. 89, of Eddy County, N. Dak., protesting against the enactment of the bill (S. 25) to prevent profiteering in time of war and to equalize the burdens of war and thus provide for the national defense, and promote peace, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a letter, with an accompanying statement, from Wilhelm Kuehne, secretary-treasurer of the Labor Alliance of America, Jamaica, N. Y., in relation to the President's Supreme Court proposal, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COPELAND presented a resolution adopted by the Grand Council of the State of New York, Orders Sons of Italy in America, favoring the enactment of the bill (S. 1678) to provide additional home-mortgage relief by providing for (1) a moratorium on foreclosures permitting appropriate legislation to provide further emergency relief to home-mortgage indebtedness; (2) to further refinance home mortgages; (3) to reduce the rate of interest and extend payment and amortization of mortgages; (4) to eliminate personal and deficiency judgments in foreclosures; and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a resolution adopted by a mass meeting assembled at the Vaad Hakole Synagogue in Rochester, N. Y., protesting against alleged attacks upon and the destruction of Jewish life and property in Poland, and also requesting that the Government of the United States make proper representations to the Government of Poland in the premises, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2091) for the relief of Ada Saul, Steve Dolack, and Marie McDonald, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 857) thereon.

Mr. TOWNSEND, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 449) for the relief of Earl Hill, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 858) thereon.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1881) for the relief of the Consolidated Aircraft Corporation, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 859) thereon.

Mr. CONNALLY, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 537) to provide suitable accommodations for the district court of the United States at Glasgow, Mont., reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 860) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5552) to provide for the relinquishment of an easement granted to the United States by the Green Bay and Mississippi Canal Co., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 861) thereon.

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 2619) to amend paragraph (1) of section 22 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 862) thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on July 1, 1937, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 2156. An act to amend the act relating to the Omaha-Council Bluffs Missouri River Bridge Board of Trustees, approved June 10, 1930, and for other purposes;

S. 2620. An act to amend the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, 1920;

S. 2621. An act to enable the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to authorize the city and county of Honolulu, a municipal corporation, to issue sewer bonds;

S. 2622. An act to authorize the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to create a public corporate authority authorized to engage in slum clearance and housing undertakings and to issue bonds of the authority, to authorize said legislature to provide for financial assistance to said authority by the Territory and its political subdivisions, and for other purposes;

S. 2652. An act to enable the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to authorize the issuance of certain bonds, and for other purposes; and

S. 2653. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to enable the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to authorize the issuance of certain bonds, and for other purposes", approved August 3, 1935.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BAILEY:

A bill (S. 2739) for the relief of Virgil D. Alden and others; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. TRUMAN:

A bill (S. 2740) to amend the Social Security Act with respect to its application to employees of fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, and associations, and of corporations holding title for tax-exempt organizations; to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (S. 2741) to provide for the erection of a monument on the Lone Jack Battlefield, Mo., in commemoration of the Battle of Lone Jack; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SCHWARTZ:

A bill (S. 2742) for the relief of Mrs. C. Doorn; to the Committee on Immigration.

By Mr. BARKLEY:

A bill (S. 2743) granting a pension to Henry C. Field; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 2744) granting an increase of pension to Helen M. Lamar (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 2745) granting a pension to Alice G. Townsend; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FRAZIER and Mr. BULOW:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 174) providing the right of appeal to the Supreme Court in certain cases involving claims of the Sioux Indians; to the Commitee on Indian Affairs.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 6586. An act to regulate the transportation and sale of natural gas in interstate commerce, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

H. R. 7051. An act authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

H. R. 7086. An act to direct the Secretary of the Interior to notify the State of Virginia that the United States assumes police jurisdiction over the lands embraced within the Shenandoah National Park, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

On motion by Mr. BAILEY, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5495) for the relief of Anne E. Felix, and it was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY—AMENDMENT

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], and myself, I submit an amendment in the nature of a substitute intended to be proposed to the bill (S. 1392) to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, which I ask may be printed and lie on the table. I also ask that the proposed amendment be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to lie on the table, to be printed, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. LOGAN (for himself, Mr. HATCH, and Mr. ASHURST) to the bill (S. 1392) to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, viz: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"TITLE I

"SECTION 1. Section 215 of the Judicial Code of the United States is hereby repealed and reenacted to read as follows:

"'SEC. 215. The Supreme Court of the United States shall consist of a Chief Justice and eight Associate Justices, any six of whom shall constitute a quorum: Provided, however, The number of Justices may be increased by the appointment of an additional Justice in the manner now provided for the appointment of Justices, for each Justice, including the Chief Justice, who at the time of the nomination has reached the age of 75 years, but not more than one appointment of an additional Justice as herein authorized shall be made in any calendar year: Provided, That the authority to appoint for any calendar year shall not lapse by reason of the rejection of the nomination, delay in confirmation, inability to nominate during an adjournment of the Senate or withdrawal of the nomination in a succeeding calendar year; and when such additional Justice or Justices shall have been so appointed no vacancy caused by the death, resignation, or retirement of a Justice (except the Chief Justice) who has reached the age of 75 years, shall be filled, unless the filling of such vacancy is necessary to maintain at not less than nine the number of Justices who have not reached the age of 75. The number of appointments so made shall not, at any time, increase the total number of Justices by more than two-thirds of the permanent membership of the Court. If the number of members of the Supreme Court is in excess of nine not less than two-thirds of the membership shall constitute a quorum. As used in this section, the term "Justice" shall not include a Justice who has retired from regular, active service.'

"SEC. 2. (a) An additional judge of any court of the United States other than the Supreme Court may be appointed, in the manner now provided by law, and to the same court, for each judge, appointed to hold his office during good behavior, who at the time of nomination of the additional judge has reached the age of 70 years.

"(b) The number of judges of any such court shall be increased by the number appointed thereto under the provisions of subsection (a) of this section but no vacancy shall be created by the death, resignation, or retirement of a judge of such court (other than a chief justice) whose continuance in office has occasioned the appointment of an additional judge. No appointment shall be made under subsection (a) which at any one time would result in (1) more than 20 judges in regular active service, in addition to those otherwise authorized by law, or (2) an addition of more than two judges to the number otherwise authorized by law to be appointed to any circuit court of appeals, the Court of Claims, the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, or the United States Customs Court, or (3) more than twice the number of judges otherwise authorized by law to be appointed for any district or, in the case of judges appointed for more than one district, for any such group of districts.

"(c) Three-fifths of the judges of each of the following courts shall constitute a quorum thereof: The United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, the Court of Claims, and the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals.

"(d) An additional judge shall not be appointed under the provisions of this section when the judge who has reached the age of 70 years is commissioned to an office as to which Congress has provided that a vacancy shall not be filled.

"SEC. 3. (a) Any Circuit Judge may be designated and assigned from time to time by the Chief Justice of the United States for general service in the circuit court of appeals for any circuit. Any district judge may be designated and assigned from time to time by the Chief Justice of the United States for general service in any district court, or, subject to the authority of the Chief Justice, by the senior circuit judge of his circuit for service in any district court within the circuit. A district judge designated and assigned to another district hereunder may hold court separately and at the same time as the district judge in such district. All designations and assignments made hereunder shall be filed in the office of the clerk and entered on the minutes of both the court from and to which a judge is designated and assigned, and thereafter the judge so designated and assigned shall be authorized to discharge all the judicial duties (except the power of appointment to a statutory position or of permanent designation of a newspaper or depository of funds) of a judge of the court to which he is designated and assigned. The designation and assignment of a judge shall not impair his authority to perform such judicial duties of the court to which he was commissioned as may be necessary or appropriate. The designation and assignment of any judge may be terminated at any time by order of the Chief Justice or by the senior circuit judge, as the case may be.

"(b) After the designation and assignment of a judge by the Chief Justice, the senior circuit judge of the circuit in which such judge is commissioned may certify to the Chief Justice any consideration which such senior circuit judge believes to make advisable that the designated judge remain in or return for service in the court to which he was commissioned. If the Chief Justice deems the reasons sufficient he shall revoke, or designate the time of termination of, such designation and assignment.

"(3) In case a trial or hearing has been entered upon but has not been concluded before the expiration of the period of service of a district judge designated and assigned hereunder, the period of service shall, unless terminated under the provisions of subsection (a) of this section, be deemed to be extended until the trial or hearing has been concluded. Any designated and assigned district judge who has held court in another district than his own shall have power, notwithstanding his absence from such district and the expiration of any time limit in his designation, to decide all matters which have been submitted to him within such district, to decide motions for new trials, settle bills of exceptions, certify or authenticate narratives of testimony, or perform any other act required by law or the rules to be performed in order to prepare any case so tried by him for review in an appellate court; and his action thereon in writing filed with the clerk of the court where the trial or hearing was had shall be as valid as if such action had been taken by him within that district and within the period of his designation. Any designated and assigned circuit judge who has sat on another court than his own shall have power, notwithstanding the expiration of any time limit in his designation, to participate in the decision of all matters submitted to the court while he was sitting and to perform or participate in any act appropriate to the disposition or review of matters submitted while he was sitting on such court, and his action thereon shall be as valid as if it had been taken while sitting on such court and within the period of his designation.

"(d) When any judge is assigned to duty outside of his district or circuit his subsistence allowance shall be $10 per diem.

"SEC. 4. (a) The Supreme Court shall have power to appoint a proctor. It shall be his duty (1) to obtain and, if deemed by the Court to be desirable, to publish information as to the volume, character, and status of litigation in the district courts and circuit courts of appeals, and such other information as the Supreme Court may from time to time require by order, and it shall be the duty of any judge, clerk, or marshal of any court of the United States promptly to furnish such information as may be required by the proctor; (2) to investigate the need of assigning district and circuit judges to other courts and to make recommendations thereon to the Chief Justice; (3) to recommend, with the approval of the Chief Justice, to any court of the United States methods for expediting cases pending on its dockets; and (4) to perform such other duties consistent with his office as the court shall direct.

"(b) The proctor shall, by requisition upon the Public Printer, have any necessary printing and binding done at the Government Printing Office, and authority is conferred upon the Public Printer to do such printing and binding.

"(c) The salary of the proctor shall be $10,000 per annum, payable out of the Treasury in monthly installments, which shall be in full compensation for the services required by law. He shall also be allowed, in the discretion of the Chief Justice, stationery, supplies, travel expenses, equipment, necessary professional and clerical assistance, and miscellaneous expenses appropriate for performing the duties imposed by this section. The expenses in connection with the maintenance of his office shall be paid from the appropriation of the Supreme Court of the United States.

"SEC. 5. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 6. When used in this act—

"(a) The term 'circuit court of appeals' includes the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia; the term 'senior circuit judge' includes the chief justice of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia; and the term 'circuit' includes the District of Columbia.

"(b) The term 'district court' includes the District Court of the District of Columbia but does not include the district court in any Territory or insular possession.

"(c) The term 'judge' includes justice and the term 'chief justice' shall include the presiding judge of the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals.

"TITLE II

"SECTION 101. Whenever in any court of the United States in any suit or proceeding to which the United States or any agency thereof or any officer or employee thereof, as such officer or employee, is not a party, the constitutionality of any statute of the United States is drawn in question, the court having jurisdiction of the suit or proceeding shall certify such fact to the Attorney General if the court is of opinion that a substantial ground exists for questioning the constitutionality of the statute. The court shall afford the United States an opportunity for presentation of evidence (if evidence is otherwise receivable in such suit or proceeding) and argument. In the suit or proceeding the United States shall, subject to the applicable provisions of law, have the same rights as a party to the extent necessary for a proper presentation of the facts and law relating to the constitutionality of the statute and shall have the right to become a party to such proceeding, case, or controversy.

"SEC. 102. Whenever any judgment, decree, or order in any suit or proceeding referred to in section 101 is based in whole or in part upon a decision that any statute of the United States is unconstitutional as therein applied, the United States, irrespective of whether or not it had previously presented evidence or argument under the provisions of section 101 shall have the same right to appeal therefrom as any party to the suit or proceeding. Within 60 days after the entry of any such judgment, decree, or order, whether final or interlocutory, the United States may also appeal therefrom directly to the Supreme Court, in which event any appeal or cross-appeal therefrom by any party to the suit or proceeding taken previously or taken within 60 days after notice of the appeal by the United States shall also be treated as taken directly to the Supreme Court. Such appeals to the Supreme Court shall, on motion of the United States, be advanced to a speedy hearing. This section shall not confer upon the United States any right of review by the Supreme Court unless a party to the suit or proceeding also takes an appeal.

"SEC. 103. Within 60 days after the entry of any judgment, decree, or order referred to in section 102, the United States, irrespective of whether or not it had previously presented evidence or argument under the provisions of section 101, may appeal therefrom directly to the Supreme Court. Such appeals will lie if no appeal is taken by any party to the suit or proceeding and such appeals shall, on motion of the United States, be advanced to a speedy hearing. If the United States appeals to the Supreme Court under the provisions of section 102, but no appeal is taken by any party to the suit or proceeding, the appeal of the United States shall be regarded as an appeal under this section. If such section, or any provision thereof, is held invalid, the remainder of this act and the other provisions of this section shall not be affected thereby.

"SEC. 104. In any suit or proceeding in any court of the United States to which the United States or any agency thereof or any officer or employee thereof, as such officer or employee, is a party, in which the decision is against the constitutionality of any statute of the United States, the United States, within 60 days after the entry of a final or interlocutory judgment, decree, or order, may, in its discretion, in its own name or in the name of such agency, officer, or employee, as the case may be, appeal therefrom directly to the Supreme Court, in which event any appeal or cross appeal by any party to the suit or proceeding taken previously or taken within 60 days after notice of the appeal by the United States shall also be or be treated as taken directly to the Supreme Court. Such appeals shall, on motion of the United States, be advanced to a speedy hearing. This section shall not apply to any judgment, decree, or order of a district court of the United States which may, under existing provisions of law, be appealed directly to the Supreme Court.

"SEC. 105. The Attorney General is authorized by himself or by counsel designated by him to appear and argue in cases described in section 101, and to invoke appellate jurisdiction in cases described in sections 102, 103, and 104.

"SEC. 106. As used in this title, the term 'court of the United States' means the courts of record of Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico, the Customs Court, the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, the Court of Claims, the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, any district court of the United States, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, any circuit court of appeals, and the Supreme Court.

"SEC. 107. If any provision of this title, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provisions to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby."

REGULATION OF TRANSPORTATION BY AIRCRAFT—AMENDMENTS

Mr. TRUMAN submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by providing for the regulation of the transportation of passengers and property by aircraft in interstate commerce, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

PROTECTION FROM SUBSTITUTES AND MIXTURES IN WOVEN OR KNITTED FABRICS—AMENDMENT

Mr. SCHWARTZ submitted an amendment in the nature of a substitute intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2190) to protect producers, manufacturers, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in woven or knitted fabrics and in garments or articles of apparel made therefrom, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR SUBMITTING REPORT ON DOMESTIC POTASH INDUSTRY INVESTIGATION

Mr. PITTMAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 148), which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

Resolved, That the report required to be made by the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys pursuant to Senate Resolution 274 (74th Cong., 2d sess.), agreed to June 18, 1936, may be made at any time prior to the expiration of the Seventy-fifth Congress.

STATE TAXATION OF FEDERAL INSTRUMENTALITIES (S. DOC. NO. 86)

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a Senate document a compilation of data which I have gathered concerning State taxation of Federal instrumentalities. The data relate to the denial to the several States of the right to tax the income or property of Federal instrumentalities engaged in proprietary or nongovernmental functions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROBLEMS OF THE INDIANS—ADDRESS BY SENATOR CHAVEZ

[Mr. HATCH asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address entitled "Lo, the Poor Indian", delivered by Senator CHAVEZ on July 1, 1937, which appears in the Appendix.]

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF WAGES-AND-HOURS BILL—STATEMENT BY ROBERT H. JACKSON

[Mr. DONAHEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a statement on the constitutionality of the wages and hours bill, by Robert H. Jackson, Assistant Attorney General, before the joint hearings of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor and the House of Representatives Committee on Labor, which appears in the Appendix.]

PARTITION OF PALESTINE

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate for only 2 or 3 minutes. In the newspapers this morning I find a dispatch from London stating that the British Government is determined upon a further partitioning of Palestine. I call attention to the matter here, and I am glad the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee [Mr. PITTMAN] is in the chair, because this is a question which concerns our Government and will, I have no doubt, be made a matter of study by the Foreign Relations Committee.

I hope the newspaper report is incorrect. But those of us who have followed the situation in Palestine are prepared for such a report, because it has been in the offing for some months. Last summer the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], former Senator Hastings, and I were in Palestine and learned at first hand about conditions there. Immediately following our visit was the visit of the royal high commission, and from that time to this there has been discussion to the effect that, in all probability, there would be a recommendation made for a further partitioning of Palestine.

I say I hope the report is not true, because those of us who recall the beginning of the World War remember how vigorously the British raised the cry against Germany when Germany marched through Belgium, violating her treaty with Belgium, as was contended by the British. The slogan was that the Germans had made "a scrap of paper" of the treaty.

Mr. President, if it be true that the British propose a partitioning of Palestine and a further restriction of Jewish immigration into that country, and if that should be done without consultation with the United States, it would be making a "scrap of paper" of a treaty which Great Britain has with us.

I fear it may have been forgotten by Members of the Senate that in 1924, on the 3d of December, a convention was entered into between the United States and Great Britain covering the matters which I am presenting to the Senate this morning. I shall recall briefly what led up to the treaty which Great Britain has with the United States.

During the war the now famous Balfour declaration was made—a pledge on the part of Lord Balfour for his Government that in the event of a successful war the Jews would be given a national home in Palestine. So interested was this Government in the Balfour proposal that the Congress of the United States, by unanimous vote, ratified, confirmed, and repeated the Balfour declaration.

At the end of the war the supreme war council of the Allies determined upon the disposition of territory won through the war. When it came to the question of Palestine, it was decided by the supreme council that a mandatory should be placed over Palestine and that the terms of the mandate should be prepared by the League of Nations. As a matter of fact, the League of Nations did prepare the mandate, and in due time the Sovereign of Great Britain was made the mandatory and given the administration of the mandate.

Up to that moment the United States could claim no direct interest in the problem because our country, of course, had no membership in the League of Nations; but the matter came to us through long-time negotiation, and those who are interested will find a public document known as the Mandate of Palestine, a publication of the Department of State, Near Eastern Series No. 1, issued by the Government Printing Office in 1931. In this document will be found a full description and account of the negotiations which led ultimately to the convention between the United States and Great Britain.

When this treaty was finally formulated, it recited in full the identical language of the mandate, as set up by the League of Nations, to be administered by Great Britain as the mandatory. So the treaty which we have with Great Britain includes every word of the mandate.

In addition, I invite attention to article VII of the treaty:

> Nothing contained in the present convention shall be affected by any modification which may be made in the terms of the mandate as recited above unless such modification shall have been assented to by the United States.

I observe in the London dispatch to which I have referred, an Associated Press dispatch, that Mr. Ormsby-Gore, Minister for the Colonies, was queried yesterday in the House of Commons by Geoffrey Mander, Liberal, who asked from the floor whether the English Government "proposed to consult the Government of the United States with regard to the future policy to be pursued in Palestine in view of the treaty of December 3, 1924, between Great Britain and the United States by which the latter became a party to the agreement to establish Palestine as a Jewish homeland."

Mr. Ormsby-Gore replied that the Government would "keep constantly in mind any rights of the Government of the United States under the instrument" to which Mr. Mander referred.

Mr. President, it would be an outrageous thing, in my judgment, if the British Government should seek to partition the Holy Land and actually proceed to take away from the Jews who have gone there the rights which they have under the mandate of the League of Nations and under the treaty between Great Britain and the United States.

I assert that I have never observed any policy on the part of Great Britain except the policy of geography. Great Britain has now moved out of Egypt. We were there at the time of the evacuation. At the time of our visit there were 30,000 British troops in Palestine. Why? To take care of 500 or 600 bandits roaming the country and killing innocent persons and destroying property? I could take a thousand of the cops of New York City and dispose of those bandits in 2 weeks. The British are in Palestine because just back of Palestine is the Suez Canal and around the corner is India.

Mr. President, the British are treating Palestine as if it were English territory. Palestine does not belong to the English. The Holy Land is a possession of the civilized world. In this time of distress and disturbance, when Jews are in trouble everywhere, there ought to be one place in the sun where they can go and live in peace and contentment and in physical safety. That was the intent of the Supreme Council. The pledges that were made to the world indicated that Palestine was to be made a home for the Jews. I am not in favor of going to war with Great Britain over the question; but I think this Government, in solemn and set terms, should make clear to the British Government that it would be a violation of our treaty, and make it a mere "scrap of paper", if they should fail to take into consideration the views which we hold regarding the problem in Palestine.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. COPELAND. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Do I correctly understand the Senator to say that it would be a violation of our treaty?

Mr. COPELAND. A violation of our treaty.

Mr. BORAH. What did our treaty provide in that respect?

Mr. COPELAND. Our treaty repeats all the terms of the arrangement made by order of the Supreme Council with the League of Nations. It recites all the terms of the mandate under which Great Britain is administering affairs in Palestine; and further, article VII, as I read a little while ago, declares that—

> Nothing contained in the present convention shall be affected by any modification which may be made in the terms of the mandate as recited above unless such modification shall have been asented to by the United States.

My contention is that if this revision were made and this partitioning accomplished it would be in violation of the terms of the mandate, and that it cannot be lawfully or morally made without the consent of the United States.

Mr. President, I have no disposition to detain the Senate at this time. I happen to live in a community where one-seventh of all the Jews of the world live. I think no Christian could possibly have a more intimate knowledge than I possess of the wishes and desires and aspirations of the Jewish people. I know how intent they are upon this matter, how interested they are in it, how devoted they are to it. To them it is a part of their very religion; and, Mr. President, it is amazing to contemplate the millions and tens of millions of dollars which have been contributed by the Jews in America to the cause of Israel in Palestine.

Mr. President, we dealt with this matter years ago. We entered upon a policy. It is a solemn obligation between our country and Great Britain. With all the strength of my body and soul, I resent the effort of the British to violate this convention, to make it a "scrap of paper." If there is anything within reason that our country can do to make certain that the Jews in Palestine shall be undisturbed in their traditional home, I am sure our Government will take appropriate steps.

On our return from Palestine I saw the Secretary of State and presented to him the picture of the situation as I saw it. I am sure there is alertness on the part of the Department of State in the matter; but I wanted the Senate and the country to know that there is in prospect as great a wrong against great masses of human beings as has ever been perpetrated in the history of the world.

WILLIAM SULEM—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BAILEY submitted the following report:

> The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2332) for the relief of William Sulem, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:
>
> That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum "$232" insert "$750"; and the Senate agree to the same.
>
> J. W. BAILEY,
> M. M. LOGAN,
> ARTHUR CAPPER,
> Managers on the part of the Senate.
> AMBROSE J. KENNEDY,
> ELMER J. RYAN,
> FRANK CARLSON,
> Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

CLAIMS FOR EXCESS COSTS, MISSISSIPPI RIVER DAMS AND LOCKS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BAILEY submitted the following report:

> The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2565) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and enter judgment upon the claims of contractors for excess costs incurred while constructing navigation dams and locks on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:
>
> That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same.
>
> J. W. BAILEY,
> ARTHUR CAPPER,
> Managers on the part of the Senate.
> AMBROSE J. KENNEDY,
> ELMER J. RYAN,
> FRANK CARLSON,
> Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

TRANSPORTATION BY AIR

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate to make a few remarks about transportation by air.

It has been one of my tasks during the first and second sessions of the Seventy-fourth Congress and the first session of the Seventy-fifth Congress to act as chairman of a subcommittee of the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate appointed to hold hearings on Senate bills 3027 and 3420 of the Seventy-fourth Congress and Senate bills 2 and 1760 of the Seventy-fifth Congress. These bills, introduced by the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], contemplate carrying out the recommendations of the President of the United States in regard to transportation by air.

Transportation by air, in my opinion, is one of our vital problems which need prompt attention. It affects every phase of our foreign and domestic commerce. We are at the threshold of perfection in air transportation. We do not seem to realize what that means. California and Oregon were made an integral part of the United States by the completion of the Pacific railroad and the Western Union Telegraph line to the Pacific coast. Fast transportation with quick and easy communication has made this country great.

Mr. President, air transport will make Europe, Asia, South America, and Polynesia our next-door neighbors. Shanghai is not as far from San Francisco by air as New York is by rail. Rio de Janeiro is closer to Miami by air than Chicago is by rail.

We must realize what this means to our foreign trade. Domestically, we are no bigger now, in time and distance, than a county was in the old "horse and buggy" days.

We have a chance to do in the air what the old clipper ships did on the water. When steam navigation and steel ships came along, we failed to realize their importance, although the first steamboat was built in America. For the past 20 years we have frantically tried to restore our ocean trade and merchant marine. We are still trying. Had we realized what we had with the old clipper ship, and had we followed through with the new type of trade ship, we never should have lost our trade supremacy on the sea. Here is our opportunity to restore that trade. Air transport makes us near neighbors to Europe, Asia, South America, and Australia.

Let us not overlook the domestic importance of air transport, either. We must not make the same mistakes that we have made with the railroads. Regulation with them came almost too late, and we are still experimenting with it.

Eventually, however, in 1889, the Congress of the United States decided that the rail system of the country was a national public utility, and that, as such, the Federal Government inherently had the right to regulate the railroads for the public interest of the whole Nation. By an act of the Seventy-fourth Congress, Congress decided that the same sort of regulation is necessary for busses and trucks on the national highways in interstate commerce.

Let me read an extract from the message of the President dated June 7, 1935:

> It is high time to deal with the Nation's transportation as a single, unified problem. For many years in the past transportation meant mainly railroads. But the rise of new forms of transportation, great expenditures of Government funds for the development of waterways and for the building of great highways, and the development of invention within the railroad system itself, have enlarged the problem far beyond that conception which dominated most of our past legislation on the subject. In some instances the Government has helped a little. In others it retarded. In still others it has given special assistance from time to time—in many instances without rime or reason—in all instances without considering each aspect of the problem in the light of all the others. It is small wonder that in a transportation picture so confused, the public has been inadequately served.

I have from time to time, in this session, addressed the Congress as to the necessity of various forms of Government aid and regulation of transportation. I now wish to draw together and supplement these various suggestions for the consideration of the Congress in this session.

* * * * * * *

I have already recommended to the Congress my views with regard to the relations that should exist between the Federal Government and air carriers. Legislation has been introduced for the purpose of carrying out these recommendations. I am in general accord with the substance of this legislation although I still maintain, as I indicated in my message on that subject, that a separate commission need not be established to effectuate the purposes of such legislation. Air transportation should be brought into a proper relation to other forms of transportation by subjecting it to regulation by the same agency.

* * * * * * *

It is my hope that the Interstate Commerce Commission may, with the addition of the new duties that I have indicated, ultimately become a Federal Transportation Commission with comprehensive powers.

Senate bill no. 3420 of the Seventy-fourth Congress was favorably reported by me to the Senate on August 15, 1935, with this statement:

The Committee on Interstate Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3420, introduced today) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by providing for the regulation of the transportation of passengers and property by air carriers operating in interstate or foreign commerce, and for other purposes, having considered the same in committee-print form and authorized its introduction, report the bill back favorably with the recommendation that it be passed at this session.

The bill provides for the regulation of all air carriers and airport operators who operate regular schedule service. The regulation is adapted to the special characteristics of transportation by air and is carried no further than is necessary in the interest of the public and of the carriers and airport operators.

The Interstate Commerce Act, which the Commission now administers, applies to steam railroads, electric railways, express companies, sleeping-car companies, pipe lines, motor carriers, and steamship lines controlled by railroads, and to the joint operations of rail and water lines. Neither air carriers nor airport operators are now subject to regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission except as to air-mail rates.

In recent years there has been an extraordinary growth of transportation by air. The air lines cover the country, carrying many thousands of passengers and much express and mail, and are engaged in intensive competition with each other and with railroads and other carriers. This competition has been carried to an extreme, which tends to undermine the financial stability of the carriers and jeopardize the maintenance of transportation facilities and service appropriate to the needs of commerce and required in the public interest. The present chaotic transportation conditions are not satisfactory to investors, labor, shippers, or the carriers themselves. The competitive struggle is to a large extent unequal and unfair, inasmuch as the railroads and motor carriers are comprehensively regulated, the water carriers are regulated in lesser degree, and the air carriers are scarcely regulated at all.

In 1933 the Congress, recognizing the existence of an emergency in transportation, enacted the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act, 1933, providing, among other things, for a Federal Coordinator of Transportation, and imposing upon him, among other duties, that of studying means not provided in the act for improving transportation conditions.

Pursuant to the authority of that act, the President, in June 1933, designated Commissioner Joseph B. Eastman as Coordinator, and he has made three reports to the Congress, viz, Regulation of Railroads (S. Doc. 119, 73d Cong., 2d sess.), Regulation of Transportation Agencies (S. Doc. 152, 73d Cong., 2d sess.), and Report of the Federal Coordinator of Transportation, 1934 (H. Doc. 89, 74th Cong., 1st sess.). Since June 1933 the Coordinator has made elaborate surveys and studies of the need for regulation of transportation agencies. In addition to the various reports of the Coordinator, the President appointed the Aviation Commission (Air Mail Act, June 12, 1934), whose report was transmitted to the Congress by the President January 31, 1935 (S. Doc. 15, 74th Cong., 1st sess.).

Pursuant to the Executive order of July 11, 1934 (sec. 5, Economy Act, 1934), the Postmaster General made a report on foreign air-mail contracts, which was transmitted to the Special Committee to Investigate Air-Mail and Ocean-Mail Contracts and is printed in part 3 of the Investigation of Air-Mail and Ocean-Mail Contracts (74th Cong., 1st sess., beginning at p. 701). In addition to these reports of the various Government departments, the committee of the Senate appointed, pursuant to Senate Resolution 349, Seventy-second Congress, investigated thoroughly the whole aviation industry.

As a result of these exhaustive and analytic reports and studies the absolute necessity for Federal regulation of air transportation has been recognized.

Hearings were held on the bill (S. 3027), and the printed record of these hearings consists of 162 pages of testimony and statements.

Federal regulation of air carriers and airport operators engaged in interstate or foreign commerce has the support of the Secretary of Commerce, the Coordinator of Transportation, the Interstate Commerce Commission, Chairman of Federal Aviation Commission, and outstanding individuals in the aviation industry, air-line operators, and air-line pilots' association. The views of the several bodies and groups mentioned were fully developed at the hearing, and the committee also received and has on file a large number of letters, telegrams, and statements in support of the bill.

Because of the lack of proper legislation the air-transport industry has not had the benefit of proper coordinated regulation.

This bill is a part of a complete and coordinated program of legislation touching all forms of transportation recommended by the Federal Coordinator of Transportation. The ultimate objective of the entire program is a system of coordinated transportation for the Nation, which will supply the most efficient means of transport and furnish service as cheaply as is consistent with fair treatment of labor and with earnings which will support adequate credit and the ability to expand as need develops and to take advantage of all improvements in the art. All parts of such a system of transportation should be in the hands of reliable and responsible operators whose charges for service will be known, dependable, and reasonable and free from unjust discrimination. This bill proposes to bring about such conditions among the interstate and foreign air carriers, the only ones now almost wholly unregulated by Federal authority.

I have reported Senate bill 2. Senators have a copy of the report before them accompanying order of business 702 on the calendar. The printed record of the hearings on Senate bill 2 and Senate bill 1760 consists of 599 pages.

Hon. Joseph B. Eastman; Hon. Jesse Jones; Hon. Fiorella LaGuardia; Jack Frye, president of Transcontinental & Western Air; G. B. Brophy, counsel for T. W. A. and Eastern Air Lines; C. R. Smith, president of American Air Lines; Paul A. Wright, representing United Air Lines; C. Bedell Monro, president of Pennsylvania Air Lines; Col. Edgar S. Gorrell, representing all the domestic air lines and Pan-American Air Lines; David L. Behncke and Edward G. Hamilton, president and secretary of the Air Line Pilots Association—all urge the enactment of Senate bill 2. The press of the United States almost unanimously urges the passage of Senate bill 2.

In its declaration of policy the bill points out a threefold function of the air-carrier industry which is recognized. This function has to do with, first, commerce; second, the Postal Service; and, third, the national defense.

From its very inception air transportation has been a waif in the field of commerce. It has been batted about from pillar to post, and it is high time for it to be recognized as a public necessity and given a permanent place in our national transportation system.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. Does the Senator suggest in his bill that the subject matter be put under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. TRUMAN. Yes; the bill is the bill of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], and it places air transportation under the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. LEWIS. May I take the liberty to ask, Is it the assumption of the Senator from Nevada that the subject matter of the bill is to be put under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission and treated in the same way in which the railroads are treated?

Mr. MCCARRAN. Mr. President, the bill provides that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall take direction and supervision over air lines and over air transportation along the same lines on which it has taken supervision over other methods of transportation. In other words, the bill carries out the spirit of the message of the President of the United States, in which he urged the coordination of all the methods of transportation under one head, namely, the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. LEWIS. There is no attempt by the bill to create a new commission, a new body, for the purpose of executing the provisions of the bill?

Mr. McCARRAN. There is not.

Mr. LEWIS. That answers my query, and I thank the Senator from Missouri for yielding.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield in order that I may ask both him and the Senator from Nevada a question?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is considerable difference between the scope of Senate bill 2 and Senate bill 1760.

Mr. TRUMAN. They cover two entirely different subjects.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think it is Senate bill 2 which undertakes to place the air lines under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. TRUMAN. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Senate bill 1760 deals with other phases of aviation. To what extent will that arrangement affect the power or the authority of the Post Office Department?

Mr. TRUMAN. If the Senator will be patient, I will explain that very thoroughly.

Mr. BARKLEY. Very well; I will not intrude now.

Mr. TRUMAN. I quote from the 1935 Report of the Federal Aviation Commission:

In the course of our study, by personal inspection and interview and by formal hearings, certain facts have become apparent. It has become apparent that there exist in the United States today air transport organizations at least the equal, and in certain respects very definitely the superior, of any others in the world; that American air-transport equipment as developed in the last 3 years is generally recognized as occupying a position of world leadership, and that European constructors, once prone to scorn American aeronautical activities, have been visiting our shores in steadily increasing numbers as earnest seekers after information on the methods whereby such remarkable characteristics are obtained; that American transport lines handle a larger volume of traffic than the lines of all the rest of the world combined, and with a safety record unexcelled by the lines of any nation and quite unapproached by most (p. 3, Federal Aviation Commission Report, Jan. 31, 1935).

The claim of world leadership in the air-transportation industry for the United States is no idle boast. The volume of air-passenger traffic under the American flag now exceeds that of all the rest of the world combined. The record indicates that the American air lines, as now constituted, render a highly useful public service, and that they should be maintained upon a high plane of efficiency (74th Cong., Report of the Federal Aviation Commission, 1935, p. 44, par. 2).

It appears from all that we can discover of the record at home and abroad that nowhere else are passengers, mail, and goods carried with such regularity and speed, by day and night, with such comfort and convenience to the user of the service on anything like so broad a network as that provided by our major air lines. It appears, on the other hand, that a considerable part of the Nation's air-transport system is running at a steady loss, and that operations cannot continue indefinitely under present conditions (74th Cong., Report of Federal Aviation Commission, 1935, p. 3).

This bill, if passed, will become part III of the Interstate Commerce Act. It is just another step in the coordination of the country's transportation system. Air transportation is our baby in transportation, a healthy, hardy infant, and one fast growing to maturity. Ten years ago, 8,679 passengers were carried by air, and 1,654,165 pounds of mail. Last year, 1936, 1,147,969 passengers were carried, 18,324,012 pounds of mail, and 9,000,000 pounds of express. (Air Commerce Bulletin, vol. 8, no. 12, June 15, 1937.) Perfection is coming in air transport and its importance to the country cannot be overestimated. We cannot, we must not, make air transportation of this country a system of star routes for mail service. There is no more reason for air transport being an adjunct to the Post Office Department than there is for the railroads, the steamship lines, or the busses and trucks to be.

Senate bill 2 proposes to bring about regulation of interstate, overseas, and foreign air carriers in the public interest. It is the only form of unregulated interstate transportation. I quote from the report on House bill 7273:

Present legislation covers only the air-mail contractors and is limited solely to regulations regarding the carriers of the air mail, with definite mileage limitations as to the amount of service which may be instituted. Nonmail air carriers are subject to no regulation whatsoever except the limited safety regulation imposed by the Bureau of Air Commerce.

The present air-transportation system has been developed at great expense both to the Government and private industry, to say nothing of the lives taken during this development. It is now seriously threatened by the initiation of unregulated air lines, unhampered by any duty to perform the governmental service of carrying mails, and not covered by the present law. The Government cannot allow unrestrained competition by unregulated air carriers to capitalize on and jeopardize the investment which the Government has made during the past 10 years in the air-transport industry, through the mail service which was planned to permit, and at present is permitting, the Government to carry on its Air Mail Service at constantly decreasing costs per unit.

The needs of the public require the immediate extension of Government control to the air-transport industry. In order to prevent chaotic conditions and promote the rapid growth that comes with orderly regulation, this need should be fulfilled at the earliest practicable date.

I have the highest regard for the Post Office Department and for that Department's ability to handle the mail. When I think of the romance of the conquest of the West I think of the pony express and the stagecoach loaded with mail, the stagecoach in which Horace Greeley rode from St. Joseph, Mo., to Salt Lake City, Utah, and on to San Francisco, the stagecoach about which Mark Twain wrote so entertainingly in Roughing It. I think of the golden spike which completed the Pacific railroad and put the stagecoach and pony express out of the mail business. The Post Office Department has always been first to utilize fast transportation for the mail. Air mail came out of the development of war planes from 1914 to 1918. I want the Post Office Department to have complete control of the mail, but I do not want the Post Office Department to control one of our great transportation systems.

This bill does not take away any of the powers of the Postmaster General over the air mail. It gives him every power he now possesses over railway mail, and there is nothing in the bill to prevent his establishing air-mail star routes if he deems it to be in the public interest to do so. He can establish an air-mail star route from Pohick to Accotink, Va., or from Peculiar to Useful, Mo., or from Tombstone, Ariz., to Dutch Flat, Calif., if he so desires. Senate bill 2 contains the substance of provisions in the Air Mail Act of 1934, as amended, in regard to preventing monopoly, protecting the public from interlocking directorates, and control of air lines by aircraft manufacturers. In addition to other things, it protects labor exactly as does section 13 of the Air Mail Act. It gives access to the books and accounts of the carriers so that high rates and unreasonable profits are not possible.

The bill places air transportation under the bipartisan Interstate Commerce Commission, where it belongs. The Interstate Commerce Commission already controls railways, inland waterways, and highway transportation. Fifty years of experience are behind it. It has a most distinguished record. The experts of the Commission are trusted by the public and by the persons it regulates. No single step could do more than this to place public confidence in the airways. Transportation should be no political football.

England, France, Germany, Russia, all realize what air transport means to national defense. Only poor old Uncle Samuel is muddling with his civilian air transport. This bill will stop the muddling and inaugurate a real policy—a policy which will make commercial aviation a second line of defense, just as the merchant marine is the second line of the Navy, and the Reserve Corps is the second line of the Regular Army and the National Guard.

Aviation has become the eyes of the Army and the Navy, as well as a defense against bombing attacks of a possible enemy. Large numbers of trained pilots will be most essential, should an emergency ever come. Commercial aviation will be the place to get them. Large production problems will face both Army and Navy in the event of war. Commercial production factories are the only sources from which we can get war planes. We must, therefore, realize the necessity of portecting and encouraging commercial aviation. I believe that time has arrived, and that the enactment of Senate bill 2 will help materially in accomplishing that very result.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks excerpts on the subject in question from editorials published in various newspapers throughout the country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matters referred to are as follows:

[From the Topeka (Kans.) Capital of Apr. 18, 1937]

I. C. C. CONTROL FOR AIR LINES

Operators of the transport air lines are agitated because the United States Chamber of Commerce advocates placing them under the Interstate Commerce Commission. They claim that this is but another step toward Government ownership of the transport planes, although the I. C. C. has regulated the railroads for many years and the roads still are in private hands.

In view of the recent serious accidents, with loss of all on board the transport planes, it appears that some sort of enforced safety measures are due. The railroads did not enter seriously into safety programs until required by the Interstate Commerce Commission regulations.

The Chamber of Commerce suggests that legislation placing the air lines under the I. C. C. should not rigidly follow the railroad pattern but should "be adapted to the special requirements of the industry." The general public does not know much about the problems confronting the air lines, but it does know that nine major accidents in 8 months creates a serious question as to whether the transport companies are taking every precaution for the safety of their passengers.

[From the Boise (Idaho) Statesman of June 1, 1937]

UNDER THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

A bill amending the Interstate Commerce Act to provide for Interstate Commerce Commission regulation of air lines engaged in interstate transportation of persons, mail, and property is before Congress with the approval of the Air Transport Association of America.

Railroads and motor transport in interstate commerce have long been under such regulation and, though the regulation is stern, it also protects those carriers against irresponsible competition, which could never be of any long-range benefit to the general public.

The amendment to include air lines is being supported by all the big transcontinental air-line companies, for they have suffered by fly-by-night operators. Doubtless they realize that the Interstate Commerce Commission will be rigid in its control of their own lines, but they are more than willing to accept this in return for the protection.

The measure seems eminently fair and consistent with the best public policy.

[From the New York Evening Post of Apr. 14, 1937]

SHORT CUT THROUGH THE AVIATION MUDDLE

It seems to us the shortest, quickest way through the aviation muddle is prompt passage of the McCarran bill to transfer control of commercial aviation from the Commerce Department to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

That body already controls railway and inland waterway transportation. It has 50 years of experience. Its record is a distinguished one. Its experts are trusted by railroad executives and by the public.

No one single step could more quickly restore public confidence in the air lines than this. In place of reactionary hush-hush and political administration by Secretary Roper and his clique, we would have administration by a progressive agency which is free of politics.

The I. C. C. could plan aviation development to coordinate with existing transport methods. Under its overseership the protection of the Railway Labor Act could be extended to air pilots. A national air program could be worked out.

Let's take the air lines away from Roper if we can't take Roper away from the air lines.

[From the Louisville (Ky.) Courier-Journal of Apr. 1, 1937]

FEDERAL CONTROL OF AIR LINES

Joseph B. Eastman, former transportation coordinator, makes a telling argument for unified Federal control over air transportation in endorsing the Lea bill giving the Interstate Commerce Commission wide powers over the commercial air lines similar to that exercised over railroads and busses. Mr. Eastman characterizes as "confusing division of authority", the joint jurisdiction over aviation now exercised by the Post Office, the Commerce Department, and the Interstate Commerce Commission.

"It appears, therefore", he told a House committee yesterday, "that without some governmental supervision over rates, fares, charges, and practices in the transportation by air of both persons and property as well as mail, a situation will be created that will endanger commercial air transportation in the United States."

Nothing could be more timely than unified Federal control over commercial aviation. There have been six major crashes of air liners since December 15, with a total fatality list of 56. Investigations are conducted, but little is done to insure safety. Usually the Department of Commerce is blamed for the failure of its radio beam or the service it gives to commercial lines, but those lines are not required to install expensive equipment that would minimize the hazards of flying. Every accident is followed by some kind of buck passing, to the end that more lives are lost and air transportation suffers.

Because of its hazards air transportation should be subjected to even a stricter regulation than railroads and busses. The Interstate Commerce Commission is the logical agency for this protection of the air lines as well as the public.

[From the Syracuse (N. Y.) Herald of Apr. 14, 1937]

AS TO AVIATORY REGULATION

Mayor LaGuardia, testifying before a Senate committee, expresses the belief that aviation should be entrusted to the regulatory control of the Interstate Commerce Commission. That control is now vested in the Commerce Department. Many air-line pilots favor the change. The mayor advocates it because the Commerce Department's function has been to promote aviation while the Interstate Commerce Commission is a regulatory body with 50 years' experience. It is timely to repeat here a part of the mayor's testimony before the committee:

"The dispatching of planes in bad weather is now entirely under control of the air-line operators and competition forces them to take chances. The operators say that whether to take off is left to the discretion of the pilots, but it's just too bad if the pilot of one company takes off and completes his trip and another doesn't.

"There ought to be a dispatcher at the main terminals who would rule whether it was safe to leave. It's poor sportsmanship to put the blame for accidents on our pilots, who are the best in the world. They have more responsibility than the captain of an ocean liner for they have to make instantaneous decisions and can't take leisurely bearings."

Whether the LaGuardia recommendations point to better regulatory and safety legislation or not, they come from a man who speaks with considerable authority on the subject, because of his World War ordeal as a flyer and his continued practical interest in aviation. His counsel to the committee seems as sensible as is needed. Recent air tragedies have certainly proved that much is lacking in the present system of regulation, and that the proposed transfer of supervision could hardly fail to be a change for the better.

[From the Salt Lake City Tribune of May 3, 1937]

INTERSTATE COMMERCIAL AIR SERVICE

A bill has been introduced in the Senate of the United States to amend the Interstate Commerce Act for the regulation of transportation, by air carriers, of persons and property, similar to the rules which govern such transportation by other carriers now subject to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The purpose of the measure is to take commercial aviation out of the control of the Post Office Department and place it in the same category as railway, truck, and bus lines. The natural result of its adoption will be to facilitate operations and give added protection to life and property entrusted to air carriers.

It is specifically provided that due consideration be given to all treaties and agreements now existing, or to be entered into, between this Government and foreign countries, where the passengers, mails, or merchandise are carried wholly by planes, or partly by other means of transportation. The postal service rendered will be subject to contract between the Post Office Department and the carrier companies in which all conditions imposed will be subject to revision and enforcement by the Commission.

Rates, fares, charges, and classifications are to be definite and uniform and no preference will be given to any patron of the service, either at airports or on the planes. Carriers may issue tickets, or passes, to their directors, officers, or employees, and their immediate families; to witnesses or attorneys attending investigations connected with the service; to persons injured in aircraft accidents, their nurses and physicians; to messengers carrying relief to victims of calamities and to Government representatives when requested by the heads of their respective departments; but no privileges are to be extended to individuals not specified in the act.

No officer or director shall serve more than one carrier company, unless duly authorized by the Commission after a thorough investigation of the advantage thus accruing to the general public. Penalties, including fines and imprisonment, are provided for violations of the law and no one connected with the Commission will be permitted to have a financial interest in any company engaged in air traffic.

While the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Commerce relative to safety measures and requirements is to remain unimpaired, it is believed that both safety and efficiency will be promoted, and confusion avoided, by uniting all forms of interstate commerce under one responsible head not directly interested in any shipments or patronage of the service.

From its inception, air transportation has been a waif in the field of commerce. It has been batted around from pillar to post and it is high time it was recognized as a public necessity and given a permanent place in our national transportation system.

[From the New York Times of June 8, 1937]

I. C. C. AIR CONTROL FAVORED IN REPORT—SENATE COMMITTEE COMMENDS BILL TO END POST OFFICE POWER OVER MAIL RATES

WASHINGTON, June 7.—A measure which would give the Interstate Commerce Commission as far-reaching powers over the air lines, domestic and foreign, as it now has over the railroads was favorably reported in the Senate today by the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The committee also reported favorably on another measure which would virtually strip the Bureau of Air Commerce of all its present functions in connection with the air lines and transfer them to the Commission.

Both bills were introduced by Senator McCARRAN, of Nevada. The first measure is in the form of an amendment to the Interstate Commerce Act and takes from the Post Office Department its present function of fixing rates on the air mail. It has the backing of the major air lines, principally because it provides for certificates of convenience and necessity, which would tend to "freeze" the present air lines in possession of the territory they now serve.

The second bill, to be called the Air Line Safety Act of 1937, if it is passed, provides for the creation of a Bureau of Air Transport within the Interstate Commerce Commission and an Air Safety Board to investigate air accidents and recommend safety provisions. Under the measure, the Commission would license air carriers and planes, pilots, engines, and accessories. The Commission also would be empowered to rule on hours of service of air-line employees.

The proposed amendment to the Interstate Commerce Act would give the Commission control over air lines plying between this country and foreign ports similar to that the Maritime Commission has over water-borne commerce, except that it makes no provision for subsidies. It does, however, provide for certificates of necessity and convenience outside the shores of the United States and gives the Commission power to fix rates on international air lines under the American flag.

A similar measure introduced by Representative CLARENCE LEA, of California, has been favorably reported in the House.

Opposition in both the House and the Senate is expected to develop through the introduction of other legislation. Tomorrow the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads is to start hearings on a bill introduced by Senator McKELLAR which provides for stronger Post Office controls over air lines in international operation. He has also introduced a measure enlarging the Post Office Department's powers over air lines.

[From the New York Wall Street Journal of Apr. 10, 1937]

AUTHORITY OVER AIR-MAIL PAY

If common sense is to have any standing in connection with regulation of transportation by air, the whole job will be turned over to the Interstate Commerce Commission for exclusive handling. It is the only way by which the industry can be protected from politics and given a chance to develop itself so as to render to the public the best possible service.

The Commission can deal with all the details of aviation as completely as it deals with those of railroading. Whatever criticisms can fairly be brought against its occasional mistakes in the latter activity, no one with any knowledge of the matter would entertain a suggestion for removal of its authority in any important particular and transfer of that authority to other hands.

Particularly important is it that the Post Office Department should be relegated to its proper place in relation to the industry, as has been done in the case of railroads. That place is no different from that of any other shipper of commodities. There is not a single good reason why rates for carriage of mails by rail or air should not be fixed on principles the same as those which apply to everything else transported by common carrier. There is no reason why owners of railroads or airplanes who pay plenty of taxes should be compelled to accord special privileges to the Post Office, and it is important to have an independent authority to see that they are not so compelled.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has dealt with railway mail pay more than once. The Post Office has on such occasions appeared as party litigant, as do all other shippers of commodities, and has presented testimony and argument in the customary form. The question of air mail pay should be handled in the same way. The Department has no more inherent right to fix rates for the air than it has to fix rates for the rail.

If the Interstate Commerce Commission were only half as intelligent and industrious as it is, the independence that it has conquered for itself against political interference would be amply determinative of the matter of air transportation and its regulation.

Let the job be given to the Commission.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, in connection with the speech of the able Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point an article of date June 14, 1937, published in the magazine Time; also an editorial published in National Aeronautics for June 1937; also an article by the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO] published in the same periodical, National Aeronautics for June 1937; also an article published in National Aeronautics for June 1937 entitled "Today in Aviation"; also an editorial published in American Aviation for June 1, 1937, entitled "Pawns in the Game"; and, finally, an article by Mr. C. B. Allen published in the New York Herald Tribune on Sunday, May 2, 1937, entitled "Air Lines Face Possible 'War' Over Invasion of Each Other's Established Routes."

I desire to have these articles and editorials printed in the RECORD at this point in connection with the address of the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The articles and editorials are as follows:

[From Time for June 14, 1937]

TRAVESTY

United States air lines are in much the same position as adolescent children of divorced parents. By the terms of the divorce (the Air Mail Act of 1934, passed after the celebrated Farley-Roosevelt air-mail cancelation), "Mother" Interstate Commerce Commission has influence, some jurisdiction. But "Father" Post Office—by control of the air-mail subsidy—has the whip hand. "Mother" I. C. C. would like to let the growing business expand in healthy exuberance. "Father" Post Office, remembering the air-mail scandal, treats the air lines like boys in a reform school.

This situation has resulted in freezing the lines in practically the same status they found themselves in when the Air Mail Act of 1934 was passed. Though there are many places in the United States where extension of routes would benefit both Nation and air lines, such expansions have almost always been forbidden. Sample case was the rejection 2 months ago of Transcontinental & Western Air's application to inaugurate useful service between Albuquerque and San Francisco (Time, Mar. 22). Last week American Airlines was similarly forbidden to inaugurate service between Detroit and Cincinnati and between Detroit and Indianapolis via Fort Wayne. The Air Mail Act prohibits a new service which might compete with an established one, even if the public's best interests might thus be served.

To improve this awkward arrangement no less than seven bills were introduced in the present Congress. Two have now merged into the McCarran-Lea bill, which would put the air lines almost entirely under the nonpolitical jurisdiction of the I. C. C. This bill emerged from committee last week and is soon to face a vote. Few sincerely air-minded persons in the United States oppose it. The Air Line Pilots' Association unanimously voted in favor of I. C. C. jurisdiction; all the air lines devoutly hope the McCarran-Lea bill will pass. They have, however, been slow to say so because they fear offending the potent Post Office, which also has a bill in Congress—the Mead bill giving it even greater power over aviation than it has now.

This legal rivalry has smoldered for months in Washington. To oppose the McCarran-Lea bill the post office has lately softened its harsh attitude toward the lines, gone out of its way to give them what they asked. Example was permission to United Air Lines last month to fly into Denver (Time, May 10). To make this new service jibe with the Air Mail Act, Solicitor Karl A. Crowley had to devise a totally new concept—that an air line is a "zone of influence" instead of a geometric line. Last week post-office men in Washington revealed that they will soon advertise for bids for a number of important new air-mail routes, one of which is the flight from Winslow to San Francisco that was denied to T. W. A. only 2 months ago.[1] Almost every air line in the United States is seriously affected by these proposed new routes, and air-line officers last week freely predicted that the scramble for contracts would rival the furor caused by the 1934 cancelations. How most of them feel was expressed in an editorial in a new magazine named "American Aviation", whose first issue appeared last week.[2] Excerpt:

"The Post Office opposition is no mystery. A politician has to have in his bag of tricks a group of favorites. In the present situation the air lines are one of the pawns. Political groups must pay communities off in the cheapest coin necessary. Air mail is one way of paying political debts. * * * Only the other day some ebullient Congressman introduced a bill to set aside May 28 as 'Aviation Day.' What a travesty!"

[From National Aeronautics for June 1937]

A GOOD BILL

The McCarran-Lea bill should be passed at this session of Congress.

In taking this definite stand we realize that there may be a number of minor features of the bill which may need clarification or revision. Neither we nor a large percentage of our readers are legal experts. Our stand is based merely upon the significance of the main features of the bill and the very urgent need for their enactment into law if we are to give our air-transport system a timely opportunity for orderly development.

---

[1] Others in order of probability: Washington to Buffalo via Baltimore and Harrisburg; Jacksonville to Mobile via Tallahassee; Pittsburgh to Chicago via Dayton; Houston to Corpus Christi; Huron, S. Dak., to Cheyenne; Denver to Kansas City, Memphis, and Birmingham.

[2] An informative, slick-paper bimonthly, selling for $3 a year, edited by outspoken Wayne W. Parrish, one time editor of National Aeronautics Magazine. Copublishers with him are the Stackpole brothers (Maj. Albert Hummel and Gen. Edward James), publishers of the 104-year-old Harrisburg (Pa.) Telegraph.

By far the most important feature of this legislation is that it will turn over to the Interstate Commerce Commission the control of the economic phases of scheduled air transport.

At the present time only those air-transport companies which have air-mail contracts are subject to regulation. Under this bill all operators of interstate transport service, whether they have mail contracts or not, will be placed under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Since it is imperative that this highly specialized form of transportation should be conducted on the highest possible plane, there is no place in it for cutthroat and unregulated competition.

It is significant to note that this bill provides for the air lines identically the same type of regulation now in force for railroads and motor-bus lines. In fact, wherever possible, the language of this bill is copied verbatim from similar laws covering rail and bus transportation.

The provision for the issuance of certificates of convenience and necessity will relieve the Government of the burden of making up the losses to air-mail contractors because of the competition of unregulated groups.

We take issue directly with the Department of Commerce when they state that the issuance of such certificates is apt to retard the expansion of our air-transport system. As a matter of fact, by having these certificates issued by the Interstate Commerce Commission wherever the potential passenger and express service warrants such extension rather than having extensions controlled entirely by the Post Office Department merely on the basis of the air-mail possibilities along the routes, it is evident to anyone that our system will grow much more rapidly and soundly than it has in the past.

The bill vests in the Interstate Commerce Commission the right to grant or refuse authority to operate from one point to another with all classes of traffic except mail. In the case of mail, the Postmaster General must initiate any requests for additional service. However, the Interstate Commerce Commission may refuse to grant the authority for such service if it does not consider it warranted in the interests of the public's convenience and necessity. The vesting of this authority in the Interstate Commerce Commission is entirely logical because with the development of our air transport system practically two-thirds of the revenue is now derived from passenger and express service. Consequently, it just doesn't make good sense to leave the control of the air transport systems in the hands of the Post Office Department now that the air-mail revenue represents only one-third of the total, and is growing less.

We do not consider the advocacy of this change as a slap at the Post Office Department. It is merely an admission that the air transport industry has grown to the point where the interests of the Post Office Department are subordinate to passenger and express service. The Department can turn over to the Interstate Commerce Commission its broader control of air transport with considerable satisfaction over the progress which has already been made in this newest of all forms of transportation. Obviously the Post Office Department will continue to exercise its legitimate control over the strictly air-mail service.

It should be noted also that the bill does not interfere in the least with the activities of the Bureau of Air Commerce in its airway inspection, and regulation service.

To summarize, then—the highly important and desirable features of the bill are, simply, (1) the provision for the issuance of certificates of convenience and necessity, so as to avoid unfair and destructive competition, and (2) the vesting in the Interstate Commerce Commission of authority to approve or disapprove requests for extensions of or additions to our air transport system.

Of course the bill contains other provisions which legislative experts must either approve, revise, or eliminate before its final passage. We have enough faith in Congress to feel that there are sufficient brains, ambition, and interest in the welfare of our Nation to see that all the details are properly taken care of.

THE PEOPLE ARE SPEAKING

The aviation people can feel gratified with the fact that Congress and other Government officials are manifesting a deeper and more intelligent interest in aeronautical problems. It is quite clear, for instance, that increased air facilities in the national air defense are being considered seriously and constructively.

There are many aviation bills pending before Congress, most of which will not be passed, but out of the whole a certain amount of good legislation will be enacted.

The telling effects of a widespread public interest in these matters is apparent. In contemplated measures for air defense public opinion has been a decided factor. Information given through these columns showing the unfortunate position of the Nation as compared to other great powers has created a profound impression.

In line with American ideals and their desire for international peace people are awakening to the fact that a dollar buys more defense security in the air than in any other place.

Resolutions, letters, and communications that National Aeronautics Association chapters and other aviation friends have directed to their Washington representatives have not only been highly informing but they serve properly to acquaint the Government with public opinion. For the most part such expressions of thought are those that come from patriotic people who have no selfish interest at stake and therefore their influence is multiplied. In civil aeronautics the effect has been the same.

It is safe to assume that, this being a representative Government, its officials will wish to heed the will of the people whenever they know what that is. In the meantime we may be happy in the knowledge that public opinion is bearing fruit and therefore we can redouble our efforts to advance the same.

[From National Aeronautics for June 1937]

McADOO URGES AIR CONTROL

Rarely has a radio audience been permitted to listen to a more timely and constructive address on aviation than that delivered by Senator W. G. McADOO over a Nation-wide network of the National Broadcasting Co. on Tuesday evening, May 25.

The former N. A. A. president spoke on the radio forum sponsored by the Washington Star, and in the course of his address covered in nontechnical language the most recent developments in the aeronautical world and indicated some of the problems that must be met and solved.

The Senator stressed the need for a greatly increased development in air defense. "I am firmly convinced", he said, "that with an adequate Navy and air force we can keep the United States at peace with the rest of the world, and I am equally convinced that without it we shall court unnecessary and grave danger in the future. I speak with some knowledge when I say this, because I am certain that if the United States had possessed a navy in 1917 capable of taking command of the sea we would never have become involved in the World War. Let us never again repeat that error. The best guaranty of peace for America is to be prepared, not for aggression but for the assertion and maintenance of every vital American right. I am strong for peace and I am strong, too, for national security, because our ability to maintain our national security means, in my opinion, peace."

Turning next to Federal supervision of aeronautics, Mr. McADOO indicated the various Government divisions that have some authority over commercial aviation and urged the need for concentration in a single, responsible bureau or individual commission.

"In our country we are making a grave blunder in giving no authoritative or organized direction to the development of commercial aviation.

"There should be a concentration of authority over commercial aviation so that all phases of this great development may be under highly informed and skilled direction. Some of the European governments already have air ministries, which are equivalent, in our country, to a Secretary of Air Commerce. In other words, they have dignified it with a cabinet status. While I do not advocate that such a Cabinet position should be created now, it is essential, in my judgment, to concentrate the authority in some responsible bureau or independent commission of the Government.

"In the Senate and in the House of Representatives, this great and rapidly developing, highly technical and important industry is a side issue to certain of their standing committees. There should be, in my judgment, a standing committee of both Houses of Congress, charged with the sole duty of considering aviation legislation. More and more, as time goes on, this will become obvious and urgent.

"At present our Government has no definite commercial aviation policy, and it can have none until we effect the necessary organization to study it and to formulate it. Once this is done, we can drive consistently and persistently at a definite objective in the general development of aviation for our economic and social requirements. One thing is certain, and that is that our Government should give every proper aid and encouragement to the development of aviation. All nations are doing this, and we should not be indifferent or oblivious to the necessity for reasonable popular support.

"A haphazard growth of air facilities over land and over sea will render us a Nation less capable of doing the things necessary to meet the highest demands of our people now and in the future. We shall prove recreant to the duty imposed upon us by manifest destiny if we sit complacently and with obscured vision."

[From National Aeronautics for June 1937]

TODAY IN AVIATION

(By the N. A. A. Observer)

Today in aviation the interest of the ordinary American citizen centers around the benefits which aviation can bring to an advancing civilization. His imagination is staggered by the possibilities he sees in frequent air service across the Atlantic and the Pacific. His dreams are shattered by such overwhelming catastrophes as the crash of an airliner or the burning of the Hindenburg. In previous years he has had little in the way of carefully compiled and accurate facts to guide his thinking. Most of the facts that were available were hidden in Government reports and uninteresting statistical tabulations.

The Air Transport Association of America has performed a real public service by preparing and distributing a booklet on air transport entitled "Little Known Facts." A careful study of the charts in this booklet will show—

That plane miles flown on scheduled air lines have increased from less than 1,000,000 in 1925 to almost 40,000,000 in 1935.

That in the same period the speed of planes in transport use has increased from 115 miles per hour to 212 miles per hour.

That pounds of air mail carried have increased from 1,000,000 in 1926 to over 15,000,000 in 1936.

That pound-miles of domestic air mail have jumped from four and one-half billions in 1933 to almost ten billions in 1936.

That the number of passengers carried by air liners has more than doubled since 1934.

That the number of miles flown each day by United States domestic and foreign air services has increased from less than 20,000 miles in 1926 to more than 200,000 miles in 1936.

That every day America's air lines fly with passengers and cargo a distance more than eight times around the world at the Equator.

That every second of each day an average of 1,050 passengers and more than 14 tons of mail are being transported by scheduled air liners of United States registry.

These impressive facts are of tremendous importance to the ordinary American citizen. They not only indicate the vital part air transport is playing in the everyday life of the Nation, but they also show that American aviation is literally flying forward with constantly increasing acceleration. In units of time, air transport has shrunk the map of the United States to one-third its former size.

Impressive as are these facts, there is one additional fact which stands out beyond all others and which shows the result of having no adequate national air policy. During the years since 1931, while United States domestic air lines were increasing the number of plane-miles flown annually from thirty-five and one-half million miles to almost 60,000,000 miles, the yearly expenditures of the Federal Government for construction of new and additional aids to air navigation were cut from $2,250,000 to the paltry sum of $87,000. During the years 1933 and 1934 not one dollar was expended from regular appropriations for construction of new and additional air navigational aids.

While the operators of American air transport lines, with characteristic American genius, have built up an air transport system that has been labeled "the eighth wonder of the world", the American people have not known that their Government was following no carefully planned national air policy and was failing to do its part. In the future they must be given a better opportunity to know the truth.

When the "little known facts" presented by the Air Transport Association of America become well known, an informed public opinion cannot fail to demand that Congress give the Nation a well-rounded, carefully planned policy calling for the rapid development and intelligent regulation of civil aeronautics. And at that time Congress cannot avoid its responsibility for the failure of the Federal Government to recognize the important place aviation has come to play in America and the world.

[From American Aviation for June 1, 1937]

PAWNS IN THE GAME

The present air-mail situation is about as sordid a commentary of political manipulation as can be found in American history. It isn't enough that the Post Office Department is playing the air-line operators for a bunch of suckers; even some of the air-line boys "down the line" have fallen like a ton of bricks for subtle Post Office propaganda and have been hypnotized to the proper Post Office frame of mind.

What we are referring to is the legislative program for the air lines now pending before Congress and the new air-mail contracts which the Post Office is about to advertise. The two cannot be considered separately. They have formed a political battlefield, the results of which might even lead to such an extreme as another cancellation and a ruinous price war.

In the first place this is an extremely important year for the air lines. All previous efforts to secure constructive legislation which would take the air lines out of the political realm of the Post Office and place them under the sane and fair regulation of the Interstate Commerce Commission (along with the railroads and bus carriers) have failed. When the present Seventy-fifth Congress opened air-line legislation was introduced immediately (Senator MCCARRAN's bill (S. 2)). Representative CLARENCE LEA, of California, probably the air lines' best friend in the House, introduced another bill which pleased the air lines even more. Senator MCCARRAN promptly introduced the LEA bill into the Senate as Substitute S. 2, so that when the bills are finally reported out for debate, which will be soon, they will be identical.

It is important to note that the McCarran-Lea bill is opposed by only two groups—the Post Office and the Department of Commerce. At the hearings held earlier this year the Department of Commerce had a difficult time explaining why it opposed the bill, but the Post Office opposition is no mystery. A politician has to have in his bag of tricks a group of favorites. In the present situation the air lines are one of the pawns. Political groups must pay communities off in the cheapest coin necessary. Air mail is one way of paying off political debts.

BID LOW OR ELSE

There is nothing mystical about all this. It is common everyday procedure. The political system is inherent in our form of government and we have seen it exercised in hundreds of ways. The big question before aviation, however, is whether this sort of control over air transportation is going to mean a healthy development of a new industry and a new mode of travel that hasn't even begun to reach into its infinite possibilities.

It is no secret in Washington that Representative JIM MEAD is going to get his Washington-Buffalo air mail that he's been fighting for. But it is not unrelated that JIM MEAD's bills pending before Congress are probably the least constructive and least progressive legislation proposed since the Air Mail Act of 1934. A Congressman cannot fight the Post Office and still get his pet route. It also is no secret about the Denver intermediate stop granted to United Air Lines; a political debt was paid to Denver, which wanted the air-mail route, but the Post Office had to stretch a long point of law to find a justification for tip-toeing around the Air Mail Act of 1934. (Incidentally in so doing the Post Office set a precedent of far-reaching magnitude which it may not even be aware of itself.) Also, it is no secret that First Assistant Postmaster General Bill Howes wants a new air-mail route through South Dakota, his home State, as part of the gravy he can take home with him.

All this is chicken feed, though, when it comes to the new air-mail routes which the Post Office will shortly advertise. The inside manipulation has reached almost scandalous proportions. Air-line operators have been called upon one by one. Independent operators have been contacted. The word has been passed around, as the Post Office can only pass word around, that "We're not interested in any bids over 17 cents a mile." Even lower bids are suggested "if you want the business—and if you don't want it, we know somebody that does." The Post Office has made it clear that unless low bids are received the contracts will not be let. It is certainly no secret that the Post Office is high pressuring the air-mail contracts to force through the Mead bill. "If you boys want some more air mail, you'd better help us get the Mead bills through."

DEFEATISM IS RIDICULOUS

Now, any air-line operator knows that a 17-cent rate for carrying the mail is too low. Why shouldn't the Government pay a fair rate for what it gets? Anything under 30 cents a mile should not be considered for multimotored equipment. The cost of operating one major air line is 60 cents a mile, while Lockheed service costs over 30 cents a mile. Then why should the Post Office play the air lines for a bunch of boobs?

The irony of all this is that some of the minor air-line executives have become victims of the Post Office. They have been spreading the word around that "S. 2 hasn't a chance." That's just what the Post Office wants. As a matter of fact, the McCarran-Lea bill has an excellent chance to pass the Seventy-fifth Congress. It is natural for the Post Office to try to defeat it, but it is ridiculous apathy for any air-line man not to resist pressure. The McCarran-Lea bill is the finest legislation the air lines have ever had proposed. Most of them have been working hard for it—but the laggards ought to wake up before it's too late.

Another unfortunate note of despair was the statement made in our hearing by an air-line man to the effect that "there are some changes that will have to be made in the McCarran bill before we'll let it go through. If they make the changes, then we will let it go through." This is childish talk. In the first place, no bill ever introduced or reported out in Congress was ever perfect. The best anyone can expect is to get a general principle adopted and take the best that can be obtained. Also, this individual was bragging in a way that is most damaging to the whole cause. Passage of the bill in no way depends upon the say-so of the air lines. This individual was in a spot where he should know that.

If it wasn't so serious, the situation would be amusing. Only the other day some ebullient Congressman introduced a bill to set aside May 28 as Aviation Day. What a travesty! If Congress wants to recognize aviation, it can do so by giving air transportation a chance to grow constructively, and it isn't getting that chance now. Congressmen can talk about Aviation Days when they do something to merit the honor.

The air lines have the best opportunity in air-line history to obtain constructive legislation at this session. Whether the McCarran-Lea bill is perfect or imperfect is beside the point. Everyone will agree that it would do more to advance air transportation than any other one factor. No air-line official should ever be caught talking pessimistically or bragging about his influence. The air lines aren't out of the political woods yet by a long shot.

[From New York Herald Tribune of May 2, 1937]

AIR LINES FACE POSSIBLE "WAR" OVER INVASION OF EACH OTHER'S ESTABLISHED ROUTES—COMPETITION UNDER THE DISGUISE OF "SEPARATE" FIRMS MAY REVIVE BOOM-TIME CUTTHROAT TACTICS—NEW YORK-BOSTON "INDEPENDENT" WITH VIDAL AS HEAD IS ONE OF SEVERAL SUCH ENTERPRISES EXPECTED—PENDING LEGISLATION MAY SETTLE PROBLEM BY PUTTING I. C. C. IN CONTROL OF AVIATION MAP

By C. B. Allen

Rumors are abroad in the aviation industry of an impending war between various air-line operators, of plans to go off the reservation and invade each other's territory with parallel services under the disguise of independently organized companies. It begins to look as if the boom-time, post-Lindbergh flight era of dog-eat-dog competition in air transportation is about to be ushered in again on top of all the headaches that have befallen the industry in the last 4 years. Some observers say that if the trend isn't checked it will end in chaos; others insist it is the only path to continued progress in aviation. Viewpoints probably depend to a large degree upon whether the prophet is striving to hold on to something he has or trying to lay hands on something he wants.

Under present air-mail laws, of course, one air line cannot establish parallel services in territory served by a rival company without jeopardizing its own Post Office Department contracts. Rates of pay under these are revised from time to time on the basis of the air lines' earnings from other sources, and the Government logically enough, has refused to permit any off-line activities by one contractor which would cut in on the passenger and express revenues of another and thereby force it to make up the latter's losses in larger air-mail payments.

At the same time, neither the Post Office Department nor any other branch of the Government now has the power to prevent an operator without air-mail contracts from starting up a competitive passenger and express service on any route in the country which appeals to him, provided he meets the same standards of safety required of the established air lines.

OUTSIDERS EYE CREAM ROUTES

During the depression this possibility was only an academic menace—no one exhibited any serious interest in trying to run an air line without a guaranteed business backlog of air-mail patronage—but with the return of more prosperous times this picture is changing. Numerous outsiders are beginning to look with covetous eyes on the cream route monopolies of the current air-transportation map of the United States, and certain of the present operators have indicated their eagerness to find ways and means of extending their sphere of activities at the expense of their competitors.

One of the most probable and imminent developments in this field is a route between New York and Boston paralleling a service that has been maintained by American Airlines and its predecessor companies for 10 years. Reports indicate that this enterprise will be launched in the near future by a group with Eugene L. Vidal, former Director of Air Commerce, at its head and that the equipment to be used will be Douglas DC-2 monoplanes supplied by Transcontinental & Western Air's "Lindbergh Line" as these ships are replaced on T. W. A.'s route by newer and larger DC-3 Douglases which T. W. A. ordered some time ago.

Avowedly the deal between Mr. Vidal's group and T. W. A. will be an out-and-out transaction in second-hand airplanes for which T. W. A. has little or no further use. But American Airlines, a formidable business foe of T. W. A. in the transcontinental and New York-Chicago field, has already felt the sting of rate war and other competitive practices resorted to by its rival, and is inclined to no such innocent view of the "invasion" of its territory.

Possibly American is merely trying to head off Boston-New York competition by throwing a good bluff, but reports are getting around that, when and if erstwhile T. W. A. Douglases start flying between New York and Boston a fleet of similar ships which are no longer vital to American Airlines operations will be disposed of to an "independent" though friendly company for service on T. W. A.'s New York-Pittsburgh run.

It is also rumored that the "reprisal route", purely as a matter of business enterprise, of course, might be extended parallel to T. W. A.'s transcontinental run as far as Columbus, Indianapolis, and St. Louis. American Airlines happens to have radio stations and other facilities in Pittsburgh, Columbus, Indianapolis, St. Louis, and other cities along T. W. A.'s route which are used in connection with its present network of noncompetitive lines, and it could scarcely be penalized by the Post Office Department if it allowed a friendly company which had taken a batch of obsolescent airplanes off its hands to use these airway aids on reasonable terms.

The possibilities of this sort of cutthroat competition, once it is started by the major air lines, are almost limitless. Some of them feel that it is certain to be ruinous; others apparently are not so sure that the "chaos" it would create by throwing the air transportation picture wide open again might not prove beneficial in the long run, if not to aviation as a whole, at least to the surviving operators. Which is correct, and whether the industry ever will be forced to face this issue only time can tell.

At the moment a majority of those in the industry seem to favor legislation pending in Congress which would put the air lines wholly under control of the Interstate Commerce Commission and make it impossible for operators, be they air-mail contractors or otherwise, to set up new routes without first obtaining I. C. C. certificates of convenience and necessity such as must be obtained by railroads before they can establish a new line. The I. C. C. already exercises an important function with respect to the air lines in that it establishes equitable rates which must be paid them by the Post Office Department for flying the mail, but there is no present way of preventing unrestricted competition except on the part of companies which hold air-mail contracts.

Mr. Vidal contends that wide-open competition on such heavy-traffic routes as that between New York and Boston, New York and Washington, and New York and Chicago stimulates far more air travel than ever would result if any one line were allowed to have a monopoly. In support of this, he cites the record of the old Ludington Line from here to Washington, with which he was connected before becoming Director of Air Commerce; he says that so many passengers never have been carried between these two cities as were flown when Ludington and Eastern Air Transport were fighting for patronage on this run 5 years ago.

GOOD EVEN WITHOUT MAIL

And Mr. Vidal believes that with modern large-capacity planes, the sort of operation that enabled the Ludington Line to "stay in the black" during the time he was with the organization, despite the fact that it had no air-mail contract, will make it possible to run a New York-Boston passenger and express route on a very profitable basis. This is particularly true, in his opinion, because a nonmail contractor can set his schedules to suit the convenience of the traveling public and not the odd-hour requirements of the Post Office Department, which frequently motivate against paying passenger loads.

FARMERS' HOME CORPORATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 106) to establish the Farmers' Home Corporation, to encourage and promote the ownership of farm homes and to make the possession of such homes more secure, to provide for the general welfare of the United States, to provide additional credit facilities for agricultural development, to create a fiscal agent for the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, last evening, when the Senate took a recess, I was discussing certain desirable amendments to the pending bill. I find from the RECORD this morning, however, that I had not offered any of them. I now formally offer the first of the amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming to the amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 21, beginning with line 23, it is proposed to strike out all after the word "act" down to and including the word "Government", in line 3, page 24, so that, if amended, the paragraph will read:

(h) Shall determine the character and necessity for its expenditures under this act; and

UNRESTRAINED EXPENDITURES

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, this amendment modifies that provision of the pending bill which gives to the corporation which is created to administer the farm tenancy law the power to determine the character and necessity of its expenditures and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, and paid, without regard to the provisions of any other laws governing the expenditure of public funds, and which makes the decisions of the corporation final and conclusive upon all officers of the Government.

As was pointed out yesterday, the purpose of this provision is to exempt this corporation from every provision of law which has been or may be enacted to restrain the expenditure of public funds and to impose economy upon administrative officers. Certainly there never was a time in the history of the United States when we should all be so agreed that economy should be made effective. Certainly, Mr. President, there never was a time in our history when it was so necessary that the Congress, responsible for making appropriations available to executive bureaus, should be careful to see that every law intended to prevent waste and extravagance should be made effective.

Mr. President, I have no intention of occupying the floor for any great length of time, and I expressly disavow any purpose here to impede the consideration of any other measure. I say that because the suggestion has been made that some of the discussion occurring here yesterday and today was not intended to illuminate the provisions of this bill. I want to make it perfectly clear that the remarks I am making are made in absolute good faith for the sole purpose of perfecting this measure.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. POPE. Is the Senator's amendment limited to subdivision (h) of section 6, on page 21?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The amendment that is now being offered; yes.

Mr. POPE. Has the Senator offered amendments affecting other sections?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes.

Mr. POPE. What are they?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I presented an amendment yesterday, which I have revised today, to change the provision on page 20, lines 2, 3, and 4, which creates a board of directors of three persons employed in the Department of Agriculture, who are to be appointed by and hold office during the pleasure of the Secretary.

Mr. POPE. Does the Senator have an amendment which affects subdivision (f) on page 21?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes. I offered an amendment to strike that out.

Mr. POPE. And also subdivision (c) of section 7, appearing on page 23? All those sections were criticized yesterday, and I wondered if the Senator's amendments applied to all of them.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am offering an amendment to section 7, appearing on page 22, by which I propose to strike out the provision which would repeal the civil-service law with respect to appointments made under this act.

Mr. President, in order that the purpose I have in mind may be made clear, I intend now to refer briefly to some of the provisions of law which impose restrictions upon the expenditure of public funds. I will say that this morning I had a conversation with the able Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], who is in charge of the bill, and that, as I take it, he and I are in substantial agreement as to some of these amendments, if not all. He does not agree to striking out all of the language which will be stricken out by the amendment which I now propose.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a moment?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. In order to allay apprehension or to satisfy curiosity on the part of any Senator, I wish to say, Mr. President, concerning Senate bill 69, providing for limiting freight or other trains to 70 cars, which it was my intention to move to consider immediately following the conclusion of consideration of the bill now pending, that I will not today move the consideration of that bill. I will, however, at the next available opportunity move that the bill be considered by the Senate. So many Senators have been compelled to leave the Chamber and to leave the city that at this time I think it best not to bring the bill forward, and I will, therefore, make the motion when all Senators may be present in order that the bill may be given full and fair consideration.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, section 628 of title 31 of the United States Code reads as follows:

> Except as otherwise provided by law, sums appropriated for the various branches of expenditure in the public service shall be applied solely to the objects for which they are respectively made, and for no others.

That provision of law, which is certainly wise and to which no Member of this body would object, is being repealed as to this corporation by the language which I have asked to be stricken out of this measure. I know of no reason——

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am very glad to yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is it the Senator's idea that all employees of the organization to be created by the bill ought to be under the civil service?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am not now discussing that question; I am now discussing restrictions upon the expenditure of public funds.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. POPE. The Senator does not mean, does he, that the language of the bill would repeal the restriction except as it is applicable to this particular measure?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I mean it would repeal the provision as to the corporation to be created. Certainly it would not repeal it as to all branches of the Government. The inclusion in the bill of the provision to which the amendment is offered would mean that some of the governmental bureaus would operate under the restrictions of law now imposed, but this corporation would be exempt.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator from Wyoming think that a corporation of this kind ought to be required to submit every item of expenditure to the Comptroller General and go through a lot of rigmarole?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. This has nothing in the world to do with what the Comptroller General may or may not do; but I contend that when Congress appropriates $10,000,000 or $25,000,000 or $50,000,000 to the corporation provided for by the bill, that those millions out of the Public Treasury should be expended according to the laws written upon the statute books and which apply generally to the expenditure of public funds.

These restrictions in some instances have been on the statute books of the United States since the very beginning of the Government. Why should we, by a blanket phrase, repeal them all so far as the corporation created by the bill is concerned, particularly when, upon reading other provisions of the bill, we find that the corporation is practically exempt from all other responsibility to the legislative branch of the Government?

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. POPE. Is it not true that this is a customary provision which is put in laws providing for Government corporations?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that it undoubtedly is true that, beginning with the depression in 1929, Congress, because it felt under an impelling necessity to act and act promptly, undertook to create corporations which were freed from these restrictions. I think that was true of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which was created under the administration of President Herbert Hoover. The example set then has been followed in innumerable instances in laws which have since been passed. However, I submit to the Senator from Idaho that the time certainly has now come when Congress should cease to delegate all its power and all its authority to unnamed persons in authority over new corporations created with practically unlimited powers.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. POPE. Is the Senator familiar with the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, and particularly the opinion of Mr. Justice Brandeis on this particular point?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. In which he said it was legal? Of course it is legal. That is the reason I am objecting to it. If the provision were not effective, I would not be disturbed about it, but it will be effective. That is why I want to change it.

Mr. POPE. Not only is it legal but, if the Senator will permit me, I will read to him a statement by Mr. Justice Brandeis in which he said it is wise.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I might differ with the Justice upon that point.

Mr. POPE. Mr. Justice Brandeis said:

> Indeed, an important if not the chief reason for employing these incorporated agencies was to enable them to employ commercial methods and to conduct their operations with a freedom supposed to be inconsistent with accountability to the Treasury under its established procedure of audit and control over the financial transactions of the United States.

He was referring to a very similar provision in the Emergency Fleet Corporation law.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Of course, the Senator can save himself and his principle by refusing to eliminate the provision which appears upon another page of this bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I will yield when I finish the sentence.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I was just going to observe that the Senator can also get away from Justice Brandeis by voting to retire him compulsorily.

Mr. POPE. I do not want to get away from him.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I was about to call the attention of the Senator from Idaho to paragraph (c) of section 8 which exempts this Corporation from all responsibility to the General Accounting Office. It was upon a similar provision that Mr. Justice Brandeis was expressing his opinion. An express exemption, of course, would be operative.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I should like to say to the Senator, in order to save time, as Senators desire to get away for the Fourth of July holiday, that I do not regard this section as material. It has been taken from similar provisions in other acts passed by Congress, but I am willing to have the amendment adopted and also the Senator's amendment relating to confirmation by the Senate of appointments to the Board.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator will accept the amendment?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; so that we may go forward with the bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, let me ask unanimous consent, in order to save time, that I may insert in the RECORD at this point as part of my remarks some of the provisions of the statutes which restrict the expenditure of public funds by the executive departments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The following is a partial list of statutes restricting the expenditure of public funds which would be repealed as to the proposed corporation if the amendment now offered should not be agreed to:

Section 628 of title 31, United States Code:

"Except as otherwise provided by law, sums appropriated for the various branches of expenditure in the public service shall be applied solely to the objects for which they are respectively made, and for no others."

Section 46, title 5, United States Code:

"No civil officer, clerk, draftsman, copyist, messenger, assistant messenger, mechanic, watchman, laborer, or other employee shall be employed at the seat of government in any executive department or subordinate bureau or office thereof or be paid from any appropriation made for contingent expenses, or for any specific or general purpose, unless such employment is authorized and payment therefor provided in the law granting the appropriation, and then only for services actually rendered in connection with and for the purposes of the appropriation from which payment is made, and at the rate of compensation provided for in chapter 13 of this title."

Section 674, title 31, United States Code:

"No moneys appropriated for contingent, incidental, or miscellaneous purposes shall be expended or paid for official or clerical compensation.

Section 678, title 31, United States Code:

"Law books, books of reference, and periodicals for use of any executive department or other Government establishment not under an executive department, at the seat of government, shall not be purchased or paid for from any appropriation made for contingent expenses or for any specific or general purpose unless such purchase is authorized and payment therefor specifically provided in the law granting the appropriation." (Mar. 15, 1898, ch. 68, sec. 3, 30 Stat. 316.)

Section 102, title 5, United States Code:

"The amount expended in any one year for newspapers, for any department, except the Department of State, including all bureaus and offices connected therewith, shall not exceed $100, except where otherwise specifically authorized by law. But the foregoing provision shall not apply to the subscriptions to newspapers by the military-information division. No executive officer, other than the heads of departments, shall apply more than $30, annually, out of the contingent fund under his control, to pay for newspapers, pamphlets, periodicals, or other books or prints not necessary for the business of his office." (R. S., secs. 192, 1779; Mar. 2, 1903, c. 975, 32 Stat. 929; June 22, 1906, c. 3514, sec. 7, 34 Stat. 449.)

Section 73 of title 5, United States Code:

"Except as otherwise provided by law, only actual traveling expenses shall be allowed to any person holding employment or appointment under the United States, except marshals, district attorneys, and clerks of the courts of the United States, and their deputies."

Section 34, title 40, United States Code:

"No contract shall be made for the rent of any building or part of any building, to be used for the purposes of the Government in the District of Columbia, until an appropriation therefor shall have been made in terms by Congress, and this clause shall be regarded as notice to all contractors or lessors of any such building or any part of building."

Section 78, title 5, United States Code:

"No appropriation made in any act shall be available for the purchase of any motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicle for the service of any of the executive departments or other Government establishments, or any branch of the Government service, unless specific authority is given therefor. There shall not be expended out of any appropriation made by Congress any sum for purchase, maintenance, repair, or operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles for any branch of the public service of the United States unless the same is specifically authorized by law. In the estimates for each fiscal year there shall be submitted in detail estimates for such necessary appropriations as are intended to be used for purchase, maintenance, repair, or operation of all motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, specifying the sums required, the public purposes for which said vehicles are intended, and the officials or employees by whom the same are to be used." (July 16, 1914, c. 141, sec. 5, 38 Stat. 508.)

Section 219 of title 44, United States Code:

"No head of any executive department, or of any bureau, branch, or office of the Government, shall cause to be printed, nor shall the Public Printer print, any document or matter except that which is authorized by law and necessary to the public business; and executive officers, before transmitting their annual reports, shall carefully examine the same and all accompanying documents, and exclude therefrom all matter, including engravings, maps, drawings, and illustrations, except such as they shall certify in their letters transmitting such reports are necessary and relate entirely to the transaction of the public business."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

CONFIRMATION OF BOARD MEMBERS

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I offer another amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 20, line 4, it is proposed to strike out all after the word "by" and insert the following:

The President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, for terms of 5 years, provided that the persons first appointed shall serve, respectively, for 1, 3, and 5 years.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I understand that the Senator from Alabama will not object to that amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator is wrong about that. I said I would not object to an amendment requiring confirmation by the Senate.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Exactly; and that is all this amendment proposes to do.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; it fixes the terms of office, as I understood the reading.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes; it fixes a term of 5 years.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not think that ought to be done, because, under the theory of this bill, those appointed to the Board are to be under the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The provision of the bill to which the amendment is offered clothes the Secretary with great power.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The amendment proposes to fix terms of office which may not be sufficiently long. If the amendment merely provided for confirmation of the members of the Board, I should have no objection to it. That is what we agreed on this morning.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It is true the Senator agreed only that he would not object to an amendment which would provide for confirmation of members of the board by the Senate, but I will say to the Senator that we did not discuss the question of the terms of office. When I undertook to write the amendment, however, I discovered that it would be almost impossible to draft a satisfactory amendment without fixing a term.

I shall be very glad to accept the suggestion of the Senator from Alabama as to the length of the term if the term of 5 years is not long enough. The provision of the bill which I think should be changed is that the board shall consist of three persons employed in the Department of Agriculture who shall be appointed by and hold office at the pleasure of the Secretary.

My contention is that the board of directors of this all-powerful corporation should not hold office at the pleasure of the Secretary. My contention is that the mere confirmation of members of the board by the Senate, if they are to hold office at the pleasure of the Secretary, is a concession that concedes nothing. We might be confirming appointees week after week if the Secretary of Agriculture could remove them at his pleasure.

What objection can there possibly be to fixing a definite term for the members of the board of directors? We are setting up a corporation which will administer farm tenancy; we are setting up a corporation which will deal with the most intimate affairs of many citizens of the United States, and those who, above all others, should have careful consideration of their problems, the tenant farmers. It is proposed to place the administration of this measure in the hands of a board of directors holding office at the pleasure of the Secretary of Agriculture. Secretaries change; secretaries resign; secretaries die; secretaries pass out of office. What sort of permanence can we have in a system of that kind? What possible objection can there be to the establishment of a definite term?

I do not care how long or how short it may be, and I would be very glad to receive any suggestion and to accept any suggestion that may be made by the Senator from Alabama, but it seems to me to be perfectly clear that when we are setting up a corporation to which we shall commit billions of dollars out of the Public Treasury, and to which we shall also commit the affairs of millions of tenants throughout the United States, whose future will depend upon the administration of this Corporation, we should be very certain that there shall be definite terms and definite responsibility for the men who are clothed with the power of administering the law.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly.

Mr. HUGHES. I am not familiar with the amendment. Does the amendment also propose to strike out the provision that?—

> The board shall consist of three persons employed in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. No; they are to be employees of the Department of Agriculture, so that the board will consist of persons who are in that Department, but, under the amendment, they would be named by the President and confirmed by the Senate and would serve for definite terms of 5 years.

Mr. President, I have no desire to occupy the floor further and am very glad to submit the amendment to a vote.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, in view of the program provided in the bill, I think the amendment should not be adopted. Its adoption would set up, in effect, a separate bureau with a board of directors for a fixed term. It would really change the theory of the bill placing the bureau under the Secretary of Agriculture. I hope the amendment will be rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming to the committee amendment. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Several Senators called for a division.

On a division, the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

RETENTION OF CIVIL-SERVICE PLAN

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I send to the desk another amendment which I offer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment in section 7, on page 22, line 8, beginning with the word "the", it is proposed to strike out all of lines 8 to 13, inclusive, and the word "regulations" in line 14, as follows:

> The Secretary of Agriculture may appoint such officers and employees, subject to the provisions of the Classification Act of 1923, and acts amendatory thereof, and such attorneys and experts as may be necessary for the purposes of this act; and the Secretary may make such appointments without regard to the civil-service laws or regulations.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Paragraph (a) of section 7 consists of two sentences, the first of which gives the Secretary of Agriculture the power to appoint all officers and employees subject to the classification act but without regard to the civil-service law. The second sentence authorizes the board to define the authority and duties of officers and employees of the corporation. In view of the fact that we have just adopted the other amendment providing for confirmation of the members of this board, it seems to me that this amendment should also be adopted. I invite attention that this is an amendment which will take away from the Board and from the Secretary the power to appoint employees without regard to the civil-service law.

Let me say just a word about it. It seems to me to be perfectly obvious that when we create a corporation to carry on what amounts to a governmental function and clothe that corporation with broad powers, it is extremely unwise to clothe that corporation with the additional power to make appointments without regard to the civil-service laws. If the appointments were being made by Members of the Senate or Members of the House I probably would not be objecting, because no one is more ready to criticize the method by which bureaucracy abuses the civil-service laws than am I; but it is certainly no gain in public responsibility to give not to the Members of the Senate or the House the power to make these appointments, but to give it to the directors of the corporation which is to be created under the terms of the bill, or to the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. POPE. On page 32 of the bill is a provision for use of county committees and payment of their expenses. Is it the opinion of the Senator that the county committees should be covered by civil service? The committees and their employees are made up of farmers in the various localities.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Not at all. I quite agree with the Senator that the county committees should be exempt, and I should be very happy to accept an amendment which will provide that members of such committees shall not be subject to the civil-service laws.

Mr. POPE. Should the employees of the committees also be included under the civil-service rules and regulations? The secretaries of the committees are usually bank clerks or local insurance agents who give only a small part of their time to the work. They look after the books and records of the committee and write letters. Employees of the secretary of the committee consist, for example, of a stenographer who spends a very small part of her time on this work. That is illustrative of the kind of employees who would work in connection with the local committees.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Will the Senator join me in the suggestion that all permanent employees of the corporation shall be appointed under and in accordance with the civil-service laws?

Mr. POPE. The secretaries of the local committees are permanent employees.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator just said they would work only part of the time.

Mr. POPE. They are permanent in the sense that they are employed regularly and receive a regular monthly or annual salary. I think the term "permanent" and the term "temporary" would have to be clarified and defined.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Would the Senator agree to an amendment that all employees in the District of Columbia should be appointed under the civil-service laws?

Mr. POPE. I am not sponsoring the bill. The bill is in charge of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is arguing and I am trying to win him over.

Mr. POPE. I have no objection to all employees in Washington being under civil service. We had this same question involved in connection with another bill when I made a rather careful study of it. I raised the question of the applicability of the civil-service rules and regulations to the farmers who would take a substantial part in carrying out the provisions of the law. I should have no objection to having the civil-service laws apply to all employees in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] whether the situation here is not analagous to that which we had when we were considering the crop-insurance bill which the Senator sponsored. The same question arose, and in view of the particular nature of the work to be done by local people, voluntary committees, and by many others whose services were not of sufficient importance to justify placing them on the permanent roll with an annual salary, but whose services were important in the local communities and in the particular phases of the administration of the act, the Senate decided not to require a civil-service examination of such employees.

I ask the Senator from Idaho if the situation is not somewhat analagous to that which I have just mentioned?

Mr. POPE. It is analogous so far as farmer employees are concerned. The Senator may recall that at that time I presented to the Senate a list of employees who would be doing temporary work or who were farmers and had special knowledge of the particular things they were to be called upon to do. I found in connection with that matter that about 75 percent of the employees were temporary in character, made up of local employees on local committees, watchmen at warehouses, and persons engaged in similar lines of work. I think the Senate at the time agreed with me that in cases where 75 percent of the employees were farmers and of a temporary character, the civil-service laws should not be applicable.

I took that position notwithstanding the fact that I am as strong an advocate of the merit system and of civil service as is any other man in this Chamber; but I think we should look at these matters reasonably in making the civil-service law applicable to the farmers and temporary employees, who necessarily must be relied upon to make the program succeed. Instead of filling a position with a civil-service employee who may come from Florida or Maine or some other place, and putting him into a local situation with which he is not familiar, it seems to me wise to make a proper limitation upon the application of the civil-service laws in order that some local person familiar with the local situation may be appointed to the position. It seems to me the same reason would, to some extent, apply here which applied in the crop-insurance case which we have been discussing, and to that extent the civil-service limitation should be waived.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I desire to offer a modification of the amendment which I have sent to the desk. On page 22, at the end of the sentence, in line 19, add the following:

> Appointments of temporary employees and of employees in the field may be made without regard to the civil-service laws, under regulations to be prescribed by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. POPE. I think that is a distinct improvement, but what is the Senator going to do with the experts and attorneys who may be necessary in the administration of the law?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I think that may be handled through another amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in that connection may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. The law is to be administered by the Department of Agriculture. The Resettlement Administration is a part of the Department of Agriculture. No doubt the Resettlement Administration, in the field, or perhaps even here in the District of Columbia, will be called upon to render service. Certainly there will be a form of cooperation between the Resettlement Administration or service, and the corporation or board which it is proposed to set up under the pending bill. The employees of the Resettlement Administration are not under civil service either in the District of Columbia or out in the field.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That was because it was an emergency organization; and the Senator well knows, because he is a member of the Committee on Reorganization, that the President is suggesting to us that all these employees be placed under the civil service.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the reorganization bill is still under consideration.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I assume that the Senator will support it.

Mr. BARKLEY. The bill itself is from time to time being reorganized. I am speaking of the law as it now is. No one can tell what is going to be the fate of the reorganization bill, although we do hope—and I am sure the Senator shares the hope—that we may secure substantial legislation on that subject at a very early date. But the point is, if the agency now in existence which is closest to the farm-tenant situation, and which has made some progress in dealing with that subject, is to be called into cooperation with the administration of this act, and that agency is not under the civil service, to what extent will an amendment of this sort confuse the situation, so as to make it impossible for the Department of Agriculture to utilize the experience and the services of men in the Resettlement Administration?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the amendment will not confuse the situation at all. The Resettlement Administration was established as an agency outside of the Department of Agriculture. Since then, by Executive order, it has been made a part of the Department of Agriculture. The Resettlement Administration is today working with the Department of Agriculture, most of the employees of which are under the civil service.

Mr. BARKLEY. That statement applies to the employees here in the District of Columbia, but not to those out in the field.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. They are working with employees of the Department of Agriculture out in the field who are under the civil service.

Mr. President, it seems to me there can be no Member of this body who does not know that under the system which has been followed heretofore in the creation of these executive agencies, literally thousands of persons have been appointed to positions in Government employ outside of the civil service who recognize no responsibility to the Congress of the United States or to the administration that is in power and who are without responsibility to the people. I am sure there is no Senator and no Member of the House of Representatives who had anything to do with the last campaign who does not know that literally hundreds of Government employees who were appointed without regard to civil service were active in the campaign against the head of this administration. One of the virtues of the civil service law is that the persons who are appointed under it are forbidden to participate in political activity of a pernicious nature. Why should the Senate and the House undertake to create here a system whereby the bureaucrats may appoint whom they please, without regard to the civil service laws, to run the affairs of the people of the United States? We are drifting so rapidly toward bureaucracy that it ought to make our heads swim.

Mr. President, I do not intend to take up the time of the Senate by protracted argument. I have offered the amendment, and I am very glad to have it submitted as it stands. It places the permanent employees of this Corporation under the merit system, where they ought to be, and exempts temporary employees and those who are in the field.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, a few minutes ago the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] stated that he hoped the Senator from Idaho would be converted to the view of the civil service which is held by the Senator from Wyoming. I have not been here very long, and I have not yet been converted to the virtues of the civil service. So far as I personally feel, I am not impressed with the great advantages of having appointments of any kind, or certainly appointments like these, put under civil service.

The Senator says that because of the fact that a great many employees in the field are not under civil service they took an active part in the recent campaign. I desire to say that in my State those who were under the civil service also took a rather active part in the campaign, although it was contrary to the law. I know that in my case quite a number of officers who were under the civil service were fighting me in the campaign, and I think that will happen everywhere.

So far as I am personally concerned, until I am "converted", as the Senator expresses it, I do not feel inclined to vote in this or any other bill to increase the scope of the civil service, especially in cases like this, where, as the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] suggests—and I know that to be the case—these officers will be drawn, for the time being, anyhow, largely from other agencies in the field under the Agricultural Department. So I shall not vote for the amendment.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, the Senator from Delaware says he has not been here very long, and has not observed much about the workings of the civil service. Neither have I; but I have been here long enough to learn that one does not know anything at all about politics until he runs up against the civil service. If there is any politics that is played with a fine Italian hand, it is the politics that is played in the departments by the inner circle of the civil-service employees. If one wishes to learn something about politics, he should go up against that ring, and they will give him cards and spades and beat him.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator from Indiana that I think there is a great deal of truth in the remark he has just made. My contention is that we gain nothing whatsoever by giving a free hand to the bureaucrats who play the fine Italian game of politics he describes.

Mr. MINTON. Who are the bureaucrats? That is what I want to know.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Who are the bureaucrats? Why, Mr. President, they are employees who are scattered all through the fast-ramifying Government establishment that we are building up here, and many of them are civil-service employees.

Mr. MINTON. Exactly so. They have some appointments to make, and they are bureaucrats, and they maintain the existence of the present system.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I may say to the Senator that the Committee on Reorganization is endeavoring to cure that defect. My only point is that nothing is gained by creating another corporation, the employees of which will have powers even greater than those of the civil-service employees.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, in reply to what the Senator says about bureaucrats, I desire to add to what I have said, that I have known the Secretary of Agriculture for quite a number of years, and I have a very high regard for him.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, let me interrupt the Senator long enough to say that I yield to no one in my admiration for the present Secretary of Agriculture. He is an outstanding man and a public servant of unusual ability.

Mr. HUGHES. Under the bill as it stands, however, he is to appoint these officers and employees. I am certainly prepared to trust him to make the appointments, and I very much prefer that he make them to having them made under civil service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 25, line 3, at the end of section 9 (a), it is proposed to amend the committee amendment by adding thereto the following:

In making loans under this act the amount which is devoted to such purpose during any fiscal year shall be distributed equitably among the several States and Territories on the basis of farm population and the prevalence of tenancy as determined by the Secretary.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the amendment just read is agreeable to me, and, so far as I am concerned, it may be accepted.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may the amendment be read again?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will restate the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was restated.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator think that amendment is necessary?

Mr. BAILEY. I do think it is necessary. I should like to have the funds provided spent equitably throughout the territory affected by the bill. I should not be willing to run the risk of having them concentrated in any one or two or three States or in any one section. I know that tenancy is more prevalent in some States than in others, but I wish the money to be expended fairly throughout the country, with a view to attacking this problem in the small way that is proposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I send to the desk another amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 31, after line 14, it is proposed to insert the following:

The gross overhead expense of the activity herein created shall not exceed the sum of $400,000 per year, including expense of the agency at Washington and all other expenses in local offices and the field, including travel and communication.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I have no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina to the amendment of the committee is agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I desire to make a statement as to my reasons for putting forward that amendment.

Four hundred thousand dollars is 4 percent of $10,000,000. I think that is fair. I am induced to offer the amendment because of the record made under the Rural Resettlement Administration. In the year 1936 it expended $200,382,268, and the overhead was $33,388,187. Those figures are to be found on page 66 of the Budget, which is before us all. That is an expenditure of 16½ percent for overhead under the illustrious administration of the celebrated Professor Tugwell. The Rural Resettlement Act was designed to some extent to solve the tenancy problem, I thought to a very great extent, but, of course, we all realize that it did not solve the problem, and I suspect that it has not solved anything. I wish to hold the administrative expenditures in this new experiment to $400,000 a year, in the hope that 96 percent of the funds will be addressed to the problem properly.

I understand the amendment has been agreed to, and I send forward another amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 26, at the end of line 8, it is proposed to insert the following:

But the power of eminent domain herein provided shall be exercised only in instances in which it is necessary to clear titles.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. In connection with his amendment, I desire to ask, as I had intended to ask before, under what circumstances would it be necessary to invoke the power of eminent domain in the execution and administration of the law at all? Secondly, can the power of eminent domain be exercised for the purpose of transferring property from A to B?

Mr. BAILEY. I do not think so.

Mr. BORAH. Nor do I. How is the power of eminent domain to be exercised under the pending measure for a public purpose, in the sense that "public purpose" is used in defining the power of eminent domain?

Mr. BAILEY. I agree with what the Senator has in mind, but I may say that the bill on its face provides for the purchase of property and for condemnation proceedings in view of the purchase. Whether or not we would agree to the use of the power of eminent domain with respect to purchase only, or to purchase with a view to transfer, is a question. I think, therefore, that the amendment restricting the exercise of the power would be helpful. However, I am perfectly willing to vote for an amendment taking out of the bill entirely the section conferring the power of eminent domain.

Mr. BORAH. I was about to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether he is satisfied that the power of eminent domain could be invoked at all under the measure. I myself cannot conceive of any circumstances or conditions which would justify the exercise of that power. I should be glad to have the Senator's view, because he has undoubtedly considered the matter.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I do not know whether or not the Senator from Idaho was in the Chamber yesterday when this matter was under discussion, but I stated then that the only object the author of the bill had in incorporating the provision for the exercise of the power of eminent domain was to expedite in certain cases the clearing of titles.

I assume that the corporation to be set up can be given such power as the Government has. I do not know any reason why, if the Government has the power, it cannot exercise that power through an instrumentality created by the Congress. At any rate, it is doing that all the time.

In the case of the Tennessee Valley Authority, where lands are being covered by water as the result of the construction of dams, there are two methods of making settlement. One is by purchase; the other, where a price cannot be agreed upon, is by condemnation, authorized in the act and invoked at every session of the Federal court in the district affected.

Mr. BORAH. I can understand that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understood the Senator had in mind both the power and the necessity for its use.

As I said on the floor of the Senate yesterday, I myself would not be willing to have the Government exercise the power of eminent domain in this matter for the purpose of acquiring a farm where the real owner of the farm did not desire to sell it. I can conceive of cases, such as those which have developed in T. V. A. transactions, in flood-control transactions where the Government is obliged to acquire lands, in forestry transactions where the Government is constantly buying land, where complete title cannot be acquired, sometimes because of the minority of a party, sometimes because of insanity of some party, sometimes by reason of the fact that heirs are absent or unknown, when in fact the real owners in large part have agreed to the transaction and when the purchase price is acceptable, but for one reason or another complete and legal title cannot be acquired, although the equitable title is being acquired.

So, with the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina, to which I have expressed my full agreement, because it covers the only purpose I had in mind in incorporating the provision, the power may well be used purely for clearing titles.

I am sure that the distinguished Senator from Idaho, with his great legal talent and wide legal experience, realizes that under a limitation of that sort, giving the power of eminent domain only for the purpose of clearing title, a well-known legal designation, and a term well known in law books, the power could not be improperly used. It could not be used for the purpose of taking land from those who were on it in their own right and unwilling to have it taken. Therefore no injustice could be accomplished. It is simply to expedite a transaction which the Government and all the adult parties involved wish to carry out, but which they are delayed from carrying out because, as I have said, of facts which make a complete conveyance by the heirs in the chain of title, whether they own any interest at the time or not, impossible to secure.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment be stated again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 26, at the end of line 8, it is proposed to add the following:

> But the power of eminent domain herein provided shall be exercised only in instances in which it is necessary to clear titles.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, can the power of eminent domain be exercised to clear title?

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator will allow me to respond, I do not think so. I do not think the section ought to be in the bill. I have offered the amendment by way of modification on the ground that probably it is the best we can get. But I have another consideration. The laws on eminent domain are rather clear, but it is not quite clear in America today what sort of a court we are going to have, and I think we should build modifications here and there.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I do not regard this as of sufficient importance to detain the Senate. It is purely a corrective provision, and in view of the opposition of the Senator from Idaho, for whose views I have very great respect, as I think he knows, and in view of the opposition of the Senator from North Carolina, who is friendly to the bill, I am unwilling to engage in any protracted discussion about a matter which I do not think involves a principle in the measure. So I agree to withdraw the section from the bill, if that is agreeable.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am not asking the Senator to withdraw the section.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I intended to say that I was willing to strike out the words "eminent domain."

Mr. BORAH. I would simply strike out the two words "eminent domain."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; on reflection, that is what I suggest.

Mr. BAILEY. Then I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the words "eminent domain" be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 25, line 17, after the word "purchase" and the comma, it is proposed to strike out the words "eminent domain."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY. I send forward another amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert in the proper place the following language:

> No farm, or equipment thereof, or improvements thereon, shall be sold for less than cost to the Board, including a reasonable charge for overhead.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, my reason for offering that amendment is based on the experience of the Rural Resettlement Administration. They are expending $20,000 per unit in New Jersey, and they expended $12,000 to $16,000 per unit in Virginia. I understand that they have expended $12,000 per unit in Greenbelt. There is not a possibility of any of that property being sold for the prices which the Government has paid. My amendment is intended to restrict sales of property to an amount which is not less than the cost to the Government, plus a reasonable overhead.

I hope the amendment will be accepted. If it is not accepted, there is no telling how much will be spent, or how much the Government will lose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina to the amendment reported by the committee. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I send forward another amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 22, line 14, after the word "regulations", it is proposed to insert:

Appointments to office hereunder, the compensation of which is $4,500 or more, shall be subject to confirmation by the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. I hope the Senate will accept that amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I think the Senator should make the amount $5,000. I think that is the amount which has been fixed heretofore.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, if there is to be a change, I think the change ought to be made to $4,000.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, it appears that I am playing safe either way. I ask for a vote on my amendment. If the amendment is rejected, I shall adopt the suggestions made by the two Senators who have just spoken.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am not trying to "jew" the Senator down. I am suggesting to him that in order to have uniformity the amount ought to be $5,000. I do not care if the Corporation does not pay anyone over $2,000.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask for a vote on the amendment as proposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Sentaor from North Carolina to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee amendment is still before the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I now offer some slight amendments which I tried to offer when the bill was first called up. They are purely of a corrective nature.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment to the amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 35, line 13, it is proposed to strike out the figures "44" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "24."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment reported by the committee is agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I send forward another amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 35, line 7, it is proposed to strike out the words "United States" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Corporation."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment reported by the committee is agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I send forward another amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 33, line 10, after the words "by the" and immediately preceding the word "Secretary", it is proposed to insert the words "United States and under the supervision of the."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment reported by the committee is agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I send forward another amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 33, line 10, it is proposed to insert a comma after the word "Agriculture."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment reported by the committee is agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I send forward another amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 29, beginning with line 18, it is proposed to strike out all of section 16 down to and including line 11, on page 30, and to insert a new section 16, as follows:

SEC. 16. Nothing in this act shall be construed to exempt any real property held by any purchaser or lessee from the Corporation, notwithstanding the legal title remains in the Corporation, from taxation by any State or political subdivision thereof to the same extent, according to its value, as other real property is taxed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment reported by the committee is agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I offer one other amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 21, beginning with line 4, it is proposed to strike out all of subsection (d) of section 6 and to insert a new subsection (d), as follows:

(d) May sue and be sued in its corporate name in any court of competent jurisdiction, State or Federal, provided that the prosecution and defense of all litigation to which the Corporation may be a party shall be conducted under the supervision of the Attorney General, and the Corporation shall be represented by the United States attorneys for the districts, respectively, in which such litigation may arise, or by such other attorney or attorneys as may, under the law, be designated by the Attorney General: And provided further, That no attachment, injunction, garnishment, or other similar process, mesne or final, shall be issued against the Corporation or its property.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment reported by the committee is agreed to.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to detain the Senate more than a few minutes; but I have one or two observations which I wish to make on the bill before its final passage.

Before coming to the Senate in 1935 I had made a resolution that during my term of service I would do something about the farm-tenancy problem, because I had not only made an investigation of it in this country but I had occasion to spend several weeks in Denmark and Holland in a study of this very question. When I arrived in the Senate I found that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and Representative JONES, of Texas, had been at work on the subject for some time, and I joined with these gentlemen and contributed my bit toward the perfection of this very much needed legislation.

At this point I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, as part of my remarks, a portion of the Report of the President's Committee on Farm Tenancy, found on page 35 and part of page 36, which shows the extent of tenancy in the United States by sections. The report of the President's committee shows that actually 50 percent of the farms of this country are operated altogether or in part by tenants, sharecroppers, and farm laborers. I desire that this portion of the report be printed in the RECORD, because I think the people throughout the country who read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will be interested in this particular portion of the report. The information contained therein will not reach the general reading public as well when published in a report as it will when printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The portion of the report referred to, appearing on pages 35 and 36 of the Report of the President's Committee on Farm Tenancy, is as follows:

EXTENT OF TENANCY

The agricultural census of 1935 provides recent information on the extent and distribution of farm tenancy in the United States. According to its classification, approximately 42 percent of the 6,812,350 farmers in the country were tenants; that is, farmers who rent all of the land they operate.[1] The number of tenant farmers was reported as 2,865,155, the highest ever recorded (statis. supp., table I).

An additional 10 percent of all farmers were part owners; that is, farmers who own part and rent part of the land they operate.

[1] Croppers are included as tenants in the census classification. In some States they are legally regarded not as tenants with possession of the land they operate, but as workers, under landlord supervision, who receive a part of the crop as payment.

Hence, more than half of the farmers of the United States rent all or part of their farms. The number of part owners was reported as 688,867, also the highest ever recorded (statis. supp., table II). About 48,000 other farms were operated by hired managers.

These figures show that less than half (47 percent) of the farmers of the United States own all of the land they farm.

DISTRIBUTION OF TENANCY BY REGIONS

The distribution of farm tenancy by States and the proportion of farmers who are tenants vary from State to State (statis. supp., table III). Every State in the Union has some farm tenancy, though it is by no means of the same social, economic, and political significance (fig. 1).

The South: Farm tenants, including croppers, are a higher percentage of all farmers in the South[3] than in any other major section. There were 3,422,000 farmers in the South, according to the 1935 census, of whom 1,831,000, or 54 percent, were tenants. The tenants in the South represent about 64 percent of all the tenant farmers in the United States. Almost every Southern State has a higher percentage of tenancy than those in the North or West. Mississippi ranks at the top, with 70 percent of the farms in the hands of tenants or croppers. In Georgia two-thirds of all farmers are tenants or croppers; and in South Carolina, Alabama, Arkansas, Louisiana, and Oklahoma, more than 60 percent of the farms are operated by tenants or croppers (statis. supp., table I). All of the counties in the United States in which more than 80 percent of the farmers are tenants or croppers are in the South; most of these counties are in the rich alluvial lands along the lower Mississippi River. Throughout the Southern States, however, there are extensive areas where from 60 to 80 percent of all farmers are tenants or croppers.

The North: Even though the 16 Southern States have within their borders almost two-thirds of the total number of tenants and croppers, farm tenancy is important, and growing rapidly, in many other areas of the country (statis. supp., tables I and III).

The 21 States in the North Atlantic and North Central Divisions of the country[2] had 2,819,000 farmers in 1935, of whom 898,000, or about 32 percent, were tenants. The northern State with the highest percentage of tenancy is Iowa, one of the richest agricultural States in the Union, with 50 percent of all farms operated by tenants. Nebraska and South Dakota are tied for second place, with 49 percent of their farms operated by tenants. In 1935 more than two-fifths of the farmers in Kansas and Illinois were tenants. There are a few specialized grain-growing counties in Illinois, Iowa, and South Dakota in which more than 60 percent of the farms are tenant operated. Throughout wide areas of the North there are numerous counties in which from 40 to 60 percent of all farmers are tenants. In the industrial sections of the Northeast, however, the percentage of tenancy is not high, and until the recent depression had been declining for many years.

The West: In most parts of the 11 Western States[4] there is relatively little tenant farming, but it has been increasing for several decades, and in many cash-crop areas has reached levels as high as the average for the country as a whole.

Of the 571,000 farmers in the West reported by the 1935 census, 136,000, or 24 percent, were tenants. The Western State with the highest percentage of tenancy is Colorado, where 39 farms out of each 100 are tenant-operated. Most of the tenant farmers in that State are in the eastern counties near Kansas and Nebraska. In the States of Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, Oregon, and California between 20 and 30 percent of all farmers were tenants in 1935; in the States of New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, Nevada, and Washington less than 20 percent of the farms were tenant-operated.

The disposition of range lands causes the percentage of leased land in the West to be much higher than the percentage of tenant farms. Hundreds of thousands of acres are rented[5] for grazing purposes, but since most of the ranch operators own some land they are not classified as tenants. Approximately 43 percent of all western land in farms was shown as operated under lease in 1935, and since this figure does not include some of the Federal-, State-, railroad-, and absentee-owned land rented to ranchmen for grazing purposes, the actual proportion of rented land is probably considerably higher.

A second factor in the discrepancy between the proportion of rented land and the proportion of tenant farmers is due to the fact that farming corporations are extensive renters in the specialized cash-crop areas where much of the work is done by migratory agricultural laborers. There are a number of "pockets" in these cash crop areas, moreover, and also in the dry-farming areas, where the tenancy rate is high.

State legislation prohibiting orientals from owning land has been a special factor operating to increase tenancy rates in certain Western States where orientals make up a significant proportion of farm operators, though purchase of land by American-born children of oriental parents is in process of offsetting the effect of these laws.

[3] The South is herein defined as the 16 States and the District of Columbia in the South Atlantic and South Central Divisions of the country. The individual States are Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas, Louisiana, Oklahoma, and Texas.

[2] The individual States are Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, and Kansas.

[4] The individual States are Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming.

[5] The term "rented" as applied to range land is employed to include land used under permit or license.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, some people have despaired of this undertaking because of its magnitude; but in a study of the question of farm tenancy I find that in Ireland, when a start was made to solve this question by long-range legislation and the adoption of a permanent program, it was found that 97 percent of the farmers of Ireland were tenants and sharecroppers; and by adopting a policy somewhat akin to the one we have under consideration, up to the present time that percentage in Ireland has been reduced to 3 percent.

In Denmark, where only half of the farmers were tenants when a similar program was initiated, in the last 35 years that tenancy figure has been reduced to 5 percent.

We are faced today with the situation that about 52 percent of our farmers are tenant farmers; and I say "52 percent" in the face of the statement made yesterday that the figure is 42 percent. The statement was made yesterday that farm tenancy amounted to 42 percent. That figure did not include farmers part of whose farming operations is on rented land, and the statistics show that 10 percent are in that situation. So it is safe to say that 52 percent of the farmers of America do not own their homes outright.

The question is, Can we solve this problem? Personally, I agree with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that this legislation by itself will not solve the question of tenancy in the United States. I make that statement in connection with the question, Who is responsible for farm tenancy? I think the reason why farm tenancy in the United States has shown a gradual increase is because of the failure of the Congress to act. We shall never be able to solve the tenancy question until Congress realizes that we must do something besides buying a home for the tenant farmer. We must have laws and inaugurate policies which will make it possible for the farmer to succeed after we have bought him a farm and equipped him to carry on farming operations.

The Federal Government, acting through Congress, is responsible for the condition of tenancy existing throughout the United States. So long as the Congress is influenced both in the making of laws and in the execution and interpretation of its laws by influences which are not of the best for the rank and file of the American people, we shall not be able to solve the problem.

There are just a few things that Congress must do before we can hope to reduce the great percentage of tenancy in this country. There is not any trouble about the southern farmer. I speak especially at this time concerning the tenancy question in the South; and I think I can speak of that because my State, Mississippi, is the banner State when it comes to the number of tenant farmers.

At one time 72 percent of our farmers were tenants. It is not a race question, either; because in the South two-thirds of the tenants are white and one-third are Negroes.

Mr. President, we are not going to be able to solve the question until we do something to improve the condition of the farmer. When Denmark started out to solve the question of tenancy, not only was it provided that the Government should finance the tenant farmer and the purchase of his holdings, his land, and should also equip him, but the farmers of Denmark took hold of the Government itself and enacted legislation and established policies which would insure the success of farming in Denmark; in fact, the commissioner of agriculture in Denmark is the most important man in the Government, and, if Denmark has a dictator, it is the commissioner of agriculture. In Denmark the marketing end and the selling end of farming have been thoroughly systematized. I had a conference with the gentleman in Denmark who has control of all the agricultural colleges and agricultural activities in the educational line in that country. He told me that they had never been able to make any progress in the solution of the tenancy question until the Government took hold of the question of marketing profitably the commodities the farmers were able to produce on the fertile lands of Denmark.

It is not difficult for the southern farmer to produce bounteous crops. We have adequate rainfall; we have the proper temperature; we have the soil; we have everything that is ideal for agricultural success; but our trouble has been in disposing of the crops produced at living, decent prices after they have been harvested.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BILBO. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does not the Senator also think that we should have a system of adequate financing of the farmer? It is very difficult, in our section of the country at least, for the small farmer to obtain money. It has been less difficult, of course, since the Government has set up the Crop Loan Bureau, which has helped the small farmers to a very great degree; but there ought to be some system of financing. Whether wholly private or wholly public or partly private and partly public, we ought to have a system under which farmers could obtain the necessary money at a reasonable rate of interest to make their crops.

Mr. BILBO. I appreciate the Senator's position and his observations. I have been very much in sympathy with the Government seed-loan campaign and the work that has been done during the depression by the Resettlement Administration, as well as by the W. P. A. in giving relief. Of course, such aid from the Government is necessary under the present depressed and oppressed conditions of the farmers of the South and of the Nation, but, after there shall be provided permanent relief, so that the farmer may dispose to advantage of the crops he may grow, it will not be necessary to go on with the other kinds of relief, because he will then be able to take care of himself.

I will call attention to just one development in the South. During the last 25 years there has grown up an industry in the South in connection with the production of paper-shell pecans: I know of one of my neighbors who invested $80,000 in the purchase and propagation of a paper-shell pecan grove. At the beginning paper-shell pecans were selling for from 50 to 75 cents and even a dollar a pound, but by the time he got his pecan grove developed and was ready to put his paper-shell pecans on the market the United States was flooded with cheap nuts from South America, from India, and from other portions of the world, and today the domestic pecan grower is not able to get more than 8 or 10 or 12 or 15 cents a pound for the finest paper-shell pecans in the world. Whose fault is it? The fault is with the Congress failing to protect our own people who are engaged in an industry that has great promise. It takes many years to develop a pecan grove, and after it is developed, then all the savings of a lifetime may be swept away because of the failure of the Government in Washington to protect the people from the importation of cheap nuts which are grown in other nations and gathered by cheap labor.

Let me refer to cotton. Some Members of the Senate may know that I have been giving my attention to the question of establishing a great chemical research laboratory in the Cotton Belt for the purpose of discovering other uses for cotton, cottonseed, and its byproducts. I appreciate the fact that it is only a matter of a few months or a few years before the cotton farmer will be faced with bankruptcy. Why? Because of the introduction of substitutes which may be used in the manufacture of clothing and because of the increased production of cotton in foreign countries. It will be but a few months before the only market we will have for cotton grown in the South will be the United States, within our own borders. Domestically we can use about 8,000,000 bales; that is the highest consumption we have had locally so far. If the South is forced to a production of only 8,000,000 bales, then the cotton farmers will be bankrupt, because they must be permitted to raise ten, fifteen, or twenty million bales and sell them at a decent price before they can make any progress, before they can maintain a decent living on the cotton farms of the South.

I picked up a copy of the Cotton Trade Journal yesterday and there I read a statement that 8,000 bales of Soviet cotton are now on the way to the United States to be sold to American manufacturers at a price of 5 or 6 cents a pound.

Just recently our President visited South America. Following his return, he told me that he was disturbed by the observations he had made and what he had learned while he was in South America. The coffee growers of South America are now cutting down their coffee trees and converting their coffee plantations into cotton plantations, because they can produce cotton, under labor and other conditions there, at 5 or 6 cents a pound and make more money than they can make by growing coffee. So they are cutting down the coffee trees in order to cultivate cotton.

Let us not be fooled, Mr. President, and let not the experts deceive us. The increased production of cotton in South America, in India, in Egypt, and in Russia and other parts of the world will soon supply all the markets that we have been supplying with our export cotton, the exportations representing about 50 percent of the crop. That is why I consider, if we want to do something for the farmer, we had just as well force ourselves to collaborate with the chemists. Chemurgy is the only way out. An old Negro connected with Tuskeegee Institute, in Alabama, through the chemical route, found over 300 uses for the lowly peanut.

Under the W. P. A. there was established in the city of Laurel, Miss., a plant to manufacture starch from sweetpotatoes, which is one of the crops that can be grown in great abundance in the South. The first year the enterprise was entered upon, the highest grade of starch, such as is used by mills in the production of the finest type of textiles, was manufactured from sweetpotatoes for 13 cents a pound. Last year 400,000 pounds of starch were manufactured at the little plant in Laurel for 3 cents a pound; and after 400,000 pounds of starch were manufactured from sweetpotatoes for 3 cents a pound one of the scientists in the Bureau of Chemistry and Soils discovered that if there had been utilized what was left of the potatoes 75,000 gallons of alcohol could have been made.

In seeking the establishment of a great chemical laboratory for the South I am not confining its activities to finding other uses for cotton alone but am seeking to find additional uses for every crop that is grown in the South. I have been able to have the project approved by everyone along the line except the Bureau of the Budget, and I hope to get it through the Bureau of the Budget some time this week.

So I say that while the pending measure is essential in order to give the farmer a start, yet we are going to fail in the end if we embark him on an undertaking, equip his farm with mules and teams and implements and everything he needs, unless we create a condition by laws passed by Congress, yes; by the assistance of the Government, yes; that will enable him to sell the crops which it is proposed to help him to produce, so that he may maintain a decent living and pay back to the Government the money we invest in him.

I am very much in favor of the pending bill because I know that the man who owns a home will naturally make a better citizen. If after the Civil War the Negroes of the South, when they were freed, had been given a piece of land to hold as their own, something to which they would have been tied, I say to you, Mr. President, that today there would not be a Harlem in New York, or a "black belt" in Chicago, because the highest and best type of Negroes we have in the South are those who have, through their frugality and labor, become the owners of their own homes. They make a better citizen. Of course, there are many patriotic citizens of this country who are homeless, but I dare say if such citizens owned their homes and had some place they could call home, they would be still better citizens.

I think the ideal place to rear a family is in its own home. The tenant is nomadic in his habits, migratory in his character. He slips from one place to another. There is nothing to tie him. There is nothing to tie him up with the church community or the school community. His children naturally absorb the same indifferent spirit about the things that mean so much in the making of a good citizen. But if he were tied to the soil and owned his home, and at night could gather around the fireside his wife and children and they could sing Home Sweet Home, he would be in an atmosphere which would produce a better type of citizenship.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the committee amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 18, line 23, it is proposed to strike out the words "This act may be cited as 'The Farmers' Home Act'" and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

This act may be cited as "The Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment because I think it is recognized by all of us that the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] really has been a pioneer in the matter of farm-tenancy legislation. The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture of the House, Hon. MARVIN JONES, of Texas, has collaborated with the Senator from Alabama in bringing about the enactment of the legislation. I think it is a fitting tribute to both of them that the act be cited in their names, and for that reason I have offered the amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I am not going to oppose the amendment, but it is a very unusual one. I merely desire to call the attention of Members of the Senate to the fact that it is the first time in the history of legislation that an act has been designated officially in the act itself by the name of the author.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, yesterday the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] criticized the provision of the bill giving the tenancy corporation the authority to determine expenditures and pay claims without approval of other departments. At that time I stated the particular provision is one which is contained in nearly all of the acts creating governmental corporations. I have had prepared a history of this provision and certain other provisions which were criticized yesterday by the Senator from Wyoming, and as a part of my remarks I shall ask to have it printed in the RECORD.

Before submitting the statement, however, I desire to invite the attention of the Senate to the fact that all or practically all of the corporations which have been organized as governmental corporations have been created under acts containing the provision as to payment of claims. Its use began a number of years ago.

In the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act will be found a similar provision. Substantially the same provision is in the Federal home-loan bank law. The same provision is contained in the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation law. Almost the same provision is in the Federal Housing Administration law passed 2 or 3 years ago. Substantially the same provision is contained in a bill recently introduced by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], known as the new housing bill.

The provision became current many years ago. It was contained substantially in the Food Administration Grain Corporation law. The United States Spruce Corporation law contained about the same proposition. The United States Housing Corporation, organized in 1918, was created under an act containing a similar provision. The War Finance Corporation Act contained the same provision. The act creating the Panama Railroad contained it. The act organizing the Inland Waterways Corporation in 1924 contained the same provision. The Federal Intermediate Credit Bank Act contained the same provision.

The Supreme Court of the United States passed upon these acts in a decision and commented particularly upon this provision. Earlier in the day I read a part of a comment of Mr. Justice Brandeis with reference to it. I think now I shall read the entire comment, because it is worthy of consideration by this body with reference to any future bills which may contain a similar provision. Said the Court:

The accounts of the Fleet Corporation, like those of each of the other corporations named, and like those of the Director General of Railroads during Federal control, have been audited, and the control over their financial transactions has been exercised, in accordance with commercial practice, by the board or the officer charged with the responsibilities of administration. Indeed, an important, if not the chief, reason for employing these incorporated agencies was to enable them to employ commercial methods and to conduct their operations with a freedom supposed to be inconsistent with accountability to the Treasury under its established procedure of audit and control over the financial transactions of the United States.

The main reason why I take the time now to discuss the matter is that the same provision was contained in the crop-insurance bill which passed the Senate 2 or 3 months ago. There was a particular reason, however, why such a provision should be incorporated in that bill. The bill provides that the premium for the insurance shall be paid in wheat and that the indemnity shall likewise be paid in wheat. The principal work of the corporation, therefore, is the collection of premiums in wheat and the payment of indemnities in wheat.

Therefore, it would seem entirely inapplicable that the claims for indemnity should go through all the procedure necessary for approving them in the Treasury Department. Many of us have in mind experiences we have had under the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. There was no such provision in that law. Therefore every claim for benefits had to go through the Treasury Department. Every Member of the Senate has probably had experience with long-delayed payments of benefits under that act. Even today I receive letters containing requests for assistance to secure payment of benefits which accrued a year or more ago.

With that experience in dealing with claims to be paid to farmers that have to be approved by the Treasury Department, it seems that this provision is wise. Therefore, the very thing that Mr. Justice Brandeis suggested, to expedite and to audit and control these funds by the immediate department without all the red tape and all the procedure necessary to gain approval by the Treasury Department, is accomplished by the insertion of this provision in the laws to which I have referred.

I am sorry the sponsor of this bill so readily accepted the amendment to strike the provision from the bill because I think in the administration of the provisions of the bill, with all the red tape and procedure which will be necessary to gain the approval of the Treasury Department, we will have experiences similar to those which we had under the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

I wanted to say particularly with reference to the crop-insurance bill which contains a similar provision that there is a peculiar reason why the provision should be retained in that bill. Since it is now pending before the House, I wanted at least the history and the reason for the provision to be in the RECORD in order that, in the consideration of that bill by the House, there would be no confusion existing there as to the customary provisions contained in these acts creating Government corporations and the reasons existing therefor.

Mr. President, I ask that the statement to which I referred may be inserted in the RECORD at this point as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXPLANATION OF PARAGRAPH (H) OF SECTION 6

This paragraph provides that the Farmers' Home Corporation "shall determine the necessity for its expenditures under this act and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, and paid, without regard to the provisions of any other laws governing the expenditure of public funds, and such determinations shall be final and conclusive upon all other officers of the Government."

The criticism which has been directed to this paragraph is based on a failure to appreciate one of the chief reasons for the establishment of Government corporations. There is nothing unusual about this provision. In fact, it is present in one form or another in practically every act passed by the Congress establishing Government corporations.

The reason for a provision of this type is to enable the Farmers' Home Corporation to employ commercial methods and to conduct its operations with a freedom not possible in ordinary transactions of the United States. The following are typical examples of similar provisions in other acts of Congress:

Section 4 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act provides that "the Board of Directors of the Corporation shall determine and prescribe the manner in which its obligations shall be incurred and its expenditures allowed and paid."

Under this provision the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has been able to establish procedures for the incurring of obligations and the payment of expenses in line with banking and commercial practice without being hamstrung by the ordinary procedure governing the expenditure of funds by regular Government departments. There has never been the slightest suggestion that this clause was used to enable the Corporation to commit any illegal or unlawful acts. The provision has merely had the healthy and desirable effect of enabling the Corporation to operate with efficiency and dispatch in accordance with sound commercial business and accounting practices.

Again, section 6 of the act of June 13, 1933, setting forth the powers of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, provides explicitly that the sum of $150,000 shall be made available to the Board "which sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the Board is authorized to use in its discretion for the accomplishment of the purposes of this section, without regard to the provisions of any other law governing the expenditure of public funds."

Similarly, section 6 (k) of the Banking Act of 1933, establishing the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, explicitly provides that the board of directors "shall determine and prescribe the manner in which its obligations shall be incurred and its expenses allowed and paid."

A similar provision is contained in section 1 of the National Housing Act which, while not establishing a corporation, provides that the Administrator of the Federal Housing Administration shall have authority "to make such expenditures as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this title and titles I and II, without regard to any other provisions of law governing the expenditure of public funds."

Here, again, the provision was not included and has not been used to enable the corporation to commit unlawful acts, but merely to enable an administration performing a specialized type of work to determine the necessity for its expenditures and to make such expenditures without regard to the ordinary rules applicable to regular governmental activities. The purpose of the provision is merely to enable the administration to carry on its affairs in a manner in accordance with ordinary commercial accounting methods and not to be bound by the ordinary rules governing governmental expenditures which were not designed for specialized activities of this type.

A similar provision is contained in section 402, subsection (c), paragraph 5, of the National Housing Act, creating the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation. In setting forth the powers of the Corporation, the section in question provides that the Corporation "shall determine its necessary expenditures under this chapter and the manner in which the same shall be incurred, allowed, and paid, without regard to the provisions of any other law governing the expenditure of public funds."

In support of this explanation, I have no lesser authority than the Supreme Court of the United States. In the case of Skinner and Eddy Corporation v. McCarl (275 U. S. 1), decided 10 years ago, an attempt was made to force the Comptroller General by a writ of mandamus to pass upon the claim of the Skinner & Eddy Corporation against the Emergency Fleet Corporation arising out of contracts for the construction of vessels entered into with that Corporation. The Comptroller General refused to pass on the claim on the ground that the audit and control of its financial transactions was, as a matter of general law, committed to its own corporate officers.

The Supreme Court affirmed a decision of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia dismissing the writ of mandamus. The Supreme Court in it opinion reviewed the history of Government-owned corporations, including the Food Administration Grain Corporation, organized in 1917; the United States Spruce Corporation, organized in 1918; the United States Housing Corporation, organized in 1918; the War Finance Corporation, organized the same year; and the Panama Railroad Co., the Inland Waterways Corporation, organized in 1924; and the Federal intermediate credit banks, organized in 1923. Referring to all of these corporations, Justice Brandeis said as follows:

"The accounts of the Fleet Corporation, like those of each of the other corporations named, and like those of the Director General of Railroads during Federal control, have been audited, and the control over their financial transactions has been exercised, in accordance with commercial practice, by the board or the officer charged with the responsibilities of administration. Indeed, an important, if not the chief, reason for employing these incorporated agencies was to enable them to employ commercial methods and to conduct their operations with a freedom supposed to be inconsistent with accountability to the Treasury under its established procedure of audit and control over the financial transactions of the United States."

I invite your attention to the forceful point made by Justice Brandeis, namely, that an important if not the chief reason for employing corporations is to enable them to employ commercial methods and conduct business operations with a freedom which cannot be obtained under routine governmental procedures and regulations.

It should be noted that the provision in 6 (h) is like the provisions in all the other acts establishing corporations which, in accordance with the law and the policy considerations pointed out by Justice Brandeis, authorize the corporation to determine its expenditures and the method in which they shall be made "without regard to the provisions of any other law governing the expenditure of public funds."

The only difference between the provisions in these other acts and the provision in 6 (h) is the addition of the words "and such determination shall be final and conclusive upon all other officers of the Government." This provision was not included with any unlawful design but merely to make clear that the responsibility for making current expenditures is placed upon the Corporation, and that Treasury disbursing officers would be under no liability in the event funds were disbursed on Corporation vouchers which, on subsequent audit, were found to be incorrect.

A similar provision, as I pointed out yesterday, is included in the crop-insurance bill, again for the purpose of placing responsibility for the correctness of vouchers on the Corporation and relieving Treasury disbursing officers from the responsibility of reviewing such vouchers.

In this connection I might also call attention to a very similar provision which is included in the bill to establish a United States Housing Authority, introduced by the Senator from New York as S. 1685. Section 6 (a) of that bill reads as follows:

"* * * The Authority shall determine and prescribe the manner in which its obligations and expenses shall be incurred, allowed, and paid, and the manner in which accounts shall be audited. Vouchers approved by the Authority for expenditures of its funds shall be final and conclusive upon all officers of the Government, except that all financial transactions of the Authority shall be examined by the General Accounting Office at such times and in such manner as the Comptroller General of the United States may by regulation prescribe. Such examination shall be for the sole purpose of making a report to the Congress and to the Authority of expenditures in violation of law, together with such recommendations thereon as the Comptroller General deems advisable."

This provision in the proposed housing bill is virtually identical to that included in the present bill, there being the same provision for audit by the General Accounting Office for the purpose of making a report to Congress.

EXPLANATION OF SECTION 6 (F)

This section, which was criticized by the Senator from Wyoming, provides that the corporation—

"(f) Shall be entitled to the free use of the United States mails in the same manner as other executive agencies of the Government."

I need only say in justification of this provision that it is universally provided for in every corporation of a similar character established by the Congress. Thus section 6 (k) of the Banking Act of 1933 provides that the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation "shall be entitled to the free use of the United States mails in the same manner as the executive departments of the Government."

Section 4 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act provides as follows:

"The Corporation shall be entitled to the free use of the United States mails in the same manner as the executive departments of the Government."

Section 19 of the Federal Home Loan Board Act authorizes that—

"The Board shall be entitled to the free use of the United States mails for its official business in the same manner as the executive departments of the Government."

Paragraph (5) of subsection 3 of section 402 of the National Housing Administration Act authorizes the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation "shall be entitled to the free use of the United States mails for its official business in the same manner as the executive departments of the Government."

There would seem to be no justification whatsoever for criticizing the inclusion of a similar provision in the present act, unless these other Government corporations are also denied the free use of the United States mails in the same manner as the executive departments of the Government.

EXPLANATION OF SECTION 8 (C), PAGES 23 AND 24

Some criticism was made by the Senator from Wyoming of the proviso appearing on lines 5 and 11 on page 24 of S. 106. This proviso is to the effect that before transmitting its report to the Congress the General Accounting Office shall give the Corporation "reasonable opportunity to examine the exceptions and criticisms of the Comptroller General or the General Accounting Office, to point out errors therein, explain or answer the same, and to file a statement which shall be submitted by the Comptroller General with his report."

It would seem that this proviso, instead of being objectionable, is highly desirable in order to give the Congress whatever explanations the Corporation may have to specific exceptions or criticisms made by the General Accounting Office. This procedure would seem to involve a saving of time to the Congress and to furnish a method by which a full report with respect to any questionable item can be received at the same time both from the General Accounting Office and the Corporation.

The provision in question is almost identical with the provision in section 9 (b) of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933. The corresponding section of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act reads as follows:

"The Comptroller General of the United States shall audit the transactions of the Corporation at such times as he shall determine, but not less frequently than once each governmental fiscal year, with personnel of his selection. In such connection he and his representatives shall have free and open access to all papers, books, records, files, accounts, plants, warehouses, offices, and all other things, property, and places belonging to or under the control of or used or employed by the Corporation, and shall be afforded full facilities for counting all cash and verifying transactions with and balances in depositaries. He shall make report of each such audit in quadruplicate, one copy for the President of the United States, one for the chairman of the Board, one for public inspection at the principal office of the Corporation, and the other to be retained by him for the uses of the Congress: Provided, That such report shall not be made until the Corporation shall have had reasonable opportunity to examine the exceptions and criticisms of the Comptroller General or the General Accounting Office, to point out errors therein, explain or answer the same, and to file a statement which shall be submitted by the Comptroller General with his report * * *."

It might be added that the provisions in section 8 (c) providing for audit by the Comptroller General goes further than any of the statutes with respect to other Government Corporations. For example, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act contains no provision whatever for audit by the General Accounting Office.

EXPLANATION OF SECTION 6 (I)

This section which was criticized by the Senator from Colorado reads as follows:

"The Corporation * * *

"(i) shall have such powers as may be necessary or appropriate for the exercise of the powers herein specifically conferred upon the Corporation and all such incident powers as are customary in corporations generally."

This provision is very similar to provisions of the same import in other statutes. The following are a few examples:

Section 6 (j) of the Banking Act of 1933, establishing the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, includes in the enumeration of powers granted to the Corporation the following:

"Seventh. To exercise by its board of directors, or duly authorized officers or agents, all powers specifically granted by the provisions of this section and such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry out the powers so granted."

Section 4 (g) of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933 provides that the Tennessee Valley Authority "shall have such powers as are necessary or appropriate for the exercise of the powers herein specifically conferred upon the Corporation."

Likewise, section 2 of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation Act of 1934 gives the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation power to exercise "such other powers as may be necessary and incident to carrying out its powers and duties under this subchapter."

The provision in section 6 (i) is practically identical with the provisions in the statutes to which I have just referred. If there is any possible doubt as to the meaning of the section, the last six words reading, "as are customary in corporations generally", could be made entirely clear by using the wording in section 6 (j) of the Banking Act of 1933, which reads "as shall be necessary to carry out the powers so granted."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendment to be proposed to the amendment reported by the committee, the question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7562. That is the House bill on the same subject as the bill we have been considering. I desire to have it substituted for the Senate bill, so that the matter may go directly to conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7562) to encourage and promote the ownership of farm homes and to make the possession of such homes more secure, to provide for the general welfare of the United States, to provide additional credit facilities for agricultural development, and for other purposes, which was read twice by its title.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the House bill be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the text of the Senate committee amendment to Senate bill 106, as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendment to be proposed to the House bill, the question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Upon motion of Mr. BANKHEAD, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill to create the Farmers' Home Corporation, to promote more secure occupancy of farms and farm homes, to correct the economic instability resulting from some present forms of farm tenancy, and for other purposes."

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. POPE, and Mr. FRAZIER conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I now ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 106 be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT OF BOTTLING IN BOND ACT

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 6737, a bill on the calendar which will not precipitate any discussion. It is for the purpose of modernizing the methods of printing and distributing the strip stamps on bonded liquor bottles. The passage of the bill is recommended by the Treasury Department. It will bring in a little more revenue. It is my understanding that the distillers have approved it. There is no objection to the bill from any source of which I know, and I hope the Senate will pass the bill promptly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi for the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6737) to amend the stamp provisions of the Bottling in Bond Act, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first and fourth paragraphs of section 1 of the act entitled "An act to allow the bottling of distilled spirits in bond", approved March 3, 1897, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. II, title 26, sec. 1276), are designated "(1)" and "(6)", respectively, and the second and third paragraphs of said section are amended to read as follows:

"(2) Every bottle when filled shall have affixed thereto and passing over the mouth of the same a stamp denoting the quantity of distilled spirits contained therein and evidencing the bottling in bond of such spirits under the provisions of this act, and of regulations prescribed hereunder.

"(3) The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe (a) regulations with respect to the time and manner of applying for, issuing, affixing, and destroying stamps required by this section, the form and denominations of such stamps, applications for purchase of the stamps, proof that applicants are entitled to such stamps, and the method of accounting for receipts from the sale of such stamps, and (b) such other regulations as the Commissioner shall deem necessary for the enforcement of this act.

"(4) Such stamps shall be issued by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to each collector of internal revenue, upon his requisition in such numbers as may be necessary in his district, and, upon compliance with the provisions of this act and regulations issued hereunder shall be sold by collectors to persons entitled thereto, at a price of 1 cent for each stamp, except that in the case of stamps for containers of less than one-half pint, the price shall be one-quarter of 1 cent for each stamp.

"(5) And there shall be plainly burned, embossed, or printed on the side of each case, to be known as the Government side, such marks, brands, and stamps to denote the bottling in bond of the whisky packed therein as the Commissioner may by regulations prescribe."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Mississippi to explain the bill? Is the liquor industry asking for increased taxes?

Mr. HARRISON. The Bottling in Bond Act of 1897 provided for placing green strip stamps on bonded liquor bottles. Those stamps had to be printed in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and it was necessary that much identifying data be overprinted on such stamps. The procedure has proved to be most cumbersome. It was necessary to perform a separate printing job to overprint these stamps in each instance. In the Liquor Taxing Act of 1934 we provided for placing red stamps on bottles containing unbonded liquor, and provided also that commercial interests might, under departmental regulations, handle the overprinting of identifying data. The Treasury Department has recommended that practically the same procedure be followed in the case of the green stamps as in the case of the red stamps, and they claim that we will get a little more revenue from it and that it will materially expedite the production and distribution of these stamps. The interests that are concerned do not object to the bill, but have approved it. The bill has passed the House unanimously and is unanimously reported by the Finance Committee.

Mr. BORAH. The bill will not interfere with the flow of liquor?

Mr. HARRISON. I presume not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL CREDIT UNION ACT

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 6287, Calendar No. 855.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6287) to amend Public Act No. 467, Seventy-third Congress, entitled "Federal Credit Union Act", which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Federal Credit Union Act is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 21. Upon application by any credit union organized under State law or by any Federal credit union organized in accordance with the terms of this act, the membership of which is composed exclusively of Federal employees and members of their families, which application shall be addressed to the officer or agency of the United States charged with the allotment of space in the Federal buildings in the community or district in which said credit union or Federal credit union does business, such officer or agency may in his or its discretion allot space to such credit union if space is available without charge for rent or services."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator explain the bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. The bill permits credit unions composed exclusively of Government employees to have desk room in any public building in which space is available. Such credit unions have been occupying desk room in public buildings in many parts of the country; but recently the Comptroller General rendered a decision holding that there was no authority to allow Federal credit unions, even though they are exclusively composed of Federal employees, to have desk room in any post office or other public building. This bill simply authorizes the custodians of public buildings throughout the country, and especially post-office buildings, to allow Federal credit unions made up exclusively of Federal employees to have space, if it is available, in public buildings.

Mr. McNARY. What is the emergency in connection with its passage?

Mr. BARKLEY. The emergency is really over, for the bill should have been passed before the 1st day of July, but we did not have a chance to present it. The Post Office Department, the Farm Credit Administration, and all the Federal agencies have recommended the passage of the bill. It will not interfere in any way with the performance of the duties of other branches of the Government, but it will permit the use of desks in offices in Government buildings where members of credit unions may pay their assessments and their dues and transact their business.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is being done now, is it?

Mr. BARKLEY. It was done, and is being done; but the Comptroller General held that it was done without authority. The bill has passed the House, and is unanimously recommended by the Senate committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting several nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nomination of Chester A. Brown to be postmaster at Idaho Springs, Colo., in place of E. L. Regenmitter, resigned.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nomination of Brig. Gen. Charles Blaine Smathers, Pennsylvania National Guard, to be brigadier general, National Guard of the United States.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers for appointment, by transfer, in the Regular Army.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nominations of sundry second lieutenants, Officers' Reserve Corps, for appointment in the Regular Army under the provisions of law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

ARMY NOMINATIONS

Mr. SHEPPARD. On behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs, I have just reported some routine nominations. I ask unanimous consent for their present consideration, and that the President be notified of their confirmation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas? The Chair hears none. The nominations are confirmed, and the President will be notified.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE—HUGH R. WILSON

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Hugh R. Wilson, of Illinois, to be an Assistant Secretary of State.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, as to this designation, I have expressed myself adversely, and have given the reasons. Subsequently it has been brought to my attention that this gentleman has long been in service, has been a very faithful officer, is a man of splendid executive ability, and the Department recommends that he should continue his career as a necessity to the Diplomatic Service.

In view of that representation I desire to withdraw whatever reasons I might have had or expressed for opposition, in no wise to press them, and permit this gentleman to secure the reward which the State Department says he has deserved by reason of his public service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Miss Margaret M. Hanna, of Kansas, to be a Foreign Service officer of class 5, a consul, and a secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

That completes the Executive Calendar.

ADJOURNMENT TO TUESDAY

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. BARKLEY. In accordance with the unanimous-consent agreement previously entered into, I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon on Tuesday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 31 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously entered, adjourned until Tuesday, July 6, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate July 2 (legislative day of June 15), 1937

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE

George S. Messersmith, of Delaware, to be an Assistant Secretary of State.

ENVOY EXTRAORDINARY AND MINISTER PLENIPOTENTIARY

Wilbur J. Carr, of New York, now an Assistant Secretary of State, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Czechoslovakia, vice J. Butler Wright.

APPOINTMENTS, BY TRANSFER, IN THE REGULAR ARMY

TO QUARTERMASTER CORPS

Capt. Robert Jones Moulton, Coast Artillery Corps, with rank from June 30, 1936.

TO INFANTRY

First Lt. James Leo Dalton 2d, Cavalry, with rank from June 13, 1936, effective October 1, 1937.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate July 2 (legislative day of June 15), 1937

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE

Hugh R. Wilson to be an Assistant Secretary of State.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

Miss Margaret M. Hanna to be a Foreign Service officer of class 5, a consul, and a secretary in the Diplomatic Service of the United States of America.

APPOINTMENTS, BY TRANSFER, IN THE REGULAR ARMY

Maj. Leonard Henderson Sims to Finance Department.
First Lt. Maddrey Allen Solomon to Field Artillery.

PROMOTIONS IN THE REGULAR ARMY

MEDICAL CORPS

To be lieutenant colonels

William John Miehe
Claude Wiggins Cummings
Robert Henry Lowry, Jr.
Richard King Cole
William White Southard

To be majors

Douglas Sheldon Kellogg
Loren Donovan Moore
Arthur Brinkley Welsh
Eugene Wycoff Billick
Earle Standlee
Cecil Walker Dingman
William Kraus
Reuel Edward Hewitt
Martin Eugene Griffin
Mack Macon Green
William Edward Shambora
Charles Henderson Beasley
Clifford Albert Best
Alvin Levi Gorby
George Ellis Armstrong

To be captains

Donald Meyers Ward
Angvald Vickoren
William Earl Barry
Emmert Carl Lentz
James Leslie Snyder
Raymond Richard Johanson
Thair Cozzens Rich
Frank Hugh Lane
Byron Glen McKibben
John DeWitt Morley
Frederic Ebelhare Cressman
Robert Tuthill Gants
Edward Beebe Payne
George Foster Peer
Harold Everus Harrison
Marshall Nelson Jensen
Stephen Christopher Sitter

DENTAL CORPS

Mackey Joseph Real to be major.

VETERINARY CORPS

To be captains

William Edwin Jennings
Curtis William Betzold

CHAPLAIN

John Simeon Kelly, United States Army, to be chaplain with the rank of captain.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE REGULAR ARMY

TO BE SECOND LIEUTENANTS

Carroll Thompson Newton, Corps of Engineers.
Donald Clinton Clayman, Infantry.
Joseph Warren Sisson, Jr., Infantry.
David Greene Hammond, Corps of Engineers.
Joseph Russel Groves, Infantry.
Robert Whitsett van de Velde, Field Artillery.
Arthur George Christensen, Infantry.
Harry Gantcliffe Benion, Infantry.
Arthur Howland Baker, Jr., Field Artillery.
Arthur Charles Harris, Jr., Infantry.
Linwood Eugene Funchess, Corps of Engineers.
Laurence Clifford Brown, Infantry.
Jesse Mechem, Infantry.
Walter Ward Davis, Infantry.
William Andrew Enemark, Field Artillery.
Merten Kenneth Heimstead, Infantry.
Thaddeus Ronsaville Dulin, Infantry.
Leon John de Penna Rouge, Infantry.
Gaylord Walton Fraser, Infantry.
William Sherbourne McCrea, Infantry.
Donald Frederick Thompson, Infantry.
John Gordon Nelson, Coast Artillery Corps.
Chester Martin Beaver, Infantry.
Edward Wallace McLain, Coast Artillery Corps.
John Unsworth Allen, Corps of Engineers.
Byron William Ladd, Infantry.
Lyman Hodges Ripley, Coast Artillery Corps.
Francis Carlton Truesdale, Infantry.
William Shepherd Humphries, Infantry.
Donald Washington, Infantry.
Charles Robert Etzler, Infantry.
Philip Cochran Tinley, Infantry.
Charles Murray Henley, Infantry.
John Brockway Rippere, Corps of Engineers.
Steve Archie Chappuis, Infantry.
Elmer Bolton Kennedy, Field Artillery.
James Jackson Stewart, Jr., Infantry.
Thomas Brownbridge Simpson, Corps of Engineers.
Paul Thomas Boleyn, Infantry.
Fredrick William Nagle, Infantry.
Otho Anthony Moomaw, Coast Artillery Corps.
Jabus Willie Rawls, Jr., Coast Artillery Corps.
Andrew Buehler Zwaska, Infantry.
Jack Leslie Coan, Corps of Engineers.
Edward Francis Kent, Infantry.
George William Croker, Coast Artillery Corps.
Willard Wright Lazarus, Air Corps.
William Hart Hanson, Infantry.
John Willis Paddock, Infantry.
Joe Stallings Lawrie, Infantry.

APPOINTMENT IN THE NATIONAL GUARD

GENERAL OFFICER

Charles Blaine Smathers to be brigadier general, National Guard of the United States.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JULY 2, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Father, we praise Thee that we are involved in a moral order which Thou hast ordained. We thank Thee that Thy changeless goodness pours itself upon us day by day. Gracious Lord, we rejoice in the ultimate triumph of civilization in that spirit which moved our forefathers to lift the veil of this western world. Their heroic, sacrificial devotion startled mankind no less than the principles they proclaimed. We pour at Thy altar a prayer of thanksgiving for the government they gave us—so lofty in its purpose, so wise in its construction that it guarantees to every citizen life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. We thank Thee for the immortal document, the Declaration of Independence, broad in its denunciation of injustice and just in its declaration of the right. O Prince of Peace, on Thee we base our hopes and longings for all that makes life dear. Increase our religious fervor and inspire us with holy patriotism that the genius of our Republic may be fulfilled. In Thy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 434. Joint resolution to amend the act entitled "An act to amend section 4471 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a resolution adopted by the Chicago Federation of Labor having reference to a bill I have introduced.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to call the attention of the House to a signal honor which was recently conferred upon my colleague the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL]. I refer to the action of the board of regents of the University of Michigan, on June 19, making Mr. ENGEL an honorary alumnus of the university.

In conferring the honor, the citation issued was as follows:

ALBERT JOSEPH ENGEL, Member of the United States Congress, from the Ninth Michigan District, has evidenced in many ways his interest in education and his loyalty to the university of the State in which he has made his home. A graduate of the law school of Northwestern University, he was admitted to the bar in 1910 and has since practiced at his home at Lake City. As a senator from his district, during four different sessions of Michigan's State Legislature, he proved himself a true and sympathetic advocate of the best interests of higher education. During the World War he served for 2 years in the American Expeditionary Force, retiring in 1919 with the rank of captain. As a Member of the House of Representatives, he has become well known in Washington for his interest in legislation affecting the training of youth. It is an honor and a pleasure to present to you, ALBERT JOSEPH ENGEL, as an honorary alumnus of the university, upon the unanimous action of the university committee on alumni relations, confirmed by the board of regents.

It is my privilege and honor to represent in this body the Second Congressional District of Michigan, in which is located the great University of Michigan. This university is very careful about bestowing honors of this kind, and I am informed that there are only nine persons now living to whom such an honor has been given.

I am sure that all Members of Congress will be pleased to join with me in congratulating Mr. ENGEL upon this distinction. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial which appeared in certain New Jersey newspapers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

BONNEVILLE DAM PROJECT

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, on which I hold membership, has reported out favorably the bill (H. R. 7642) to authorize the completion, maintenance, and operation of the Bonneville project for navigation, and other purposes, and follows closely the language and provisions of my bill, H. R. 4948, introduced February 19, 1937. Passage of the bill H. R. 7642 is recommended with one amendment, on page 11, in lines 7 to 11, inclusive, to strike out "The Federal Power Commission in fixing rates for power on amortization costs on all major Federal power projects shall establish a rate of interest which shall be uniform throughout the United States", which is a new provision which was not contained in my bill, H. R. 4948, nor in any of the other bills which were introduced. It is the opinion of a majority of the committee that such a provision, pertaining to and affecting all Federal power projects, should properly be considered in connection with the zone legislation to provide regional administration of all such projects as recently recommended by the President in his message to the Congress and after the cost of generating electric power and the cost of financing in various parts of the country have been thoroughly studied and probed as a basis for correctly determining the question of uniformity of interest rates and other related subjects.

GENERAL PURPOSES OF THE BILL

The bill provides that the Bonneville project, now in the course of construction and nearly completed on the Columbia River at Bonneville in the State of Oregon and North Bonneville in the State of Washington, shall be completed, maintained, and operated under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, subject to certain powers therein conferred upon the Columbia River administrator respecting the transmission and distribution of surplus electric energy generated at said project. Power will be ready for transmission late this year or early in the next and consequently the matter requires prompt consideration.

This bill also confers jurisdiction upon the Federal Power Commission to approve and revise rates to be charged for the sale of the surplus electric energy.

The bill represents the synthesis of recommendations made by various Members of the Congress from the Northwest and of the committee after extensive study of this subject. The Bonneville administration is intended to be provisional pending establishment of a permanent administration for Bonneville and other projects in the Columbia River Basin.

The bill, with the exception of section 6, deals exclusively with the maintenance and operation of the Bonneville project and provides that surplus electric energy generated at said project may be sold under contracts to States, political subdivisions thereof, or to individuals or privately owned corporations, but preference is given to States and public bodies. In order fully to preserve and protect the preferential rights established by the bill, 50 percent of the firm electric energy generated at Bonneville shall be reserved until January 1, 1941, for public bodies, and thereafter conflicting applications between any public agency on the one hand and any private agency on the other shall be resolved in favor of the public agency. Contracts for the sale of surplus energy shall be for terms not exceeding 20 years, including renewals.

Section 6 provides machinery for making certain readjustments in the Boulder Canyon Project Act occasioned by the standards set up in this act.

SECTIONAL ANALYSIS OF THE BILL

Section 1 carries the reference to the Bonneville project, which is to be completed for the purpose of improving navigation on the Columbia River and leaves the operation in the control of the Secretary of War.

Section 2 states that the administrator shall dispose of surplus energy. The administrator is to be appointed by and be responsible to the Secretary of the Interior. He shall act in consultation with an advisory board composed of a representative designated by the Secretary of War, another by the Secretary of the Interior, and a third by the Federal Power Commission. The administrator is authorized to transmit electric energy so as to encourage the widest possible use and to prevent monopolization by limited groups or localities. He is authorized in the name of the United States to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, real and personal property, including lands, franchises, transmission lines, substations, and patent rights. The administrator is authorized to sell or dispose of property, except that in the case of real property or transmission lines he must secure the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. He is authorized to enter into such contracts as are necessary to carry out the purposes of the act.

Section 3 defines the terms "public bodies" and "cooperatives" as used in the act and establishes a preference in the disposal of electric energy for public bodies and cooperatives. To preserve these preferential rights, not less than 50 percent of the electric energy at Bonneville shall be reserved for sale to public bodies until January 1, 1941. Public bodies and cooperatives are to be given every opportunity to perfect their legal organization and vote bonds and market them.

The policy of Congress is declared in section 3 to be the preservation of the preferential status of the public bodies and cooperatives and to give the residents of States within economic transmission distance of the Bonneville project reasonable opportunity to take any action necessary to become fully qualified purchasers and distributors of electric energy available under the act. Further, the Administrator, insofar as practicable, shall cooperate with States and public bodies and cooperatives within economic transmission distance of the Bonneville project to enable them to avail themselves of the preferential rights and priorities afforded by the act.

Section 4 authorizes the administrator to negotiate contracts for the sale at wholesale of electric energy for resale or direct consumption, provided that private persons or agencies other than privately owned public utilities are forbidden to resell electric energy to a private utility; contracts shall be for not more than 20 years, with provisions for equitable adjustment of rates not less frequently than once in 5 years, and in the case of a private utility contracts shall be cancelable upon 5 years' notice in writing if there is reasonable likelihood that any part of the electric energy sold under the contract will be needed for a public body. Contracts shall also contain stipulations concerning resale and resale rates to insure that the ultimate consumer shall pay rates which are reasonable and nondiscriminatory.

Section 5 prescribes that the administrator shall fix rates for surplus electric energy subject to the approval of the Federal Power Commission. If any rate schedule so submitted is not approved, then the Federal Power Commission may revise such schedules in conformity with standards prescribed by the act, and as so revised such schedule shall become effective. Rate schedules shall be fixed with a view to encouraging the widest possible use of electric energy, having regard, however, to the recovery of the costs of producing and transmitting electricity, including amortization of the capital investment, including interest over a reasonable period of years in order to distribute the benefits of an integrated transmission system and to encourage the equitable distribution of electric energy. The rate schedules may provide for uniform rates or rates uniform throughout prescribed transmission areas.

This is an important proviso because it contemplates and permits the establishing of certain rates within certain prescribed areas at and adjacent to the switchboard and also within prescribed transmission areas.

Section 6 authorizes the President to direct the holding of public hearings by an agency designated by him, to report to him by December 31, 1937, respecting any unreasonable discrimination against the Boulder Canyon project with respect to charges against power for construction costs, amortization, and interest. Subject to the approval of the President, the Secretary of the Interior shall make such changes as are recommended by the investigating agency notwithstanding the provisions of any other statute. Authorization is also given for lump-sum payments to the States of Nevada and Arizona in lieu of payments now provided for by the Boulder Canyon Project Act. The Government is protected as to the payments to these two States because it fixes rates, and any deficiency in revenue to meet the payments may be covered in effect by surcharges upon rates otherwise appropriate. The seven States of the Colorado River Basin are interested in a "separate fund" which comes into existence only after the Government has been repaid in full. Prior to this time residual revenues, if any, after payments to the States of Arizona and Nevada, do not, under the Boulder Canyon Project Act or under this section, go into such fund, but are applied to accelerate amortization of the investment. Any rights any States may have are very specifically protected by paragraph (c).

Section 7 provides a method for purchase of supplies and services.

Section 8 directs the Administrator to keep certain accounts; authorizes certain expenditures and directs him to make an annual report to Congress through the Secretary of the Interior.

Section 9 authorizes employment of attorneys, engineers, and other experts and imposes civil service on the general staff.

Section 10 provides that all receipts from the Bonneville project shall be covered into the Treasury and sets up a continuing fund of $500,000, subject to check by the administrator to defray emergency expenses and to insure continuous operation. It also authorizes appropriation out of moneys not otherwise allotted such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of the act.

Section 11 authorizes the administrator to bring suits either at law or in equity and to be represented in all litigation by such counsel as he may select.

Section 12 is a separability clause.

Mr. Speaker, it is hoped that a rule can be secured in the very near future to bring this Bonneville legislation before the House for consideration, in order that the proper and necessary administrative facilities may be provided and ready to function as soon as the power is available for transmission the latter part of this year.

DEDICATION OF CHAPELS AND OTHER WORLD WAR MEMORIALS IN EUROPE

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of section 1, of Public Resolution 45, Seventy-fifth Congress, the Chair appoints as members of the delegation to attend the dedication of the chapels and other World War memorials erected in Europe the following Members of the House of Representatives: Mr. HILL of Alabama, Mr. LAMBETH, and Mr. EATON.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD in connection with the bill H. R. 7562, which has to do with farm tenancy.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under a special order of the House heretofore made, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] is recognized for 30 minutes.

FILM AT LA FOLLETTE CIVIL LIBERTIES COMMITTEE SHOWS MURDERS OF PICKETS IN CHICAGO

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I was a little late getting here, and the reason is because I just viewed a film over in the Senate caucus room, before the La Follette Civil Liberties Committee, showing the killing of pickets near the steel plant over in Chicago. This was one of the most uncommonly brutal things I have ever seen in my life.

It showed an attack made entirely by the police.

And not a single policeman was hurt in this attack.

Ten of these workingmen were murdered by the police at that time.

After these men were on the ground and the crowd dispersed, the picture showed a policeman walk over and coolly beat a prone man over his head and several of them seen to have been killed after the crowd had been dispersed, and the people were lying on the ground. This was in sound, and the facts are such that no one in the United States of America can in any way doubt the cold-blooded murder of 10 men.

It will always be known as the shame of Chicago. It will always be known as the shame of America, and one of the most shameful occurrences in the history of any civilized country.

Yes, in America today there is violence and talk of violence; one Congressman is so excited he speaks of civil war, and the old cry of communism is ripping through the air again.

TWO GIGANTIC FORCES OPPOSE EACH OTHER

Unquestionably two gigantic forces are at war with each other.

One, the great industrialists and those big-business men who refuse to recognize organized labor or collective bargaining.

The other force includes the American people who want economic justice, who want collective bargaining, and who, by the way, are now successfully organizing in great labor unions.

We Democrats were elected by that latter group—the farmer, the worker, the average American, the ordinary businessman, and I propose that we keep our promises.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT AT MADISON SQUARE GARDEN

Can we forget the Madison Square Garden speech of the President? That is still a burning political document, and it was in his heart then, and it is in his heart now. He called the roll that night, and I hope the roll is called again, so everyone can know on which side we stand in reference to democracy and the accomplishment of our ends.

You remember he said:

> Never before in all our history have these forces been so united against one candidate as they stand today. They are unanimous in their hate for me—and I welcome their hatred.

And now today the forces of reaction and privilege are at it again. We need not forget either the Democratic platform, in which we promised a square deal to the farmer and the laborer, the tenant, the youth; also we promised the preservation of civil liberties.

CONTROVERSY OF SECRETARY OF LABOR; GOVERNOR DAVEY

Now, Mr. Speaker, on June 28 Mr. Cox, the gentleman from Georgia, made a speech denouncing the Secretary of Labor in connection with the C. I. O. It was a bitter attack, quite unfair, and I believe that it was wholly unwarranted, and without any basis whatsoever, with the possible exception of a bare statement by Governor Davey, of Ohio, that the Secretary of Labor said she wanted Tom Girdler kidnaped. The charge by Governor Davey sounds like the story of an excited and imaginative child.

But the gentleman from Georgia said as follows:

> While we did not need this statement to know that the Secretary approves of the use of violence under some circumstances, we were not prepared to expect the advocacy of duress and extortion from one standing so high in the service of the Government.

And in addition to this, the gentleman from Georgia said something about being led into the very heart of communism. He wound up his speech by saying:

> This is no time for the suspension of public laws.

I agree that this is no time for the suspension of laws. But the truth is the Secretary of Labor suggested the use of the public law of Ohio; Governor Davey refused and let the steel companies have their way.

LAW OF OHIO PROVIDES MACHINERY OF PEACEFUL SETTLEMENT

The law of Ohio provides for the calling together of the participants in a strike or industrial dispute if the Governor cares to do so. The purposes are legal, constitutional, and proper; they provide the peaceful machinery of settling strikes.

The Secretary of Labor requested this in connection with the attitude of the steel mediation board, which reported as follows:

> We cannot but believe that the bitterness and suspicion which separate the two sides would be allayed by a man-to-man discussion around the conference table, and that the only hope of settlement lies in such a meeting.

Mr. Speaker, it was the steel company, not the union, that refused a meeting; and there is no reasonable evidence whatever that the Secretary of Labor suggested anything even of an unwise nature; everything points to the fact that what she tried to do was quite sensible.

Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman believes what he said is true, he should bring impeachment charges on this floor.

NEWSPAPERS SHOW BETTER NEWS TODAY

Mr. Speaker, it looks pretty dark, but I want to call attention to the press today. I did not even know it, but Labor, the railroad magazine, which is very conservative, stated, "Rail strikers are standing firm." The C. I. O. has appeared to have the spotlight, but it seems even the railroad men are having their troubles and standing firm.

In the Philadelphia Record, which is a consistently liberal newspaper, are words of advice to labor, and labor is somewhat criticized, which shows that they are being unbiased about it, because they are friendly to labor.

The New York Times states that in the report the companies are criticized, not the strikers and not the C. I. O. That also is a conservative newspaper.

Then we see in the Washington Herald, "Thousands return to Inland under truce. Youngstown mills plan to reopen."

In the Washington Post appear these words, "Steel firms bar peace by C. I. O. stand, say arbiters."

Then, the Herald Tribune, of New York, states that Governor Townsend, of Indiana, is nearing a strike truce for Youngstown's Indiana mill.

The Sun, of Baltimore, shows that the police fired on the strikers in Chicago, and on the editorial page appears a criticism of police brutality. Then it is stated that a policeman defined a Communist as a man who "is here to undermine the Government and to assault policemen." This was the excuse for murdering those people.

CIVIL WAR, AND THE FLOWER OF SOUTHERN MANHOOD

Concerning the general situation and Mr. Cox, the gentleman from Georgia, on Wednesday, June 30, he made another speech about the C. I. O. It was hysterical; to me it seemed highly provocative and one calculated to bring bloodshed and disorder. He started talking about civil war and ended talking about civil war. On behalf of the South he spoke of havoc, bloodshed, and loss of lives—then he warned the Committee for Industrial Organization that they will be met by the flower of southern manhood and they will reap the bitter fruits of their own folly. He did not say specifically, but it means nothing else to me, that he warns this organization, should it come into the South, that their mere coming in will mean that their constitutional rights of organization and collective bargaining will be denied, and that, as he says several times, there will be bloodshed and civil war. It is not exactly an engraved invitation to revolution and civil war, but in uttering such words, in advocating things of that kind, irreparable damage is done to the South and to the Nation.

Also Negroes are brought into the argument. I will not argue on such an emotional subject; but when the bloody shirt is waved, not by a northerner but by a southerner, when to that is added a cry about carpetbagging expeditions, it sounds more hysterical than ever. Mr. Speaker, we cannot solve our problems in the South by shouting about carpetbaggers or suggesting civil war to meet labor organizers with the flower of southern manhood.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY THOUSAND SOUTHERN WORKERS ALREADY ORGANIZED IN TEXTILES

And it might interest the gentleman and the country to know that 150,000, principally young women, have been organized in the textile industry in Georgia and other Southern States. The organizers were southern men, whether the flower of southern manhood or not I do not know.

To say the least, none of the flowers who are now in Congress—North, South, East, or West—will shed any blood in any conflict. As for the South, it is a part of the United States, and its people are ready and willing to assume the burdens of any other States. What the flower of southern manhood needs is jobs, and not civil wars, or shooting scrapes indulged in as or by vigilantes. [Applause.]

WE NEED COOL HEADS, SETTLEMENT, AND MEDIATION

This, my friends, is not just an attack on Mr. Cox. It concerns our great problems today, and now I call for cool heads, I plead for peace, and I ask that there be adjustment, settlement, conciliation, mediation.

Oh, I laugh sometime at the language used by some of our conservatives. Sometimes I am called a left-winger, sometimes a liberal, sometimes worse; but who is calling for blood and violence? Why, gentlemen, they are those who prate about the preservation of the Constitution, those who carry their patriotism on their sleeves, the ones who call themselves conservatives and wrap themselves in the flag.

Has any one of these so-called conservative gentlemen cried out about the 10 men murdered on Memorial Day in Chicago by the police? No; not one. That was one of the bloodiest and most shameful pages in American history, as I said in the beginning of my speech. Ten men murdered, shot down, and of the 10, 7 shot in the back. But no leading conservative denounced it; none of those proclaiming their own patriotism had a word to say; it was similar to England when they began shooting down our American forefathers. The Boston massacre was nothing by the side of it. And that massacre caused the American Revolution.

TORIES OF ENGLAND, NOT AMERICANS, CAUSED REVOLUTION

While we are discussing this, let us be fairly mindful of history. Who caused the American Revolution? Why, the conservatives, gentlemen, the good, self-satisfied, well-fed, smug conservatives of England—men who were too stupid to see that they were forcing the Revolution on the American people. They would not even listen to pleas for conciliation. American radicals did not cause the Revolution; remember that.

What about the last Civil War—I say "last", for the gentleman seems to want to call out the flower of manhood of the South for another—who caused that one? Was it the Negro slaves? No! It was the conservative elements, the people who owned property and slaves, both North and South. And what led to the war, what made it inevitable, was that reactionaries washed their hands of any settlement, refused to go through with any settlement or adjustment, and let the Supreme Court run over the people of the United States.

Today, my friends, it is the same old thing: thoughtless people are yelling their heads off and, for exercise, praising the Supreme Court and denouncing Communists, refusing peaceful settlement, and in effect urging violence.

Yes, my friends, you can read in the paper this morning that the entire blame for the steel situation was the companies' and not the men's. The report said, among other things, that settlement could not be reached, "in view of the attitude of the companies, that it could not accomplish anything further by way of mediation."

Note it said "attitude of the companies."

This report was signed by Charles P. Taft, a Republican, and the son of a great Republican President; Lloyd K. Garrison, and Edward F. McGrady, both of whom, though friendly to labor, are known to be reasonable men. Furthermore, Mr. Lewis agreed to withdraw entirely after he had been objected to, but the companies still refused to mediate.

PEOPLE WANT ORGANIZATION, ECONOMIC JUSTICE, AND LIBERTY

Mr. Speaker, there are two sides to this question, and certainly we as Members of Congress need not be extremists.

I am not impressed by the wild shouts of some of my colleagues on the Republican side. But I am disappointed that a Democrat, a gentleman from the South, a conservative, should act in such a manner. Talk no more about the violence of the actions of the radicals.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in the first part of my speech I mentioned the fact that we have two great forces at work today. I have already mentioned them; first, the great industrialists who want Congress to go home, abandon its duties, and leave the country in anarchy with none of our promises kept; in this way they can handle strikes, blood or no blood, and as they please. So I say let us stay here and finish our job.

But the other major force, my friends, is the great mass of the American people. They want to organize themselves; they want to have collective bargaining; they want economic justice and liberty; they want purchasing power. And what have they gotten? So far not much, and they have been kicked around, abused, and murdered and killed and beaten, both by the regular police, and by company police, and by private armies, hired thugs, labor spies, ex-convicts, and plain private murderers.

But all this brutality is ignored by our pious, patriotic talkers, and instead they yell and shout about communism.

CRY OF COMMUNISM IS GETTING THIN

Oh my colleagues, the old cry of communism is getting very thin. It gets thinner and thinner; it answers no argument; it reveals no facts; it settles no problems. Now, let me talk about John L. Lewis.

In the speech of the gentleman from Georgia and in most of the talk nowadays we hear John L. Lewis! John L. Lewis! Communistic cohorts! Civil war! Communism! Communism! Communism! Red flag of Russia!

I repeat, shouting ugly words will settle nothing. Let us quit using all these meaningless but mean and nasty words and get at our problems.

I said this was a movement, this labor movement, the movement of C. I. O. It is not just John L. Lewis. If John L. Lewis were not in it, there would still be a movement. And whatever John L. Lewis does, wherever he goes, even if it is to the North Pole to stay there with the bad, bad Communists of Russia, the movement will go on.

My purpose is not to praise John L. Lewis, although it is generally recognized he is an abler man than other leaders. I am merely saying this is a movement and, as far as I can see, a valid American movement.

As for communism, I see no evidence of those tendencies in the C. I. O. All I see are strong-minded men who want their American rights. I would like to know when it got to be that a native-born American, born in the hills of Tennessee or the plains of Texas, got to be a Communist because he got up and kicked and demanded a square deal for himself and his family?

MOVEMENT HAS RIGHT TO EXIST UNDER THE CONSTITUTION

Let us see whether this movement has a right to exist. Under the Constitution, the people have a right to organize. They have organized, and, under the same Constitution and the laws of this country, these people have demanded collective bargaining. But the National Labor Relations Board of the United States Government is criticized in a scurrilous manner and accused of partisanship. They are accused of not having fair elections.

Oh, that is absolutely unfair. Before the sit-down strikes the employers refused absolutely to follow the Wagner law. They refused even to permit the workers to have an election. These big industrialists got out injunctions, some 80 or 90 of them, against the Labor Board. And now all the hate of this crowd is directed at the Board, because even the Supreme Court has validated the Wagner Act, which includes the Labor Board.

HYSTERICAL FIGHT TALK ONLY LEADS TO TROUBLE

But the gentleman from Georgia, in his speech, speaks of the "basest emotions and grossest motives" in connection with the labor movement; he says there shall be no "compromise" he says the movement should be "sternly curbed."

But all of this hysterical fight talk leads only to trouble. I call upon my colleagues, I call upon businessmen everywhere, and to the American people to use moderation, to attempt peaceful settlement, to attempt conciliation, to uphold the Wagner Labor Relations Act.

Now, those interested in business, listen to me. I served in a Colorado regiment. Before I had arrived it had done strike duty. It served in the terrible bloody affairs around

Ludlow. And I have talked to the owners, and especially one owner of the big coal mines there, and it has been found that if the mines had given every single demand of the workers the owners would have saved money. Millions were spent on the militia; more millions were spent on private armies, mine guards, and thugs. Today, 23 years later, Colorado has not paid all the money she spent on that bloodshed and murder.

TOM GIRDLER IS NOT A GOOD BUSINESSMAN

So when a contempible character like Tom Girdler comes to Washington, in effect refuses to bargain collectively, insults the Congress and wisecracks about his deathly job—he is, besides being a brute, a poor businessman.

Listen! The workingman of America is not a Communist, he is not a coward, and he is not a sheep. Treat him half right and he will work himself to death. Let us, as free men, demand peace, condemn violence, whether it be perpetrated by organized industry or organized labor. But let us not get violent ourselves. Let us demand that all parties respect the National Labor Relations Act, which we ourselves passed, and which has been held constitutional by the Supreme Court.

Mr. Speaker, I have said about all I care to say about the labor situation, at least in reference to charges and the general situation of violence. But let us Democrats talk politics a little. We are not a labor party, nor a farmers' party. We are an American party devoted to democratic government. But labor and farmers certainly were a major factor in putting us in office. These groups deserve to be recognized, not altogether because we obtained substantial support from them, but because they are entitled to justice.

LOSS OF LABOR OR FARM VOTE WILL DEFEAT DEMOCRATS

And if we as a party lose the support of labor in 1938, we will lose heavily in the elections. If the support is lost in 1940, it is likely that we will lose the majority, and surely the Presidency of the United States. On the other hand, if we should lose the support of the farmers, the result would be the same. We cannot afford to lose the support of either.

And I admit that the constantly misleading and unfair attacks on labor have caused some impatience among the farmers. What, then, should we do? The answer is that we should keep our promises to both groups, enacting minimum-wage and decent labor legislation, and at the same time fair legislation for the farmers and tenants. It is our duty to keep up the purchasing power of both and to protect their rights.

But equally important are several other pieces of legislation, such as a tax bill to close up the loopholes and provide for those to pay who can afford to do so; there is the matter of a great housing program, which we have promised over and over again, and now for nearly 5 years.

There is another thing. I am more convinced than ever that we must enact legislation providing for the reform of the judiciary. It does not alone concern the Supreme Court, but many other features of importance. If I am any judge of the American people, they favor the reform of the judiciary, and want it done before we adjourn this session.

And something more. You can say what you please, President Roosevelt is still the most popular man in the United States. [Applause.]

Surely the Madison Square Garden speech, the Democratic platform, still means something to us. More than the matters we have mentioned, there are still others equally important; these include widening the scope of the Social Security Act and old-age pensions. We must give attention to flood control, prevention of soil erosion, reforestation, and the establishment of the bill for eight T. V. A.'s provided in Senator NORRIS's bill, and as also suggested by the President. All of these things must be done this term.

NATIONAL PROGRAM—KEEP PROMISES—NO SECTIONALISM

Fellow Democrats—and now I am speaking only to Democrats—there is little chance of the Republicans coming back. They have no program. Their only program is to try to break down our program. And I believe that even if we, as a party, should suffer defeats, the Republicans would not return to office. What would happen might be that no party would obtain a majority and we would have three or four political parties, with the election of the President thrown into the House of Representatives.

The only answer is that the Democratic Party should stick together, permit no sectionalism to enter its counsels, and not break apart; and, to repeat, stand by our national program and keep our promises.

I call upon you, upon businessmen, upon laborers and farmers, and upon all Americans for calm heads and reasonable action, for patience, peace, and kind thoughts. [Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Georgia that, under previous order of the House, other Members are entitled to the time. If they will yield to the gentleman for that purpose, the Chair has no objection.

Mr. COX. I would like to inquire of the other gentlemen if they will yield for that purpose?

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object, because the gentleman had his time the other day, and he can get time after we are through.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the business is completed and any special orders on Tuesday next, I may have permission to address the House for 1 hour on the subject of the revenues of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the other special orders of the day today I may proceed for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I had not planned to talk at all on the subject mentioned in the speech of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK], but I cannot refrain from expressing just a few thoughts on it. A few days ago our splendid Speaker recited a part of that wonderful poem by Edward Markham, The Man With the Hoe:

> Bowed by the weight of centuries he leans
> Upon his hoe and gazes on the ground,
> The emptiness of ages in his face,
> And on his back the burden of the world.
> Who made him dead to rapture and despair,
> A thing that grieves not and that never hopes,
> Stolid and stunned a brother to the ox?
> Who loosed and let down this brutal jaw?
> Whose was the hand that slanted back this brow?
> Whose breath blew out the light within this brain?

Later on in the poem Edward Markham charges the leaders and the rulers of that day and of the days of the past with bringing the man with the hoe to the condition in which we find him. This applied, of course, more in Europe than America, and it was in line with the picture of Millet, of France, that the Man With the Hoe was written; but to a certain extent it is becoming true in our own country, because we are tending toward tenancy on our farms, and this is a very dangerous tendency. It also applies in industry and has applied for decades. All that I want to say is that the employers in the past decades by sowing the wind are now reaping the whirlwind, and you and I have to take the consequences with them.

What I shall say today with reference to our Federal Government and the courts is something that I have thought about for years, and these opinions I have held for the last 15 or 20 years. It is not something new, but it is the basis on which I campaigned for Congress in 1920 and 1924 and was defeated. In 1932 I won, as I did in 1934 and 1936. So I say to you, my friends, that this is not something new with me but it is a stand that I have taken for the last 15 years.

OUR FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

I do not come to you today to attack the courts. I merely want to limit them to their constitutional functions. I do not come to defend the President. He needs no defense; he can well take care of himself. I do not come to criticize Members of the House and Senate. I want to urge them to shake off the "inferiority complex" which too often grips them, assert their prerogatives, and perform their duties as the elected representatives of the people of the United States. We are members of an independent and coordinate branch of the Government. Let us assert our independence of both the other branches and at the same time show our willingness to cooperate with both for the greatest good to the greatest number. Thus shall we regain our own self-respect and deserve the respect of others.

I want to discuss with you this afternoon the three coordinate branches of our Federal Government and their functions. Not since the Dred Scott decision and the resulting Civil War which laid its devastating hand upon our country has so momentous an issue confronted the people of the United States as the one now agitating the minds of all Americans.

What is the real issue before us today? Stripped of its camouflage it is simply this: Shall we as citizens of a democracy insist that the three coordinate and separate branches of the Federal Government be limited to the functions expressly provided for in our Constitution? That great document is one of express powers as far as the Federal Government is concerned. The Supreme Court itself has so declared time and again. That applies to the judicial as well as the legislative and executive branches.

Now, what are the express powers of the three branches of the Federal Government? Congress is to legislate, to make the laws. This is expressly stated. Nowhere in our Constitution is there any authority for the judicial legislation to which we have been subjected for the past century. The President is vested with the power of executing the law, of administering the law, of carrying out the policies established by Congress. The judges are authorized to interpret the law, to try cases under the laws and the policies established by Congress. Not a word or sentence authorizes them to declare laws unconstitutional, to tear the laws up and throw them into the waste-paper basket. Indeed, the framers of the Constitution four times definitely refused them this power. It is an assumed, a usurped power, initiated by that great Chief Justice, John Marshall. Their duties are to interpret and apply the laws to specific cases, just as it is the duty of nurses to apply prescriptions to patients, not to tear them up.

If judges would confine themselves to these constitutional functions, they would find enough to occupy their time and efforts. They have tried more than 25,000 cases under the law during 150 years of our national existence. They have declared unconstitutional about 75 laws during that time. It is ridiculous to charge that we are attempting to destroy the courts when we merely want to confine them to their constitutional duties and to where their sphere of activities really lies.

The cry is often being raised that we are trying to destroy the Constitution. I deny this. We are insisting on going back to the original intention of the framers of the Constitution. Gladstone, of England, once said:

> It is the greatest instrument struck off by the mind of man at one time.

It is a splendid foundation for our democratic form of government. Upon it has been erected a structure which is not only a source of admiration to the entire world, but also the everlasting refuge of a free people if it is interpreted in the light of modern conditions and amended when necessary. It is not sacred. Nothing is sacred except human rights and lives. The great Master once rebuked His persecutors when they chided Him because His disciples plucked grain on the Sabbath with these words:

> The Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath.

I would paraphrase this by saying that "the Constitution was made for Americans, not Americans for the Constitution." Its very purpose is to protect all the citizens of the United States, especially the weak and helpless. Verily, I believe it is broad enough and comprehensive enough to provide for the modern needs of the people of the United States if interpreted by minds attuned to modern needs and necessities and equities.

To my mind the preamble is the alpha and the Bill of Rights—the 10 first amendments—the omega of the Constitution. Listen:

> We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

The preamble does not say "we, the Colonies", nor "we, the States." The sovereigns and final arbiters in this country are the people themselves. Who can better shape the policies most likely to assure them of these six provisions in the preamble, especially to "promote the general welfare", than their duly elected representatives in the House and Senate and in the White House—all responsible to those whose servants we are?

They call our splendid President a dictator. He is nothing of the kind. Nor has he at any time desired such a role. He has been chosen by the voters of this country twice by outstanding majorities to lead us not only onward to recovery but forward to permanent reform. We have delegated certain powers to this matchless leader, but we can at any time cancel those powers. And may I again reemphasize the fact that both of these branches of the Federal Government—the legislative and the executive—are responsible to their sovereign—the people of the United States. On the other hand, the Congress has for a century supinely submitted to usurpation by the Federal Courts of its constitutional prerogative and function of legislating without even a protest from these Members who now question not only the duty of the President to cooperate with the Congress for the common welfare but also the motives which actuate him in these worth-while endeavors.

Let us look at another phase of this question. Let us be practical. Are there not as able, efficient, and conscientious constitutional lawyers in the Congress as on the bench? Is not the Attorney General of the United States, the special adviser to the President as to the constitutionality of a law, as capable as our judges? Has the mere elevation by partisan Presidents to these positions made men, even such as you and I, infallible? When was Justice Shiras infallible—when he held the income tax constitutional or when, a few days later, he held it unconstitutional? When was Justice Sutherland infallible—when as Senator he supported a pension bill or as a judge he held it unconstitutional? When was William Howard Taft infallible—when as President he vetoed a bill as unconstitutional or later as Chief Justice he held the same law constitutional? When was Justice Roberts infallible—when he held a minimum-wage law unconstitutional or a year later when he held an identical law constitutional? The fact that one Federal judge in one district holds a law unconstitutional and a Federal judge in another district holds the same law constitutional also refutes the theory that judges are infallible. So also does the fact that we have 5-to-4 and 6-to-3 decisions. That merely goes to show that they have the same frailties, the same prejudices, the same reactions from early training and experiences as all the rest of us. Their decisions are made accordingly. But remember that we live in a democracy, and the Members of Congress and the President are responsible to the voters at stated periods, while the judges are not responsible to any voters at any time. The Federal courts are an irresponsible, permanent oligarchy composed too often of mediocre men. Such a state of affairs is not permitted even in conservative England.

Again let me call your attention to another anomalous situation. The Congress has the power—and has exercised it—to create—to create, mind you—all the inferior Federal courts and establish, regulate, and limit their powers. Then we permit an insignificant Federal judge in some remote district to declare our own laws unconstitutional. The creation is master of the creator, is greater than the creator. This once happened in heaven, or was tried in heaven, and Lucifer was swept into the depths of utter darkness by his Creator for his impudence and audacity.

Congress has the constitutional authority to even abolish the inferior Federal courts. We do not propose to do this; they are both necessary and useful. But we do intend to limit them to the functions authorized by the Constitution, under which we both exist; that is, to try cases under the laws which we enact. They are to ascertain and preserve the rights of litigants who come before the courts for redress, but this must be in accord with the laws as enacted by Congress and signed by the President or passed over his veto.

I do not for one moment concede that the judicial branch of this Government is more capable, more desirous, more anxious to jealously guard and protect the rights of our citizens under the preamble and the Bill of Rights than are the Members of Congress and the President. As a matter of history, they have too often destroyed or interfered with human rights. I need only mention the results of the Dred Scott decision and the frightful holocaust it brought on this country. The child-labor decision doomed hundreds of thousands of helpless children to lives of drudgery, denied them their birthright to sunlight, fresh air, and education, and at the same time thereby denying willing laborers those jobs held by the children. The income-tax decision removed from the shoulders of those best able to pay the burden of taxation and placed it upon those whose burdens were already too heavy. And when, after 15 years, this was remedied by a constitutional amendment, the Supreme Court exempted salaries of Federal judges from the income tax on the pretext that under the Constitution the salaries of judges cannot be reduced during incumbency. In other words, the people themselves cannot by a later amendment change their own Constitution because the Supreme Court, forsooth, in a democracy considers itself even above the people themselves. The courts have also used and are using the un-American, unreasonable, undemocratic method of denial of rights by injunction. This prevents labor to bargain collectively and assemble peaceably.

Let me repeat that the Congress has exercised its constitutional prerogative to create all inferior Federal courts and define their duties and powers. It has also constitutionally both increased and decreased the membership of the Supreme Court. No one versed in our country's history can successfully deny this. No one can deny that the Congress has the constitutional authority to curb the powers of the inferior Federal courts and prohibit these courts from passing on the constitutionality of laws enacted by Congress. Then why this hue and cry about abolishing the courts, tearing up the Constitution, and destroying our democratic form of government? It is merely the echo of the superpatriotic barrage used against the administration in the last campaign. It will have the same outcome—a victory for the administration and for the American people.

I am for the President's program of court reorganization for three reasons: The Supreme Court has been rearranged by several former Presidents, including Lincoln and Grant; it is entirely constitutional, democratic, and American; it will permit the immediate carrying out of the mandate of the voters of the United States.

Did the people demand this? Let us see. During the first half of the Roosevelt administration the President proposed and the Congress enacted such legislation as the A. A. A., C. C. C., and T. V. A. The people as a whole favored this type of legislation. The New Deal was the issue in the 1934 campaign. Those of us who were in it know that full well. It won by a larger majority than in 1932, even though it was an off-year and the opposition was gathering strength enough to raise the cry of "Americanism." Following this election the Supreme Court declared most of these approved laws unconstitutional. The people knew where the President stood on the New Deal and where the Congress stood—at least the Democratic candidates certainly did not say things about the New Deal that some of them are now proclaiming because they think it is safe and expedient. During the 1936 campaign the New Deal more than ever was the issue. If anyone is in doubt, consult the campaign material of those who so bitterly opposed the President. Instead of meeting the issue with arguments the New Deal was called communistic and subversive to our form of government. Most of our candidates were denounced as dangerous to democracy and pictured as tearing up the Constitution and destroying the last bulwark of civilization—the Federal courts. Does anyone seriously contend that the New Deal and its author was not the issue? What was the verdict of the American electorate? It resented the insinuations, it tossed the lying propaganda into the wastepaper basket and endorsed the New Deal and President Franklin D. Roosevelt with the greatest majority in the history of our country.

Now, how can the reforms and policies of the New Deal be carried out if the Federal courts are permitted to continue to declare these laws, enacted in accordance with the New Deal, unconstitutional? Oh, yes; now the opponents of the New Deal are for a constitutional amendment, which they just as bitterly opposed as long as it was expedient to do so. A constitutional amendment would require years to accomplish. This has been the case with the child-labor amendment. In the first place, it requires two-thirds of both the House and the Senate to submit an amendment. It requires three-fourths of the legislatures of the 48 States to approve an amendment. The big interests of the country, who bitterly oppose reform and permanent recovery, would use their influence and money on one of the branches of the legislatures of 13 small States and defeat any amendment. This would not be the democratic way of majority rule. One-twentieth of the population, if centered in those small States, could defeat the desires of the majority as expressed at the polls last fall. If there was no constitutional way of upholding the New Deal other than the amendment way, then it would be not only logical but also mandatory. But the voters expressed themselves at the last election. There are two ways in which their elected representatives may constitutionally carry out that mandate—that is, by increasing the membership of the Supreme Court or by denying the right of inferior Federal courts to pass on the constitutionality of acts of Congress. This is clearly within the Constitution, and hence is both proper and right. The people, by an overwhelming majority, approved the policies and the program of Franklin D. Roosevelt, and it is the duty of their servants in the House and the Senate to translate that mandate into realization by using the constitutional means to prevent the New Deal legislation from being emasculated by the Federal courts.

It is further charged that the present Executive will pack the Court. The present membership of the Senate will prevent the confirmation of any appointee who would be likely to place in jeopardy the lives or rights of any American citizen. I call your attention to the fact that, whereas it requires only a majority of the Senate to enact this proposed legislation, it will require two-thirds to confirm an appointment to any Federal court—an effective check, if one were needed.

It has become quite popular to speak derogatively of the President. For those who honestly differ with the New Deal, I have no criticism. But there are certain Senators and Members of the House who are now asserting their independence. They are no longer "rubber stamps." It is too sadly true that for several sessions they were nothing but "rubber stamps" because of the popularity of the President. They have confessed to it here on the floor of the House. Then they campaigned in 1934 and 1936 on one issue: Roosevelt and the New Deal—and won the election. But all the while in the cloak rooms they were sniping at the President and the New Deal because at heart they are reactionary. Now they are coming out more openly. Words are inadequate for the contempt I have for such men. They are not only disloyal to the President, but to the democracy of Jefferson and to the United States. Frank and honest opposition is at all times a service, but "rubber stamp" support and hypocrisy are always a disservice and despicable.

We are still in the midst of the stress and turmoil of recovery from the depression and the reforms of the New Deal. We are a part of it and have a deficient perspective, so we can pass adequate judgment on neither the legislation nor the participants. A very substantial majority of the American voters have said in no uncertain terms that they want these reforms enacted into law and carried out. They have also chosen Franklin Delano Roosevelt as the leader for another 4 years. Majorities are not always right, but in a democracy their will must be respected and their desires carried out. They will be, notwithstanding conservative courts and reactionary Representatives and standpat Senators. If the New Deal fails of accomplishment within the next 3 years because of the obstructive activities of these three groups, the sovereign people will, I believe, draft this fearless leader for another 4 years, because he not only has broad sympathy for the common people but has the courage to fight for their rights.

I do not want to draft the President; it may not be necessary. It is unfortunate that this question has been raised at this time. But notice what I say: If by the obstructive activities of these groups the New Deal which the American people have demanded is not enacted into law, it may be necessary to have this fearless leader to continue to lead us to victory in the 4 years just beyond the present term.

Paul the Apostle, in his splendid chapter on charity (II Corinthians:13), when he had pictured charity as the greatest thing in the world, uses these words in the thirteenth verse:

> And now abideth Faith, Hope, Charity—these three, but the greatest of these is Charity.

So some future historian of America will name three great Americans and write their names in letters of living light on the scroll of time—Thomas Jefferson, because he gave us political liberty; Abraham Lincoln, because he gave us human liberty; Franklin Delano Roosevelt, because he gave us economic liberty, without which political and human liberty are worthless—these three, but the greatest of these is Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

I believe that some future historian will do this very thing; and I am here to say that although I have not supported the President in everything he has stood for—I have seen fit many times to oppose some of the things he has proposed—yet because of the fact that he believes in the common people and because he has sympathy for the common people and stands for the New Deal, which will give something to those who in past decades have received practically nothing, I am with him on the New Deal and all its principles to help those who have not received their rights in this country.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HILL of Washington. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I am interested in the gentleman's argument that the Court should not review legislation passed by the Congress and his argument also relating to the power of the courts to declare acts of Congress unconstitutional. I am wondering with regard to the protection of the rights of the people under the Constitution if a State were to pass a law saying that within that State the amendment providing for the direct election of United States Senators should be ignored and that in that State they would go back to the practice of electing Senators by vote of the joint houses of the legislature if we did not have a Supreme Court to say that such an act was unconstitutional, who would protect the rights of the people of the States to have a direct voice in the election of their Senators?

Mr. HILL of Washington. It is not necessary to answer the question, because I call attention to the fact that what I said had reference to acts of Congress. I did not mention at all the acts of State legislatures. I am talking about acts of Congress.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. All right. Then suppose Congress should pass a law and say that the Senators should be elected from among the States on the basis of population instead of protecting the rights of the Western and the small States, each to have two Senators. That was the compromise which made the Union possible originally. Suppose the Congress should pass an act and say that hereafter Congressmen are to be apportioned on the basis of population. Who would say that Congress did not have that right? Who would protect the rights of the States?

Mr. HILL of Washington. In the first place, I think the gentleman's assumption is far-fetched. I do not believe the Congress would do so, and the gentleman cannot cite a case where it has done so. In the second place, the gentleman and I are responsible to the people, and every 2 years we have to go back and be reelected. One-third of the Senators have to be elected every 2 years. The President has to be elected every 4 years. The people can remove us and put others in who will change the law. But the members of the Supreme Court and the Federal courts are put in there for life on good behavior, and the people cannot touch them. [Applause.]

My contention is that in a democracy the people should rule. They through their regularly elected representatives should decide on public policies. If we violate the confidence placed in us by the voters, they can remove us and change those policies by electing men and women who will repeal the objectionable laws. But when the Supreme Court, under our present unconstitutional system, declares that the income-tax amendment approved by the voters of this country does not apply to Federal judges, the people have no recourse. This is not democracy—it is government by an irresponsible oligarchy. I do not attack the courts. I hold no brief for the President. I do insist on the defense of democracy. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Under a special order heretofore made the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I wonder if my friend from Michigan would be adverse to my asking unanimous consent that his time be extended 5 minutes, then yield me the 5 minutes?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it proper to state that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] has obtained permission to speak for 15 minutes immediately following the address of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like very much to do that, but if the gentleman from Georgia would just as soon wait until I get through, I would appreciate it.

The SPEAKER. It is entirely proper for the gentleman from Georgia to submit his request, with the permission of the gentleman from Michigan and the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. COX. I will not press the request further. May I inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania at this time if he will yield to me to follow the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to do so.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, it will be my endeavor in the few moments I have at my disposal to follow the advice of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK], who said we should avoid the use of hard names, which advice I note he failed to follow during his talk.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman has started out talking about personalities and states that I did not refrain from using hard names. I make that point of order at the beginning, because I do not think the gentleman's statement is correct.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I leave it to the judgment of the Members of the House. The RECORD, if not deleted, will show the gentleman did, in substance, give that advice.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House, if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] wishes to complain of words spoken in debate, his remedy is to demand that the words complained of be taken down. The gentleman from Michigan will proceed in order.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I most humbly apologize to the gentleman from Texas if I made an erroneous statement and if I am mistaken in the assumption that the name he called Tom Girdler was a hard one or if the term "murderer" is not a hard name. What is the reason for a strike?

WHY A STRIKE?

Common sense, clear thinking, consideration of the facts, should give a correct answer.

Is there any legitimate reason for a strike, other than that the workers whom it affects are dissatisfied with either the conditions under which they work, the hours of employment, or the wage received?

If the workers employed in a factory are satisfied, should an outsider complain? If an outsider is permitted to complain, cause a strike, close the factory, deprive the worker of employment, he should be willing and able to offer an alternative which would save the worker from loss. Usually, the outsider causing a strike, closing a factory, depriving the worker of his job, accomplishes little, if anything.

Under any system of free government, there is—there can be—no doubt about the proposition that workers have a right to strike. The exercise of this right may be fair or unfair; it may or it may not work hardship to coworkers. Nevertheless, the right to strike is the right of the worker, of which no one under a system of free government should dispossess him.

It must be equally true that the man who desires to work should have that right and of that right he cannot, if liberty is to exist, be deprived.

Do you question either one of these propositions? No one consistently can question either, for the striker of today may be the worker of tomorrow, and the man who desires to work today may wish to strike tomorrow.

If a strike is called, what is the procedure? There is no doubt about the fact that men in a factory may strike. Is it not equally true that a man adjoining him may desire to work? Is the right to strike to be placed above the right to work? Are they not equal, both before the law and as a matter of moral honesty?

What are the facts? The gentleman's argument might have carried weight had it been based upon fact, but unfortunately his argument was not based on facts. The gentleman cited the refusal of the owners of the plants to abide by the Wagner law and called attention to the fact that injunctions had been requested. That is quite true, and they were within their rights. I am sure that those gentlemen in this House who find so much fault with our Constitution and our courts would not close the doors of those same courts and deny the protection of the Constitution to the people who desired to have justice done. I step over the thought that the C. I. O. and these labor organizations have never to this day followed the law and asked for an election in the case of General Motors.

Never to this day have they invoked the law made for their benefit, devised for the advancement of labor and to assist it in organizing.

Let me state a hypothetical question. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] and I work at the same place. We are satisfied with working conditions, with hours, with wages. The other fellow, who is not employed at the plant, desires to organize us, charge us an initiation fee, a monthly fee. He convinces me that I should be organized; the gentleman from Texas is not convinced.

The other fellow and I insist that he join; he declines. We call a strike. I sit down on my job and on his job. I say he cannot work. I drive him from the factory, or, if it be a peaceful strike and not of the sit-down type, I picket the factory and when he leaves I will not permit him to return.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] has more fighting ability than have I. The other fellow sends in his flying squadron to join me on the picket line, and together we keep him, the gentleman [Mr. MAVERICK], from his job.

If the gentleman persists in his effort to go in, we either form a solid mass of humanity before the gate or we threaten. If threats are unavailing, we beat him.

The Government, State and National, gives the gentleman from Texas no aid. He is out of a job until he signs or the other fellow and I grow weary of our procedure, and, in the meantime, he is without work. He can live on his savings, if he has any. He can seek other employment, if he can find it, or he can go on the relief roll or depend upon the charity of the community.

I have stated the situation in the simplest of terms. Let the gentlemen who are speaking, who are organizers for the Committee for Industrial Organization, make answer in terms as simple.

Whether the majority of the workers in any particular plant, when free of intimidation, desire to strike, can easily be demonstrated by the methods employed in that particular strike.

If the majority of the workers are dissatisfied and wish to enforce their demands by a strike, and their demands are reasonable, the proposition is a very, very simple one. All they need to do is to call a strike, quit work, and advise the community and prospective workers of their grievances.

If their demands are reasonable, if their grievances are real, their places cannot and will not be taken by any self-respecting worker, and no longer can industry import strike-breakers.

If their demands are unreasonable, or if the majority prefer to work under the conditions and at the wages and hours which prevail, you will find the pickets reinforced by outsiders, using violence and intimidation to prevent the majority from working.

Let me repeat: The question of whether the majority in any particular plant desires to strike is answered by the character and methods of the pickets.

If outsiders are brought in and violence and intimidation used, then you may be sure that it requires intimidation and force to keep the majority from their jobs. Otherwise, they would stay away voluntarily.

The majority never need employ violence, intimidation, coercion. They can close the plant and keep it closed by remaining away from work. It is the minority which would violate the law, deprive its fellow men of the opportunity which it claims for itself, which ordinarily employs violence.

Labor should be organized, but only under responsible leaders, selected by the workers themselves. It should have the right to bargain collectively, and, when it assumes responsibility equal to the demands which it makes, public opinion, which is inclined to favor it, will compel compliance with all reasonable demands.

That there is intimidation, and plenty of it, is beyond question. Let me read excerpts from just a few letters. Here is one from Flint:

> The citizens of this city are getting awfully sick of the C. I. O. rule and the union members themselves, in many instances, are beginning to rebel. To illustrate, a strike has been in progress at the Mary Lee Candy Shop on our main street for several days. Picket lines have been established around the front of the store and during the first few days the store did a bigger business than ever before. Finally the union officials became convinced apparently that there was a bad public reaction so they began calling customers who entered the store scabs and shouting that they would be awfully sick before night, indicating that the food had been poisoned. These lines were established at both the front and back doors of the store. Finally on Saturday the pickets began attacking customers who went into the store. Not satisfied with that they gathered a group of 50 or 60 hoodlums on the sidewalk, and when someone came along whom they knew as antagonistic, one of the hoodlums would push this person into one of the pickets who, then, would assault and beat up the passer-by. Then they would claim that the passer-by had assaulted the picket. One of the persons assaulted is a union man who is employed at the Chevrolet. Upon being assaulted he promptly knocked down the picket who had hit him. Thereupon 14 or 15 hoodlums began beating this fellow up while the police stood by. Finally the police very gently told the hoodlums they should not disturb the peace.

Protest was made against this violence to the city manager of Flint, and, according to the Flint Journal of June 27, I quote:

City Manager Findlater having informed a group of downtown businessmen that the blame for the trouble rested upon the citizens of Flint, who, he said, had no business going into the Mary Lee Restaurant, or saying anything to the pickets who blocked the sidewalk in front of the place during the rush of downtown Saturday afternoon shopping.

The same paper gives instances of violence which occurred that afternoon and evening and which I will insert:

Men and women patrons of the restaurant were subjected to a running fire of verbal attacks and some fared even worse as they left the establishment.

Previously Betty Simpson, union organizer in charge of strike activities at the Mary Lee, was heard to inform the pickets and the crowd in front of the store that "the city manager said it was all right for us to go ahead and do what we wanted to do."

Most seriously beaten during the day was Mr. Miller, whose face was a mass of blood and bruises. He said he had just stepped out of the restaurant when he was set upon by five or six men who began to beat him.

Another who was attacked was Dr. J. W. Orr, who was kicked in the shins and struck in the face by a woman picket.

One uniformed policeman was on duty at the scene of the fighting when the Saturday afternoon disorders broke out and he was helpless to handle the situation.

An Associated Press dispatch from Massillon, Ohio, dated today, quoted Leo W. Cox, picket captain at Republic Central Steel division, as saying last night when he protested against the use of troops against the plant reopening:

If they try to open this plant they will have a damn bloody fight. We have more than enough men here to whip this army and the scabs, too.

That is a statement of a picket captain of the organization under whose auspices the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] spoke at Detroit when he advocated organizing in the South as well as in the North, East, and West.

Let the gentleman state on the floor of the House whether he stands back of massed picketing, whether he stands back of and approves keeping men by force from their jobs.

Here is a letter from the wife of a worker in the Chevrolet factory at Flint. It is dated June 28. Among other things, she wrote:

Our fair city has become a lawless place, indeed. Businessmen that have done much to make Flint what it is are being forced to sign up with the C. I. O. racketeers, but it is done only as a last step to save their business.

Don't think for a moment all those that belong to the C. I. O. do so by choice. The majority were driven to it.

I know men who have been beaten and called all manner of names because they find themselves the possessors of too much manhood to sign up with the hell-bent racketeers.

Our men are threatened with being dumped into compound tanks, etc., but, thank God, some have stood their ground. My husband had connecting rods brandished at him and was told to get to h—— out of the Chevrolet or join the C. I. O.

The woman is frightened. She fears for her personal safety. Note this. She writes:

Today I stopped at police headquarters to make application to carry an automatic.

Think of it. Here is a housewife, a law-abiding, God-fearing, Christian woman whose husband is working for Chevrolet. Because of the acts of members of the organization for which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] goes to Detroit and speaks and of whose methods he has, so far as I know, on this floor uttered not one word of criticism, this woman appeals to the police department of her city, which has failed, even during the daylight hours, to protect citizens of that town from violence on the public streets, for permission to arm herself so that she may walk in safety.

She writes further:

I just felt I had to write to say we want law and order, freedom of speech, press, and worship. What are our chances for having these?

John L. Lewis and his gang practice all manner of coercion to force his ideas on us. Will our Government rob us of the right to choose our own leaders?

Here is another received this morning from New York, which needs no explanation:

I am a C. I. O. who would like to leave the organization, and I know a few others who would like to do it, too; but we are afraid, for we know some of the others would smash us or do something dreadful to us. We work on fur in New York, and if we left the union we know we could get no protection from the Government, for, as that good old CARTER GLASS said, "We have no Government", now in some of the States since Roosevelt has been in, and so many Congressmen are afraid of him and Farley. I know that most of the C. I. O. men want to stick to John Lewis, but I am an American and so are some of my friends who want to leave the C. I. O., and we see things a little different from the others. We can see that most of the employers are decent men and fair and square. We can see, too, that we are not smart enough to invent anything and make a lot of money, and it is lucky for us that there are some smart men who can invent things and make money to pay us wages. And I and my friends don't believe in communism like most of the C. I. O. men do, for we can see that most rich men do better with their money than the politicians would do with it, for they would buy votes with it. I wish you would let all the Congressmen read this letter and put it in the papers, too.

During the last few months I have received hundreds of similar letters from widely separated sections in the United States.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] preaches peace, but the organization for which he speaks practices aggressive, lawless violence.

Is there any question about it? Do I wrong the gentleman? What are the facts? There is no mystery; there is no concealment. The record is open; all may read.

This series of strikes began in Michigan at Flint. Armed men invaded our State. By force they drove our workers from their jobs. They took and held possession of the factories. Does the gentleman approve of armed invasion? Does the gentleman advocate the driving of workingmen from their employment, either by C. I. O. organizers and C. I. O. "flying quadrons", or by the armed forces of a State, merely because those who make the attempt threaten violence and bloodshed if their desire is opposed?

In those picket lines men walk elbow to elbow, hand on shoulder, and, by a wall of moving humanity, bar workers from entering. If that does not suffice, they arm and, by force, drive those who would work away from the factory gate. Does the gentleman approve of that? Is it right? Is it just? Am I overstating the situation? Have I described a condition which does not exist, which has not for months existed in many places throughout this land?

Yet the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] speaks for an organization which does these things, and on the floor of this House he praises the leader of that movement.

Let us say nothing about the law, about legal rights. As one man to another, I ask him to make answer on the floor of this House, when the time is convenient to him, whether there is either fairness or common decency about it, if, by force, I drive my fellow worker from his job and keep him from it?

The gentleman talks about brutality which occurred at Chicago, but he does not tell the whole story. Do not mistake me. I do not condone brutality under any circumstances. Nevertheless, it should be remembered that that Sunday's attempt, in which these men were killed and injured, was the fourth assault on that particular plant, and that all could have been avoided had peaceful, lawful picketing been the order of the day.

Those marchers when they started toward the plant knew that it was defended by Chicago police. Many of those marchers knew just the kind of a police force they would meet. They knew that bloodshed and violence would follow if they persisted. Yet they went on.

Pictures were taken. They may be accurate; they may not be accurate. It is said that one series of pictures was taken by a minister, who also was reported to have been present taking pictures at two other scenes of violence where strikes were in progress.

After one has seen some of the pictures shown in some of the movie houses he does not always accept the evidence of his own eyes. It is said that Joe Brown, in his new picture, Walking on Air, I think it is, has airplanes climbing either trees or telegraph poles; in any event, doing the impossible.

One thing is certain—the investigation now being conducted by the Senate Civil Liberties Committee at the other end of the Capitol has not yet brought out, so far as I know, acts of violence perpetrated by strikers or "flying squadrons"; but, perhaps, I am impatient, and it may sometime get to it.

This fact I have noted, that whenever public sentiment is crystallizing against these unlawful activities, that particular committee creates a diversion. I cite as an example that when the citizens of Flint were about to drive the sit-down strikers out, according to the official publication of the C. I. O., the Senate committee came to its rescue by putting the "heat" on General Motors officials.

Do not go out now and say that I advocate or approve of violence by anyone.

I hold no brief for any man who wants to engage in violence. You cannot put me with that group which wants violence, which wants trouble, but you can put me with that group which is willing to defend its homes and its property and the people of its city.

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Just for a question.

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. Was not the gentleman going to lead an army into one of these towns?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I have been waiting for that question, and I will answer the gentleman. The gentleman has asked his question; if I may have the floor again, I will make answer.

I would not lead an army anywhere if I could get out of it, and I never made any expression which indicated that I had the slightest desire to lead an army or to provoke a fight. I did make certain statements with reference to a condition which existed at Monroe, Mich. When I came through Monroe, after I had learned by a visit there what happened at Newberry, in the northern Peninsula of Michigan—and I thank the good Lord we have a Member from Michigan [Mr. HOOK] who is standing and talking against this lawlessness—I was frightened; and I still am frightened. I saw businessmen, just as respectable as any in this House, who had been out on the highway for 3 nights and 3 days, with no more than 11 hours' sleep, protecting the factory, the workers; and I saw farmer boys and workers, young and old, and I was advised that they had the C. I. O. membership list, and that out of 1,358 workers only 99 wanted to strike—I saw these men out there, two veterans of the World War armed with "tommy" guns, others with shotguns, and others with rifles, baseball bats, and knives.

These men's faces were drawn because of fatigue, of hardship. They, too, were frightened because of what might come to their town; because of what had been said; because of what had been done; because of the threats which had been made against their city.

When on Sunday Bittner stood before an audience of 8,000 C. I. O. sympathizers and said to them, "We are coming back to Monroe", and "By God, they will pay for what they did at Monroe, and pay well", I did say, and I stand here now and repeat it, that I was willing to go to Monroe. I was willing to go armed, and to have my friends and relatives go armed, to assist the citizens of Monroe in defending themselves against armed invasion from other States and other cities under the leadership of the organization for which the gentleman speaks.

In spite of the uncomplimentary intimations of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK], and of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNELL], and of my own timidity, when armed workers and men come in from outside, from Chicago and from Toledo, and threaten violence; when they march upon the defenseless towns and cities of my home State, I am willing to do something besides talk.

I believe that nine-tenths of the Members of this House are willing to go back into their own States, to fight if necessary, when their communities are threatened with that kind of an invasion.

The gentleman stated no blood would be shed by any of these men who were doing the talking here. Now, you talk about John L. Lewis. You speak for his organization, as you did at Detroit. Bring John L. Lewis, or whomever you want to bring; bring him over into our community with those fellows, and, brother from Texas, I will be there to meet you and your friend John. Do not forget it. This is not a threat; it is just a promise I am giving you.

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. Will the big brave man from Michigan have a gun?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I am not a big brave man. I am the biggest coward in this House. I will run faster and farther and crawl into a smaller hole than any Member of this House to get out of trouble; but do not come to my house and tell me you are going to put me out. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I have yielded all the time I care to yield to the gentleman, Mr. Speaker.

Do not think I am the only one who sees trouble ahead. It is always the troublemakers who cannot see it. It is the fearful man, the cowardly man, the man who is afraid, as I am afraid, who fears what is coming. For myself I do not care. I am old enough to call it a day. I have had my share of work and I have had my share of pleasure; but I have children and I have grandchildren. Now, come on, if you insist. That is all I can say—come on—and if you expect that because Lewis, whose telegram preceded the beating, shooting, and hanging of 25 defenseless men at Herrin in 1922, can get away with those methods, make no mistake. You will find factory workers, businessmen, farmers, men old and young—yes; and women—of the rural communities of Michigan ready to do battle; ready to do battle not because they wish it but because it is forced upon them and they cannot evade it. They will fight for home and fireside because they must, not because they wish.

And let the C. I. O. organizers remember that no magic mantle surrounds them; that they are not immune from those things which affect others.

Peaceful we are, and peaceful I am, and I will go to the end of the road to avoid trouble; but when driven to the end of the road and nothing is left—and C. I. O. would leave us nothing—we can do naught but defend ourselves, and that we will do.

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. What do you mean by "come on"?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Oh, I mean this: Get those gangs of whatever they are——

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. You are not inviting me outside or anything?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Oh, no; that is the last thing I would think of. If I were inviting anyone to a physical combat, I would try to get the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JOHNSON] or the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK], or some big man like that, or, perhaps, if I had the money, I would get Joe Louis to do my fighting. That is the way I would try to handle that kind of situation. [Laughter and applause.] But invade our homes, and we will do our own fighting. If and when you come to my home, you will find me there. Do you think I am crazy, do you think I am alarmed? I know I am frightened.

What about the kindly, patriotic, courageous gentleman over on the other side, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who said the other day, June 24 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 6284):

> We have no Government.

What about the statement of the Democratic whip in the Senate, Senator LEWIS, who said, on June 23 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 6213):

> This Nation is in a great peril, as I see it. I behold America as it now stands upon the eve of a turbulence which can result in a conflict inwardly very similar to that which preceded the Civil War between the States.

* * * * * * *

There is not a State in our Union which just now is not threatened with what may be called a form of riotuous confusion.

* * * * * * *

Shall we overlook at this time and forget that it was in like manner that Italy yielded, bringing on a condition which has finally resulted in a tyranny and a form of despotism we shrink to mention? Shall we refuse to reflect that our affairs of state and industry may likewise become victims as was the case in Italy, Russia, and now in Spain?

* * * * * * *

Here within ourselves we are nearer to insurrection and apparently, sir, confronting an army of revolt in the largest numbers * * *.

Oh, yes, I may be crazy; but those two patriotic Senators who have lived long enough to judge coming events, they are not crazy. They know what is going to happen if this continues.

When peaceful, law-abiding, God-fearing and God-worshiping housewives in Michigan are so frightened that they find it necessary to arm themselves, in order that they may have protection in daylight on the streets of a city in Michigan, then it is time that we take action to dispel their fears, to bring them security, for fear leads to violence, and violence, when widespread, to insurrection and civil war.

That seems to have been the thought in the minds of the two Democratic Senators to whom all look for sound advice and courageous action.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. Under the special order heretofore made, the gentleman from Pennsylvania is entitled to recognition.

Mr. LORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan may have 15 minutes of additional time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is loathe to submit that request, because the House has granted permission to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to address the House, but the gentleman from Pennsylvania may yield for the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I yield for the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. BEITER. I object, Mr. Speaker.

(Mr. HOFFMAN and Mr. MAVERICK asked and were given permission to revise and extend their own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I understood that the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD] asked unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan be given 15 minutes of additional time. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to postpone my time to see whether the House is willing to give the gentleman from Michigan the additional 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood that the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER] objected to the request, in any event.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD] submitted the request, it was my understanding he wanted 15 minutes. I would not object if the gentleman wanted 5 minutes. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] has been trying to get the floor for some time, and I would like to hear the gentleman's statement. I have no objection if the gentleman from Michigan wants that additional time.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] is willing to waive the time heretofore accorded him, the Chair would entertain a request that the gentleman from Michigan be allowed to proceed.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that I would give up my time?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be deferred.

Mr. RICH. Yes, Mr. Speaker; I am asking that my time be deferred.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the time heretofore granted him may be deferred pending the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD] that the time of the gentleman from Michigan may be extended 15 minutes.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 15 additional minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I take no particular exception to what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] had to say about me. I want to think better than well of the gentleman. However, it would be difficult for me to esteem him as highly as he might wish. I do want to believe, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman loves his Government and would not willingly lend himself as an instrument to its overthrow. I want to believe that the gentleman feels as Andrew Jackson felt when he said, "Our Federal Union, it must be preserved", and as Daniel Webster when he said in his Bunker Hill address, "Our country, our whole country, and nothing but our country." Then I want him to join with me in asking the question, "Where is the coward or the scoundrel who would not fight for such a beautiful land?" [Applause.]

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I must believe that the gentleman is never serious; that he is more interested in provoking amusement by his extravagance and buffoonery than in the molding of sound public opinion.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman's words be taken down.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands that the words of the gentleman from Georgia be taken down. The gentleman from Georgia will take his seat.

Which words does the gentleman ask be taken down?

Mr. MAVERICK. Where the gentleman used the word "buffoonery." This is not very serious to say it; we have said worse.

The SPEAKER. The reporter will take down and the Clerk will report as soon as convenient the last paragraph of the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia.

The Clerk read as follows:

I must believe that the gentleman is never serious; that he is more interested in provoking amusement by his extravagance and buffoonery than in the molding of sound public opinion.

The SPEAKER. What action does the gentleman from Texas desire taken on the words of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I believe——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must make some affirmative motion.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the words be stricken from the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that the words uttered by the gentleman from Georgia are such that it constitutes a matter which the House should determine as to whether or not they should be stricken from the RECORD.

The gentleman from Texas moves that the words uttered by the gentleman from Georgia be stricken from the RECORD.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that a quorum is not present. They can put this on record if they want to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOILEAU. I understand that the gentleman simply made a point of order that there was no quorum present; that is, he did not object to the vote on that ground. I wanted to know whether it was just an ordinary point of no quorum or whether the gentleman objected.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote and make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I thought it was presumed that that kind of language was in violation of the rules of the House. If it is not, let it go.

The SPEAKER. It is not within the province of the Chair to strike language from the RECORD. That is a matter that must be submitted to the House.

Mr. MAVERICK. I ask unanimous consent that the Speaker say that was in violation of the rules of the House to use that kind of language.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has ruled that the language of the gentleman from Georgia was of such nature that it should be submitted to the House whether or not it should be expunged. The gentleman has other remedies. The gentleman could have moved that the gentleman from Georgia should be directed to proceed in order, but the gentleman has moved that the words be stricken from the RECORD, and that issue must be submitted to the House.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAVERICK. I would like to know what is to be done when personal remarks of that kind are made?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has availed himself of his parliamentary remedy. He has asked that the words be taken down and has moved that they be stricken from the RECORD.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCORMACK. Whether or not business has been transacted since the gentleman from Texas raised the point of no quorum.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, it is not an important matter, so I will withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

So the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia will proceed in order.

Mr. COX. I want to think that the gentleman believes in some form of government, that he has not become wholly Russianized, and that John L. Lewis is not in fact his candidate for the Presidency in 1940.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the word "Russianized", and I again ask that the gentleman's words be taken down.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman request that the words be taken down?

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the word "Russianized" be taken down.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the word "Russianized."

Mr. MAVERICK. It is nice of the gentleman to withdraw his words; such words are only meant to be insulting; they mean nothing and prove nothing. And as for the gentleman's remarks that John L. Lewis is my candidate for President in 1940, I have not decided. But I will not do like the gentleman—say I am for Roosevelt and the Democratic Party, and then be against both. I was for Roosevelt and the Democratic Party in 1936, and I am now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws the word objected to.

The Chair thinks it proper to restate the rule of decorum in debate:

> That no word should be spoken that reflects upon the character or reputation and standing of any Member.

The gentleman from Georgia will proceed in order.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I am willing that the gentleman shall be known to his brethren as he desires to be known; and, therefore, I propound to him now a few questions which he can answer later on:

Is the gentleman collaborating with Mr. Lewis in the shaping of his official conduct here in this House?

Is he in sympathy with the C. I. O. and its effort to terrorize industry?

Does he favor the sit-down strike?

Does he approve of armed picketing?

Does he favor the closed shop and the check-off system?

Does he favor the forcible closing of industrial plants, the denial of ingress to owners, the denial of food and raiment to thousands of people who want to work?

Does he favor the stoppage of the United States mails, the shooting into planes attempting to carry food to people who insist upon their constitutional right to earn their bread by the sweat of their brow?

Does he favor the denial of the authority of the courts, the resistance to peace officers, the use of dynamite in blowing up water mains, the forcing of thousands of people into the bread lines, and the shooting down of people who resist the appeal of the Communist?

Mr. Speaker, let the gentleman make serious answer to these questions, and his brethren and the country will know him as he is. [Applause.]

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania be deferred 5 minutes in order that I may reply to the gentleman from Georgia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is entitled to be recognized at this time for 15 minutes.

Mr. MAVERICK. Will not the gentleman defer for 5 minutes?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I have tried to secure time on various occasions. It is very difficult. I am perfectly willing, however, that the gentleman from Texas may answer the questions of the gentleman from Georgia. If my time may be deferred, I shall be perfectly willing to have him answer. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Just a moment. The Chair wants a definite understanding about the parliamentary situation. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield the time the House has granted him?

Mr. RICH. No; I do not, Mr. Speaker. I ask that my time be deferred 5 minutes in order that the gentleman from Texas may answer the questions of the gentleman from Georgia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas may now be recognized for 5 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, it is the instrumentality of persons who wish to be insulting and embarrass others to ask insulting questions. It is like asking someone, "Have you quit beating your wife or robbed a bank lately?" "Have you cut a throat or scuttled a ship in the last 10 days?", or "Do you believe in cannibalism?"

I do not think that it is necessary for a soldier of the World War—and I am not going to brag about that—I do not think it is necessary to answer those questions; but I answer these insults, generally, by saying "No." That is the answer. I will not attempt a detailed answer, at least not now. For, after all, the gentleman from Georgia merely wanted the peculiar satisfaction of asking me those questions. The answers do not concern him greatly.

Mr. Speaker, I oppose violence of any kind, whether committed by industry or labor, and said so in my main speech. I am for the peaceful settlement of labor disputes and want to encourage the Secretary of Labor and the National Labor Relations Board; the gentleman has denounced both.

It seems to me as though the discussion of this whole C. I. O. and labor question is on a basis of the frightful suggestions in the nature of the conversation of the gentleman from Georgia. The very thing that he is doing here is the kind of psychology and the kind of excitement that brought on the Civil War in the United States. Such talk may cause trouble again. And it is easy to be brave here in Congress.

It is easy enough to propound insulting questions, but the problems which confront the American people are serious. I will not rise and protest my virtue, that I am as virtuous, or as brave, or as courageous as the gentleman from Georgia. Portia protested her virtue too much, and Falstaff talked bravely and ran.

I cannot get up here and say that "the flower of Texas manhood", since the gentleman has spoken of "the flower of southern manhood", are going to do battle and shed some blood because of the C. I. O., especially since thousands of young ladies in the South have lately joined the textile union, and no one has risen up to stop it. The questions asked were intended merely for insult and display.

Some people become overpious, and they wrap themselves in the Constitution and the flag. They parade themselves.

But who is it that is fighting the plans of the Democratic Party and of the President of the United States?

Why, it is men like the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox]. He is one of the men who does that very thing. I merely submit to the membership of this House that there are lots of men in the C. I. O. and other labor organizations who are just as patriotic, just as honorable, and just as courageous as the gentleman from Georgia.

But I submit, Mr. Speaker, that just such occurrences as of today bring violence. We have heard enough of bitter personalities for the time being. The people of this country would rather see us do our duty and carry out the promises of the Democratic Party. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] desire to avail himself of the time previously given him?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I do. I asked for it for the purpose of utilizing the time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, may I state that I shall object to any further unanimous-consent requests at the termination of the gentleman's speech.

Mr. VOORHIS and Mr. SUMNERS of Texas rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] has the floor. Does he yield?

Mr. RICH. If it does not come out of my time. I want to be as courteous as I can to the Members of the House.

The SPEAKER. It will be taken out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, then I cannot yield. I am awfully sorry. I have tried to be as courteous to the Members of the House as I possibly could in yielding my time heretofore.

Mr. COX. I want to thank the gentleman for his exceeding kindness to me.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman is quite welcome.

Mr. Speaker, this seems to be the day during which we are having discussions among the membership of the House about each other and things that have been said on the floor regarding personalities. While on that subject I want to call attention to a statement made by my colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GILDEA] on June 21.

First, may I say I hold no ill will or animosity toward any Member of the House or toward any one in fact that I know of in Congress, in my district, in the State of Pennsylvania, or the world. We all have a right to our individual opinion and a right to believe in certain things as we please and to worship as we choose. Thanks for that. The gentleman from Pennsylvania mentioned something about the Woolrich Woolen Mills and the fact I was general manager of that concern; therefore he spoke of me personally.

May I say that I am a manufacturer and in business, and have been all my life since I left college. I consider it a distinct honor and a great privilege for any man to be engaged in some honest business in order that he may, during his life, do something not only for himself but for hundreds and hundreds of other people. It so happens I am associated with business that employs about 700 people. We try our best, so far as we possibly can, to look after those individuals and do the things that we think ought to be done for those employees. We work with them, we associate with them, and we understand them, and they, I think, understand us. We have never had any labor trouble to speak of that was not satisfactorily adjusted to employer and employee. I question whether we have an annual labor turnover of the employees of our plant of 1 percent. Certainly not over that.

We believe in the Golden Rule. We may try to do everything we know how, but there arise in any plant differences between the employee and the assistant foreman, the foreman, or the superintendent, or the management; that is only natural. Naturally 700 or 800 people cannot always get along together 100 percent. The fact is you have to do the thing that may be best for the greatest number. If you have some people who will not work with you, there is only one thing for them to do, and that is to work for somebody else. If they cannot get along with a foreman or assistant foreman, they have to get out. You necessarily have to have your rules and regulations to apply to all. Business must be run on a sound basis. They must have rules and regulations just the same as the House of Representatives or any other body.

When it comes to minimum wages and the abolition of child labor and things of that kind, I am for those things 100 percent. Ever since I have been a Member of Congress I have advocated those things. I have even gone down to the labor temple to get them to advocate such laws since 1930. The principal ones I found against those things are the men in the labor organization. With the exception of one man who has charge of the Federal Government employees, Luther C. Stuart, they were not for those things; at least, those I contacted in labor circles were not.

The gentleman stated that my company was called before the Wagner Labor Relations Board. Name some business that has not been called before them or who will not be. The right to labor is just as sacred as the right to strike for all Americans under our form of government. May that always be the case.

Since that Board has been established, under a law the intent and purpose of which was that the Board should settle strikes, we have had more strikes than we have ever had in the history of the Nation in the same space of time—over 2,400 in 7 months. I do not know where you would find a concern which has not been called up before that Board, because today, if one employee raises an objection for any reason at all to management, the C. I. O. is after him trying to get him to come to the Labor Board and make some objection about your organization, and they cooperate with C. I. O. 100 percent. The C. I. O., so I am informed, paid the expenses of three of our employees who were relieved from duty in our company in order that they might come here to Washington to make complaint. Nothing strange about that. Just facts. When the difficulties concerning those three employees arose, not one word was said about organization or about labor unions. Labor unions were not discussed, not even mentioned. I may say, too, that I am in sympathy with organized labor, and I am in sympathy with the right of labor to deal with its own employers.

For years the employees in the various departments of our company have elected their own representatives, every one of whom sits in on the monthly meeting of the foreman, assistant foreman, and the board of directors, taking care of the things which are interesting and vital to the welfare of such employees. These employees can make complaint at any monthly meeting about anything which goes wrong or anything which might happen concerning the employee and his welfare. This custom has been in effect for years. We have also had an old-age pension system effective for years. We have no child labor. It is outlawed in Pennsylvania, and has been for years.

I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GILDEA] that I now give him an invitation to come up to our plant and visit me, and go around and see the plant, and see the people, and how they live. He can talk to them at their work and at their homes, and see whether the people up there are fairly well satisfied with their work. See if they are treated right, see if the great majority of them live right and happy and see what nice conditions they really do have and enjoy. I will venture the assertion you do not have a textile plant in Pennsylvania or the country that have all around working conditions as good or better than at Woolrich, where the people are happier and more contented, where they live in nicer homes, or where the surroundings are as good.

Mr. GILDEA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. For just a question.

Mr. GILDEA. I simply want to make a statement regarding that invitation. I have been invited by the workers at the gentleman's mill to attend a meeting in Williamsport on next Wednesday evening. I intend to accept the invitation, and I shall report back to the House exactly what I find.

Mr. RICH. I suggest to the gentleman that instead of going to Williamsport he go to Woolrich, the place to see for yourself. However, when he does go to Williamsport at the request of Mr. Derr, the organizer for the C. I. O., who evidently is the man who invited the gentleman up there, to get his information, you will only get the C. I. O. side. Go to Woolrich and get the facts from the 95 percent of satisfied workers, all American born and all good American citizens. We have nothing to be ashamed of, but we have much to be proud of.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not yield any further. I have given the gentleman the invitation.

Mr. GILDEA. I just wanted to make that statement.

Mr. RICH. In reference to employees, I may say that some employees are not altogether physically well qualified or mentally well qualified to be employed in any plant. In a plant which employs many people there are those who must be looked after; they cannot take care of themselves. We have some employees in that category whom we have tried our best to keep from going on relief, and we have done everything we possibly could for them. None of our employees are compelled to buy merchandise, as was stated, from the store company. That is not a true statement; and we have a cash pay twice a month for employees who do not give orders for more than they make to be deducted.

In the turmoil which is going on in industry today it is not unusual to have someone try to raise trouble. This seems to be in line with almost all organizations and business people now. Just this morning I received a letter from the Eskimo Knitting Mills, a letter which no doubt all Members of Congress have received, together with an attached letter to the mayor of Philadelphia, and I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that I may insert these two letters in the RECORD at this point. Read these letters for your own enlightement of what is going on in industry by the C. I. O.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The letters referred to follow:

ESKIMO KNITTING MILLS, INC.,
Philadelphia, Pa., June 25, 1937.

His Honor the Mayor, S. DAVIS WILSON,
City of Philadelphia, Pa.

DEAR MAYOR: Being acquainted with your reputation for fair play, I am writing this letter to acquaint you with a situation which has been giving us and our employees considerable worry, and which condition, I am quite sure, you will want to use your good office to remedy.

This company has been in business approximately 30 years; during past 3 years the owners have been able to draw only $30 to $40 per week, while the wages paid to skilled labor, mostly women, average from $30 to $50 per week, and unskilled labor $14 to $21 per week.

The above can easily be substantiated and you can appreciate that in our anxiety to treat our labor as well as possible we have always been satisfied with less for ourselves. We have employees here who have been with us for past 8 to 18 years, and the relations between them and the owners have always been very pleasant.

About 4 weeks ago, and since then, almost three times daily, the Committee for Industrial Organization organizers come to our plant, causing considerable annoyance to ourselves and our employees, gathering large crowds and through the use of large amplifiers they started to threaten our employees. We have asked both members of the Committee for Industrial Organization and also National Labor Board, in order to establish the desire of our employees as to an outside organization, to allow our employees to vote and decide for themselves just what they want to do, but we have been advised by the National Labor Board, due to no trouble at our factory, there is no necesaity for a vote, and members of the Committee for Industrial Organization frankly advise that they must work on our employees for a while in an endeavor to get them to join their organization before they ask for a vote.

Meanwhile our employees in their desire to find out their own wishes have taken a vote between themselves, without our cooperation or assistance, and have advised us that approximately 90 percent are against an outside organization; and meanwhile they have formed an organization of their own. Some of the few people, 8 or 10 out of a total of 92, that the C. I. O. organization have been able to get have admitted that they have been scared into signing with the C. I. O.

Since the constant effort of the C. I. O. organizers during the past 4 or 5 weeks in an endeavor to get workers from our organization has not at all changed the decision of the large majority of our employees, who definitely refuse to have anything to do with the C. I. O. organization, we certainly feel that they and ourselves should be left alone to do our work in peace and without having to worry that someone will constantly annoy us on way home or on way to work and in the shops.

I believe that you feel like I do. If there was any dissatisfaction here, the majority of our employees, after constant gruelling by the C. I. O., would have certainly joined with them by now; and, if they have not, should establish definitely that they do not want to.

In view of these facts, or any investigation that you may desire to make, is it not fair to request your assistance in keeping members of the C. I. O. organization away from our shops and employees?

Thanking you for an early reply, I am,

Yours very truly,

ESKIMO KNITTING MILLS,
J. ROSENFELD, Vice President.

ESKIMO KNITTING MILLS, INC.,
Philadelphia, Pa., June 28, 1937.

HON. ROBERT F. RICH,
Congressman from Pennsylvania, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am attaching hereto copy of letter which we have written to the mayor of Philadelphia and which will give you a rather clear picture of the position which hundreds of employers of labor have been placed in with the passing of the Wagner Labor Act. Not that the Wagner Labor Act is giving outside organizations, such as the C. I. O., the right to resort to such high-binding methods, and acts bordering on anarchism, but the fact that it is designed to give the employer no protection at all has opened up a wonderful opportunity for unscrupulous attorneys and organizers who are taking advantage of it for their own personal benefit and not for labor.

It may surprise you to know that an investigator for the National Labor Board has given us to understand that it makes no difference how our employees feel about it, the policy of the Board is to foster the C. I. O. organization, and we have been advised by the investigator of the National Labor Board that the best way to save ourselves any trouble is to agree to negotiate with the C. I. O. organization.

Please bear in mind, here is a company whose employees are and always have been perfectly satisfied; 5 weeks of the most unusual threats and coercion by C. I. O. organizers on our employees, and by that I mean coercion of the most unscrupulous type, threatening the employees and their families in their homes, etc., has not changed the minds of our employees, and up to the present day they are still rejecting any advances made by members of this organization that unless we agree to deal with them and allow them to organize our shops they threaten to bring here a crowd of pickets, people not employed by us, and call a strike in order to force the employees to join the organization.

In other words, we are placed in a position where we must sell out our employees to the C. I. O. organization; we must tell 90 percent of our employees, unless they join the C. I. O. organization, they will be out of jobs. You can just imagine how little respect we will command from our employees who, after 5 weeks of threats and coercion by members of the C. I. O. organization, are still refusing to have anything to do with this organization; were we to advise them now they must join this organization, if we are to keep open and allow them to work, and please bear in mind the instructions I have from a governmental agency, such as National Labor Board, are that we do just that, that we sell our employees to the C. I. O. organization. I really believe that if those who are responsible for legislation made a study of this particular situation in our plant, then an unbiased committee would learn a great deal about the great danger done to both industry and labor by the Wagner Labor Act as presently constituted as well as the interpretation and administration of this act by the National Labor Board.

If you were to sit here with me in my office and meet some of these organizers, none of whom I have met so far could speak plain English, and probably most of them are not even American citizens, I say, if you were to sit with me and listen to these men order us in our own office that unless we turn our employees over to them they will close us up and put around our plant hundreds of pickets, not of our employ but paid pickets, probably people out of employment at this time, you would realize that the best part of our time today cannot be given to proper management of our business or to obtaining sufficient business to keep our employees occupied, but it is given to defending ourselves against a host of anarchists who have been left to do as they please and who apparently will probably keep on doing it, for it is a profitable business for these organizers, until they are stopped by proper legislation and proper administration of such legislation.

I might say that we are heading for a new depression, a depression not caused by economic conditions but by uncertainty due to strikes encouraged by this new Wagner Labor Act and its administration. Large shipments of merchandise made by this company to wholesalers and retailers all over the country are being returned; it cannot be sold due to strike conditions, which means just this: that employees who have been working here steady for 3 years will soon have to be laid off for lack of work.

Quick action is needed; a revision of the Wagner Labor Act with teeth in it, a revision such as will give the employer some rights, and which will make it criminal for any organizer to exploit labor for his own personal and selfish benefit, is needed urgently in order to give business a feeling of security, if we are going to thwart this new depression which is in the making.

Please bear in mind that the Wagner Labor Act and its administration has encouraged hundreds of so-called attorneys previously specializing in the profession of ambulance chasing, also anarchists and Socialists who don't believe in work, to take up this new and very profitable field of C. I. O. organizing, and I believe that if an unbiased committee of Congress were to study this perplexed labor question, take a little time to investigate the prosperous condition of some of these organizers, you will discover the root of the trouble. I happen to know one of these organizers, an attorney of little past reputation, who now lives in the swellest apartment of the city, drives the finest cars, and whose champagne bills run into hundreds of dollars. I happened to see some of the champagne being delivered, and let me tell you it did not make me feel any too good knowing the conditions prevailing here at our plant, whence the money came for the purchase of these luxuries.

If a clause was incorporated in a revised labor act making it criminal for any organizer to collect for his services any more than the average pay per week received by the trade he is organizing, you will find out how soon this organizing business by selfish people will "go to the dogs"—you will have honest organization by labor itself.

Labor unions under strict Government supervision, regulating compensation of organizers, and assurance that funds collected by the union be kept strictly for the benefit of the employees who pay their dues—a union whose officers are made up of employees, and not professional organizers, and a union whose finances will be audited under Government supervision—will soon eliminate all the troubles we have been through during the past few months, because, remember, practically the entire labor trouble today starts, not with labor itself but with those who take advantage of labor for their own selfish benefit.

I am writing this for I know you are deeply interested in the welfare of this country and its people; I am sure if you knew the condition from both manufacturers' and labor's point of view you will appreciate the necessity of some quick action. The problem in our own plant, which is small, comparatively, will make an interesting study for you who I know are looking for a solution to this labor trouble. An unbiased committee studying this problem can obtain very interesting information from our records, from us, and from independent talks to our employees, and, based on such information, you will be in position to put into effect changes to the present law which will eliminate future labor troubles. The problem is too large and important. Future relations between employer and labor can be established on an honest and safe basis by studies in such plants as ours.

Yours very truly,

ESKIMO KNITTING MILLS,
J. ROSENFELD, Vice President.

Mr. RICH. I do not know anything about the Eskimo Knitting Mills and I am not campaigning for them, but I am only trying to convey to the Members just what is happening in industry today. They present their complaints to Congress. If the Wagner Labor Relations Board is going to try to get industry and labor together, it should do everything it can to help both labor and industry, not to crush industry and do everything that radical labor would have you do, and break down all industry. What can you gain by such action? Such cooperation is vitally necessary to the welfare of our country today in order to give people employment. This controversy is not all one-sided. When we think that people who want to work are prohibited from working, as they have been in some plants in Pennsylvania during the last month, then we as Members of Congress are not looking after the welfare of the people who are interested in jobs when we make it possible for such things to happen. Crush industry by tyrannical laws and you throw men out of jobs. Make proper changes in the Wagner Act at once before it is too late.

The right to work is as sacred to our tradition as the right to strike. I may say to the Members of Congress that people who operate industry have hearts just as big as have those who work in industry.

In almost every plant not more than 10 percent of the people who work are able or capable to operate or manage the plant. The 90 percent are dependent on the other 10 percent to give them employment. However, in the last year or two we have put such burdens and hardships on industry that many people in this country are willing to quit business. In fact, they are quitting; their opportunities are gone and there is no incentive to operate or expand business. They have come to the conclusion that the easiest thing to do is to give up and quit. That is fast becoming the situation. Is that what we in this Congress want to do, or do we want to help industry go along in order that it may give employment to the people of the country? Will we create jobs or will we destroy them by bad laws?

This is a serious question. This is no time to come in here and quibble and take one side of the situation against another. This is no time for us to be playing politics for our own personal advantage because we think more people will vote to reelect us to Congress if we side in with one side or the other. Now is the time we want to give to the problem the very best thought and consideration we possibly can for the sake of everybody in this country, in order that our country may be a better and a happier place in which to live. You must change the Wagner Act and get a competent Secretary of Labor at once, before it is too late.

I went up to the Boy Scout encampment last night and saw these young fellows, and thought what a fine thing it is for them to have the privilege of coming here to visit in Washington for the next week or 10 days. It is a trip and an experience they will never forget as long as they live. These are the boys who must carry on in the years to come. They are now being taught things that are manly, things that are upright, things that are going to make better citizens of them. If you Members of Congress have not already gone up to the encampment, go up some night during this coming week. It will be one of the finest experiences you have ever enjoyed, to have seen the beauty and the grandeur of the things they are trying to do to help these boys, and the boys to help themselves.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. It is a fine American organization.

Mr. RICH. One of the finest in the world. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, when we turn the Government over to these Boy Scouts in 20 years from now, will they find the freedom here in this country we have enjoyed during our lifetime? Will they find the Constitution governing our form of government? Will they find a House of Representatives, a Senate, composing the legislative branch of the Government? Will they find a President? Will they find a Supreme Court? My hope and prayer is that we can give to them a government such as our founders in 1776 intended that they should have. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I had desired to submit a unanimous-consent request, but I understand a number of other gentlemen also have unanimous-consent requests to propound, and that objection will be made. I have a very brief statement I would like to put in the RECORD for the information of the HOUSE, but if there are going to be any other requests I cannot submit mine.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 3259. An act for the relief of Laura E. Alexander;

H. R. 4795. An act to provide for a term of court at Livingston, Mont.;

H. R. 5394. An act to provide for the acquisition of certain lands for and the addition thereof to the Yosemite National Park, in the State of California, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 434. Joint resolution to amend the act entitled "An act to amend section 4471 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended."

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 2254. An act to amend section 460, chapter 44, title II, of the act entitled "An act to define and punish crimes in the District of Alaska, and to provide a code of criminal procedure for said District", approved March 3, 1899, as amended.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 3259. An act for the relief of Laura E. Alexander;

H. R. 4795. An act to provide for a term of court at Livingston, Mont.;

H. R. 5394. An act to provide for the acquisition of certain lands for, and the addition thereof to, the Yosemite National Park, in the State of California, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6635. An act to dispense with the necessity for insurance by the Government against loss or damage to valuables in shipment, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 434. Joint resolution to amend the act entitled "An act to amend section 4471 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended."

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until Tuesday, July 6, 1937, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold a public hearing in room 219, House Office Building, Wednesday, July 7, 1937, at 10 a. m., on H. R. 7158, to except yachts, tugs, towboats, and unrigged vessels from certain provisions of the act of June 25, 1936, as amended.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE—POSTPONED

The meeting of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce at 10 a. m., Wednesday, July 7, 1937, on H. R. 5182 and H. R. 6917—textile bills—is postponed until 10 a. m. Thursday, July 8, 1937.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

698. Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, a letter from the Attorney General, transmitting a draft of a bill to grant to defendants in criminal cases the right to appeal against the sentence if it is deemed that the sentence imposed is excessive, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. JONES: Committee on Agriculture. H. R. 7667. A bill to regulate commerce among the several States, with the Territories and possessions of the United States, and with foreign countries; to protect the welfare of consumers of sugars and of those engaged in the domestic sugar-producing industry; to promote the export trade of the United States; to raise revenue; and for other purposes; with amendment (Rept. No. 1179). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FORD of California: A bill (H. R. 7756) to provide for the establishment of one Infantry battalion of Negro troops as a part of the National Guard of the State of California; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WEARIN: A bill (H. R. 7757) to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. CASE of South Dakota: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 438) restoring the right of appeal to the Supreme Court in certain cases involving claims of the Sioux Indians; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. LAMNECK: A bill (H. R. 7758) for the relief of May Elizabeth Cook; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SPARKMAN: A bill (H. R. 7759) for the relief of Susan Lawrence Davis; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WEAVER: A bill (H. R. 7760) for the relief of W. N. Penland; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7761) for the relief of Sibbold Smith; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7762) for the relief of Kenneth G. Roberts; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DIXON: A bill (H. R. 7763) for the relief of the Bruckmann Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

2831. By Mr. CITRON: Petition of Labor's Non-Partisan League of Connecticut, endorsing the Black-Connery bill and another endorsing the President's Court proposals; to the Committee on Labor.

2832. By Mr. CURLEY: Petition of the New York County Lawyers' Association, recommending disapproval of House bill 11568, introduced by Congressman MURDOCK; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

2833. Also, petition of the New York County Lawyers' Association committee on Federal legislation, disapproving House bill 11563, introduced by Mr. BUCK; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

2834. Also, petition of the New York County Lawyers' Association, New York City, N. Y., recommending approval of Senate bill 1273, introduced by Senator COPELAND; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

2835. Also, petition of the New York County Lawyers' Association, New York City, urging disapproval of House bill 5421, introduced by Congressman FERNANDEZ; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

2836. By Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON: Petition of T. Jones, Red Oak, Tex., favoring the so-called agricultural adjustment bill now being considered by the Committee on Agriculture; to the Committee on Agriculture.

2837. Also, petition of R. W. Siegert, president of the Smetana Agricultural Association, Bryan, Tex., and Bomar Tapp, Waxahachie, Tex., favoring the so-called agricultural adjustment bill now being considered by the Committee on Agriculture; to the Committee on Agriculture.

SENATE

TUESDAY, JULY 6, 1937

Rev. Richard A. Cartmell, assistant rector, Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, the protector of all that trust in Thee, open our eyes, we beseech Thee, that we may behold that great cloud of witnesses which Thou hast compassed about us, of those whose faith in the right could brook no compromise with wrong, who saw beyond the present success to the inevitable victory of truth. Grant to us, O God, such a measure of that faith that we may run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith, who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God. Send down upon us assembled here in Thy presence, O Lord, the Light of Thy Being, that all our works begun, continued, and ended in Thee may have that fruition which it is Thine alone to give. Through the same Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Friday, July 2, 1937, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. LEWIS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Copeland	Johnson, Colo.	Pittman
Andrews	Davis	King	Pope
Ashurst	Dieterich	La Follette	Radcliffe
Austin	Duffy	Lee	Reynolds
Bankhead	Ellender	Lewis	Robinson
Barkley	Frazier	Lodge	Schwartz
Berry	George	Logan	Schwellenbach
Bilbo	Gerry	Lonergan	Sheppard
Black	Gillette	Lundeen	Shipstead
Bone	Glass	McAdoo	Steiwer
Borah	Green	McCarran	Thomas, Okla.
Brown, N. H.	Guffey	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Bulkley	Hale	McKellar	Townsend
Bulow	Harrison	McNary	Truman
Burke	Hatch	Minton	Tydings
Byrd	Hayden	Moore	Vandenberg
Capper	Herring	Murray	Van Nuys
Caraway	Hitchcock	Neely	Wagner
Chavez	Holt	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Clark	Hughes	Overton	Wheeler
Connally	Johnson, Calif.	Pepper	White

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] is detained from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], and the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are detained on important public business.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I announce that the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is absent because of illness.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that my colleague the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] is absent on official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-four Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

FEES IN PROBATE CASES, AMERICAN CONSULAR COURTS IN EGYPT

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a copy of an order issued on March 1, 1937, by the Minister of the United States to Egypt, with the assent of the several American consular officers in Egypt, prescribing the fees to be paid in probate cases in the American consular courts in Egypt.

This order has been issued by virtue of authority contained in section 5 of the act of Congress of June 22, 1860 (R. S. 4117, 4118; U. S. C., title 22, secs. 147, 148), and is transmitted to the Congress in compliance with the provisions of section 6 of the said act (R. S. 4119; U. S. C., title 22, sec. 148).

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 6, 1937.

[Enclosure: Order.]

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY AT WEST POINT MILITARY RESERVATION, N. Y.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize the transfer to the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Treasury of portions of the property within the West Point Military Reservation, N. Y., for the construction thereon of certain public buildings, and for other purposes, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

RELINQUISHMENT OF LAND IN FAVOR OF BLACKFEET TRIBE, MONTANA

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to relinquish in favor of the Blackfeet Tribe, of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, Mont., the interest in certain land acquired by the United States under the Federal reclamation laws, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

MIGRATION OF WORKERS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of Labor, transmitting, in response to Senate Resolution 298 (74th Cong; submitted by Mr. POPE), a preliminary report on the subject of migration of workers across State lines, and stating, in part, "The absence of any special appropriation for investigating this subject has made it impossible to survey and analyze the complex problems involved to the extent that is necessary for a final report with recommendations for legislation", which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

IRVIN H. JOHNSON

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting his report and recommendation concerning the claim of Irvin H. Johnson against the United States, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Minnesota, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to refrain from increasing the interest rate on loans made by the Farm Credit Administration

Whereas the Farm Credit Administration, an agency of the United States Government, has made innumerable loans to the farmers in this State over a period of the last few years; and

Whereas such loans have been made at low and reasonable interest rates, which have resulted in great and extensive benefits to those persons affected thereby; and

Whereas it has been proposed that the Congress of the United States increase the interest rate on loans made by the Farm Credit Administration; and

Whereas if such increase is made a great injustice will be done to many farmers who need financial assistance of the type offered by the Farm Credit Administration; and

Whereas such increase should not be made for a period of at least 5 years, during which period the farmers will have had an opportunity to readjust themselves financially: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives, That this body memorialize the Congress of the United States of America to refrain from increasing the interest rate on loans made by the Farm Credit Administration; be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the house of representatives be instructed to send copies of this resolution to both Houses of Congress and to each Member in Congress from the State of Minnesota.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

Joint resolution memorializing Congress to pass bill H. R. 6092, providing for reduction of interest rates of H. O. L. C. mortgages and extending the amortization periods thereon to 25 years

Whereas the number of foreclosures on Home Owners' Loan Corporation mortgages are steadily increasing; and

Whereas in most cases the immediate cause of foreclosure is the inability of the mortgagor to meet the periodic installment payments as they become due under the terms of the mortgage indenture; and

Whereas there is now pending before the Congress of the United States bill H. R. 6092, which seeks to enable the majority of Home Owners' Loan Corporation mortgagors to meet current obligations on their mortgages and retain their homes by reducing interest rates from 5 to 3½ percent and by extending the time for amortization from the present 10 and 15 years to 25 years on such mortgages; and

Whereas if bill H. R. 6092 becomes law it is apparent that many a small home owner will be saved from the clutches of foreclosure: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to pass bill H. R. 6092; and be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to both Houses of Congress and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Common Council of the City of Detroit, Mich., favoring the prompt enactment of the pending low-cost housing bill, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the national convention of the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce, assembled at Denver, Colo., favoring the creation in each House of Congress of a permanent committee on civil aeronautics, which was referred to the Committee on Rules.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Board of Aldermen of the City of New York, favoring the appropriation of sufficient funds to maintain the W. P. A. with its present employment level, except for persons who may be privately reemployed, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by San Francisco (Calif.) Bay Area District Council, No. 2, of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific Coast, favoring the carrying out of the present W. P. A. program without personnel cuts and the making of further appropriations therefor when current appropriations become exhausted, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WALSH presented a petition of sundry citizens of Dorchester and vicinity, in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of legislation abolishing the Federal Reserve System as at present constituted, and also praying that Congress exercise its constitutional right to coin money and regulate the value thereof, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Peabody (Mass.) Chamber of Commerce, favoring the placing of an increased tariff duty of 30 percent on cement-soled shoes based on American valuation of shoes delivered in the United States; also favoring a Tariff Commission investigation of the relative costs of manufacturing shoes in the United States and abroad, and protesting against the inclusion of shoes on the conference agenda for discussing a proposed trade treaty with Czechoslovakia, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. COPELAND, from the Committee on Commerce, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 2579. A bill to provide more effectively for the marking of wrecked and sunken craft for the protection of navigation, to improve the efficiency of the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 864);

H. R. 1961. A bill to authorize the conveyance by the United States to the State of Wisconsin of a portion of the Twin River Point Lighthouse Reservation, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 865); and

H. R. 5860. A bill making further provision for the fisheries of Alaska (Rept. No. 866).

Mr. BULOW, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2444) for the relief of William C. Willahan, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 867) thereon.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2060) to amend the Wisconsin Chippewa Jurisdictional Act of August 30, 1935 (49 Stat. L. 1049), reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 873) thereon.

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Special Committee on Conservation of Wildlife Resources, to which was referred the bill (S. 2670) to provide that the United States shall aid the States in wildlife-restoration projects, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 868) thereon.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2417) for the relief of Samuel L. Dwyer, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 869) thereon.

Mr. WHITE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2261) for the relief of Scott Hart, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 870) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 667) for the relief of William E. Jones, Walter M. Marston, William Ellery, Richard P. Hallowell, 2d, and Malcolm Donald as executors under the will of Frank W. Hallowell; and Malcolm Donald as executor under the will of Gordon Donald, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 871) thereon.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1514) for the relief of the Corbitt Co., reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 872) thereon.

NEW YORK WORLD'S FAIR

Mr. COPELAND. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 379) authorizing Federal participation in the New York World's Fair 1939, and I submit a report (No. 863) thereon.

Mr. President, as will be observed, this is the joint resolution which has to do with the New York World's Fair in 1939. It will be recalled that on a previous occasion the Senate passed a joint resolution for a similar purpose, which received a veto from the President. The President objected to the sum of money included in the measure and also to certain features of it which he thought made it unconstitutional. These defects have been remedied in the House. The amount of money appropriated has been cut down from $5,000,000 to $3,000,000 and the commissioner general is to be appointed by the President.

It is important that the bill be passed in order that the activities of the fair may go forward. The city of New York and others have contributed very large amounts to the fair, and, in order to have the aid of foreign governments, the good will of our Government is essential. So I ask unanimous consent that immediate consideration may be given to House Joint Resolution 379.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I favor this measure, having supported it in the committee. It is different from the measure that passed the Senate and the House 3 weeks ago. However, I am curious to know what the order of business will be today. Being Tuesday, the calendar does not automatically come before the Senate. We, of course, will have the routine morning business before any motion may be made by a Senator to proceed to the consideration of any measure on the calendar.

I have no objection, as I have said, to the consideration of the joint resolution if it be the policy during routine morning business of considering bills on the calendar. I shall be very happy to see this bill passed, but there should be some understanding as to what the Senate is going to do today.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I have no intention of asking for an agreement for the consideration of the calendar today. I have no objection to the consideration of the joint resolution reported by the Senator from New York. The time is approaching when legislation on the subject matter of the joint resolution should be acted upon in the Senate. I, therefore, make no objection to its consideration.

Mr. COPELAND. I hope the Senator from Oregon, under the circumstances, will permit action to be taken.

Mr. McNARY. Yes; I stated a moment ago that I would be very glad to have action taken in this case, but I wanted to know what would be the procedure in case other motions or requests were made of a similar nature.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 379) authorizing Federal participation in the New York World's Fair 1939, which is as follows:

Whereas there is to be held in the city of New York during the year 1939 a world's fair and celebration commemorating the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the inauguration of the first President of the United States of America and of the establishment of the Federal Government in the city of New York; and

Whereas the State and city of New York have provided a site and permanent public improvements adjacent to the site at an estimated cost of $18,000,000 and New York World's Fair, 1939, Inc., proposes to make available for such world's fair through the sale of its debentures to the public or otherwise a sum not less than $25,000,000; and

Whereas such world's fair and celebration are worthy and deserving of the support and encouragement of the United States; and the United States has aided and encouraged such world's fairs and celebrations in the past: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby established a Commission, to be known as the United States New York World's Fair Commission and to be composed of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of Labor, three Members of the House to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and three Members of the Senate to be appointed by the President of the Senate; which Commission shall serve without additional compensation and shall represent the United States in connection with the holding of a world's fair and celebration in the city of New York during the observance in the year 1939 of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the inauguration of the first President of the United States of America and of the establishment of the Federal Government in the city of New York.

SEC. 2. There shall be a United States Commissioner for the New York World's Fair, who shall be appointed by the President and who shall receive compensation at the rate of $10,000 per annum, and two Assistant Commissioners, not of the same political party, for said New York World's Fair, who shall be appointed by the Commissioner with the advice and approval of the Commission herein designated and shall receive compensation not to exceed $7,500 per annum. The salary and expenses of the Commissioner, the Assistant Commissioners, and such staff as the Commission may require, shall be paid out of the funds authorized to be appropriated by this joint resolution, for such period prior to the opening of the world's fair as the Commission may determine, for the duration of the world's fair, and for not more than 6 months after the official closing thereof.

SEC. 3. The Commission shall prescribe the duties of the United States Commissioner and shall delegate such powers and functions to him as it shall deem advisable in order that there may be exhibited at the New York World's Fair by the Government of the United States, its executive departments, independent offices, and establishments, such articles and materials and documents and papers as may relate to this period of our history and such as illustrate the function and administrative faculty of the Government in the advancement of industry, science, invention, agriculture, the arts, and peace, and demonstrating the nature of our institutions, particularly as regards their adaptation to the needs of the people.

SEC. 4. The Commission is authorized to appoint, without regard to the civil-service laws and regulations and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, such clerks, stenographers, and other assistants as may be necessary; purchase such materials, contract for such labor and other services as are necessary, including the preparation of exhibits plans: Provided, That the Commission may delegate such powers in its discretion. The Commissioner may exercise such powers as are delegated to him by the Commission as hereinbefore provided, and in order to facilitate the functioning of his office may subdelegate such powers (authorized or delegated), as may be deemed advisable by the Commission, to the Assistant Commissioners or others in the employ of or detailed to the Commission.

SEC. 5. The heads of the various executive departments and independent offices and establishments of the Government are authorized to cooperate with said Commissioner in the procurement, installation, and display of exhibits, and to lend to the New York World's Fair, with the knowledge and consent of said Commissioner, such articles, specimens, and exhibits as said Commissioner shall deem to be in the interest of the United States and in keeping with the purposes of such world's fair and celebration, to be placed with the science or other exhibits to be shown under the auspices of such New York World's Fair; to appoint without regard to civil-service laws and regulations and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, such draftsmen and other assistants as may be necessary; to contract for such labor or other services as shall be deemed necessary; and to designate officials or employees of their departments or branches to assist said Commissioner. At the close of the world's fair, or when the connection of the Government of the United States therewith ceases, said Commissioner shall cause all such property to be returned to the respective departments and branches concerned, and any expenses incident to the restoration, modification, and revision of such property to a condition which will permit its use at subsequent expositions and fairs, and for the continued employment of personnel necessary to close out the fiscal and other records and prepare the required reports of the participating organizations, may be paid from the appropriation authorized therein; and if the return of such property is not feasible, he may, with the consent of the Commission and the department or branch concerned, make such disposition thereof as he may deem advisable and account therefor.

SEC. 6. The sum of $3,000,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purposes of this joint resolution, and shall remain available until expended; except that, upon the termination of the Commission, any unexpended or unobligated balance shall be covered back into the Treasury of the United States. And, subject to the provisions of this joint resolution, the Commission is authorized to erect such building or buildings, or other structures, for its own use, and such other buildings and structures as will further the trade and good will between the United States and the other nations of the world, and to provide for the landscaping of the site or sites thereof; to rent such space without regard to the provisions of section 322 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412), as the Commission may deem adequate to carry out effectively the provisions of this joint resolution; to provide for the decoration of such buildings or structures, and for the proper maintenance of such buildings or structures, site, and grounds during the period deemed necessary by the Commission. The appropriation authorized by this joint resolution shall be available for the operation of the building or buildings, structure or structures, improvement or improvements, including light, heat, water, gas, janitor, and other required services; for the rental of space in the District of Columbia or elsewhere; for the selection, purchase, preparation, assembling, transportation, installation, arranging, safekeeping, exhibiting, demonstration, and return of such articles and materials as the Commission may decide shall be included in such Government exhibit and in the exhibits of the New York World's Fair; for the purchase of uniforms, for the compensation of said Commissioner, Assistant Commissioners, and other officers and employees of the Commission in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, for the payment of salaries of officers and employees of the Government employed by or detailed for duty with the Commission, for actual traveling expenses, including travel by air, and for per diem in lieu of actual subsistence at not to exceed $5 per day: Provided, That no Government official or employee detailed for duty with the Commission shall receive a salary in excess of the rate which he has been receiving in the department or branch where regularly employed; for telephone service, purchase or rental of furniture and equipment, stationery and supplies, typewriting, adding, duplicating, and computing machines, their accessories and repairs, books of reference and periodicals, maps, reports, documents, plans, specifications, manuscripts, newspapers, and all other appropriate publications, and ice and drinking water for office purposes: Provided further, That payment for telephone service, rents, subscriptions to newspapers and periodicals, and other similar purposes, may be made in advance; for the purchase and hire of passenger-carrying automobiles, their maintenance, repair, and operation, for the official use of said Commissioner and Assistant Commissioners in the District of Columbia or elsewhere as required; for printing and binding; for entertainment of distinguished guests; and for all other expenses as may be deemed necessary by the Commission to fulfill properly the purposes of this joint resolution. All purchases, expenditures, and disbursements of any moneys made available by authority of this joint resolution shall be made under the direction of the Commission: Provided further, That the Commission, without release of responsibility, as hereinbefore stipulated, may delegate these powers and functions: Provided further, That the Commission or its delegated representatives may allot funds appropriated herein to any executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government with the consent of the heads thereof, for direct expenditure by such executive department, independent office, or establishment under such regulations as the Commission may promulgate, for the purpose of defraying any proper expenditure which may be incurred by such executive department, independent office, or establishment in executing the duties and functions delegated by the Commission. All accounts and vouchers covering expenditures shall be approved by said Commissioner or by such assistants as the Commission may designate except for such allotments as may be made to the various executive departments, independent offices, and establishments for direct expenditure; but these provisions shall not be construed to waive the submission of accounts and vouchers to the General Accounting Office for audit, and permit any obligations to be incurred in excess of the amount authorized to be appropriated herein: And provided further, That in the construction of buildings and exhibits requiring skilled and unskilled labor, the prevailing rate of wages, as provided in the act of March 3, 1931, shall be paid. Subject to the provisions of this joint resolution, the Commission is authorized to make any expenditures or allotments deemed necessary by it to fulfill properly the purposes of this joint resolution.

SEC. 7. The Commissioner, with the approval of the Commission, may receive contributions from any source to aid in carrying out the purposes of this joint resolution, but such contributions shall be expended and accounted for in the same manner as the funds authorized to be appropriated by this joint resolution. The Commissioner is also authorized to receive contributions of material, or to borrow material or exhibits, and to accept the services of any skilled and unskilled labor that may be available through State or Federal relief organizations, to aid in carrying out the general purposes of this joint resolution. At the close of the world's fair and celebration or when the connection of the Government of the United States therewith ceases the Commissioner shall dispose of any such portion of the material contributed as may be unused, and return such borrowed property; and, under the direction of the Commission, dispose of any buildings or structures which may have been constructed and account therefor: Provided, That all disposition of materials, property, buildings, and so forth, shall be at public sale to the highest bidder, and the proceeds thereof shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States: Provided further, That the Commission may, if it deems it desirable and in the public interest, transfer without consideration and title to the Federal Exhibits Building erected or constructed to the city of New York.

SEC. 8. It shall be the duty of the Commission to transmit to Congress, within 6 months after the close of the world's fair, a detailed statement of all expenditures, and such other reports as may be deemed proper, which reports shall be prepared and arranged with a view to concise statement and convenient reference. Upon the transmission of such report to Congress the Commission established by and all appointments made under the authority of this joint resolution shall terminate.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from New York if the authorized amount of the appropriation made in the joint resolution is $3,000,000?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. In the previous measure it was $5,000,000?

Mr. COPELAND. It was.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I have not seen the joint resolution at all, but the objection to the measure heretofore passed was that it was unconstitutional because of the delegation of authority in connection with the United States Commissioner's appointment.

Mr. COPELAND. That is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Is the commissioner now authorized to be appointed by the President?

Mr. COPELAND. The Commissioner General is to be appointed by the President. The Senator will recall that the other measure delegated to the Commission itself the power to appoint the Commissioner General. The President objected, and I think very properly.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Does that obviate the objection which was made against the prior measure?

Mr. COPELAND. That was the objection to the previous joint resolution, and it has been removed in this measure.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I am in hearty agreement with the joint resolution submitted by the Senator from New York. Congress last year was pretty generous in an appropriation to my State for a similar purpose. I think it accomplished a great deal of good in the way of education and as a matter of historic value. I am sure this appropriation will serve similar purposes for New York.

I think the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] was correct that one of the objections to the previous measure was that it was a legislative invasion of the executive function. I think that was a valid objection. It seems to me highly important that we should respect the executive function, and that the Executive should respect the legislative function, and that both should respect the judicial function.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, does not the Senator think it is time for the Department of Justice to direct its energies and efforts to a consideration of the question of separating the powers under the Constitution of the Government of the United States?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Texas. I was glad to support the appropriation for the Texas exposition. The questions involved were all canvassed in the House, and I am assured by those in authority at the other end of the Capitol that the joint resolution is now in conformity with the wishes of the administration. I trust that it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no amendments to be proposed, the question is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ROBINSON:

A bill (S. 2746) to provide for tuberculosis hospitals and their operation; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. McGILL:

A bill (S. 2747) to provide funds for the initiation of a mapping program in the State of Kansas; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. BORAH:

A bill (S. 2748) granting a pension to Leroy S. Vader (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 2749) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Francis Holliday Carson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GILLETTE and Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 2750) to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

EXERCISE OF TRUST POWERS BY BANKS—AMENDMENTS

Mr. HERRING (for himself and Mr. TOWNSEND) submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them to the bill (S. 2344) to provide for the regulation of the sale of certain securities in interstate and foreign commerce, and the trust indentures under which the same are issued, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed.

INVESTIGATION OF RADIO BROADCASTING

Mr. WHITE. I submit a resolution authorizing an investigation and study of the broadcasting industry, of broadcasting in the United States, and of interstate and foreign communications by radio, and ask its reference to the Interstate Commerce Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be received and referred as requested by the Senator from Maine.

The resolution (S. Res. 149) was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, as follows:

Whereas the Communications Act of 1934 declared it to be the purpose of Congress—

(a) To maintain the control of the United States over all the channels of interstate and foreign radio transmission; to provide for the use of such channels, but not the ownership thereof, by persons for limited periods of time under licenses granted by Federal authority, and that no such licenses should be construed to create any right beyond the terms, conditions, and periods thereof;

(b) That no station license should be granted until the applicant therefor had signed a waiver of any claim to the use of any particular frequency or of the ether as against the regulatory power of the United States because of the previous use of such frequency;

(c) That there should be no transfer or assignment of a station license or the frequency authorized to be used without the consent in writing of the licensing authority, to the end that technical considerations, citizenship, character, the financial, and other qualifications of a transferee or assignee should be taken into account in determining whether a transferee or assignee possessed the statutory qualifications of a license holder and that his use of a frequency would be in the public interest;

(d) That the people of the different States and the communities thereof should have efficient and equitable radio service;

(e) That broadcasting licenses should not be for a longer term than 3 years, but with the right of the Commission to grant a renewal from time to time upon the same considerations which justified the original license;

(f) That the Commission should include in the license granted to a licensee engaged in foreign communication such of the terms, conditions, or restrictions which the President might impose with respect to cable licenses under the act relating to the landing and operation of submarine cables in the United States, approved May 27, 1921, as would make certain just and reasonable rates and service and that a licensee should not enjoy exclusive rights of operation;

(g) That all laws of the United States relating to unlawful restraints and monopolies and to combinations, contracts, and agreements in restraint of trade should be applicable to the manufacture and sale of and trade in radio apparatus and devices entering into or affecting interstate or foreign radio communication, and that should any licensee be guilty of any violation of such laws his license should be revoked;

(h) That a station license should be refused any person unlawfully monopolizing or attempting unlawfully to monopolize radio communication through control of the manufacture or sale of radio apparatus, through exclusive traffic arrangements, or by any other means, or to any person having used unfair methods of competition;

(i) That there should be no combination between wire companies and radio companies if the purpose or effect thereof was to lessen competition in interstate or foreign communication; and

Whereas it has been charged among other things and is believed by many persons that rights in frequencies beyond the terms of licenses are being asserted by the holders thereof and recognized by the Federal Communications Commission; that licenses, though in form limited in time as provided by law, and the frequencies therein granted, are being treated by the holders and the users thereof and by the Commission as though granted for much longer terms than designated in the licenses; that the licensing authority has in effect recognized vested property rights of great value in licenses and in frequencies contrary to the letter and spirit of the law; that by various devices and means control of licenses and of frequencies have passed to others than the original licensee without the written approval of the Commission or with Commission approval given in disregard of congressional purpose; that persons and companies have been engaged in the acquisition and sale of broadcasting stations, licenses, and frequencies; that the licensing authority has permitted concentration of stations in some parts of the country and has failed to give equitable radio service to the people of the several States and the communities thereof; that with the approval of the Commission there has come about a monopolistic concentration of ownership or control of stations in the chain companies of the United States that through exclusive traffic arrangements and otherwise monopolistic control of the facilities of foreign communication by radio is being accomplished, and that the acts and attitude of the Commission are aiding and encouraging such monopoly; that the Commission in its decision of causes disregards its own rules and standards; that in the determination of matters before it the Commission has been affected and controlled by political and other influences not contemplated by statute and not entitled to consideration by a regulatory and quasi-judicial body; and that it has failed to observe and effectuate the purposes of the Congress and the laws enacted by it in the foregoing and other respects: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce is authorized and directed to make a thorough and complete investigation of the broadcasting industry in the United States and of broadcasting, and of the acts, rules, regulations, and policies of the Federal Communications Commission with respect to broadcasting and to report to the Senate the results thereof.

In particular, but not to the exclusion of other matters, the said committee is authorized and directed to make and to report to the Senate the results of an investigation and study of—

(1) The cases, if any, in which the Commission has departed from or has modified the application of its regulations and the engineering and other standards generally observed by it, together with the reasons for each such departure or modification;

(2) All acts by the Commission which recognize or seem to recognize the right of a licensee to a license or a frequency other than as specified in the terms, conditions, and time of the license;

(3) Whether the acts and decisions of the Commission in broadcasting cases have been influenced by matters not apparent in the public records;

(4) The geographical distribution of broadcasting facilities and whether there is an equitable distribution of broadcast service to all parts of the country; and if not, what steps should be taken to provide fair and equitable service throughout the United States;

(5) The extent to which broadcast stations have been concentrated in the larger communities of the country by transfer of stations from smaller communities to such centers or otherwise;

(6) The extent to which and the circumstances under which the ownership, control, management, or interest in more than a single broadcast station has passed into the hands of any person or group of persons;

(7) The circumstances surrounding and the considerations for the voluntary transfer of station licenses or construction permits;

(8) Instances of the transfer of minority interests in broadcasting-station licensees, and all transactions directly or indirectly affecting the control of such licensees, and whether said transfers have or have not been submitted to the Commission for approval and have received Commission approval or acquiescence;

(9) The sale price of any broadcasting station in any manner sold and transferred, together with a statement of the fair value of the physical assets and of other property, rights, contracts, and licenses involved in said sales, and in particular the value placed by the parties to the transaction upon the frequency licensed to be used;

(10) The sale of stock or other securities of any broadcasting stations, of any licensees, or of any person or persons directly or indirectly controlling such licensees, and the valuation put by the person transferring the same upon the station license or the frequency, the power or the hours of operation fixed in the station license, and the circumstances surrounding and the consideration for such sales and transfers and as to the participation in the negotiations for such sales and transfers by any person other than the seller and purchaser, the transferor and the transferee;

(11) The licensing of broadcast stations to persons other than the owners of the physical equipment, and in particular all cases involving the leasing of transmitting equipment;

(12) The surrender of control of facilities by licensees including all agreements to accept proffered programs with or without supervision by the licensee;

(13) All acts or assertions by broadcast station licensees which involve the claim to any right or interest beyond the terms, conditions, and periods of the license;

(14) Whether considerations have been paid or promised to any licensee or permittee for not interposing objection to an application for all or a part of his facilities or for other facilities which could not be granted without disregard for the Commission's rules or its standards except with the consent of such licensee or permittee;

(15) All cases in which persons whose applications for the renewal of a broadcasting license have been refused by the Commission, have received from persons licensed to use the facilities for which renewal of license has been refused, money or other consideration in excess of the value of the physical equipment taken off the air and sold to the new licensee;

(16) Cases in which the real parties in interest in any application for broadcast facilities have not been disclosed to the Commission;

(17) The extent to which holding or other intermediate companies or persons have been employed in the ownership or control of broadcast stations and the effect of such intermediate ownership or control upon the effective regulation of broadcasting;

(18) The investments by licensees in the stations authorized to be operated by them, including the investment in equipment and in other items of cost;

(19) The charges for the use of station facilities and the profit or loss resulting therefrom;

(20) The extent to which broadcast stations are used to build up other businesses or enterprises in which the station licensees or persons financially interested in the licensees are engaged; the extent to which the facilities of broadcast stations are refused or are granted conditionally to competitors of such other businesses or enterprises, and the effect of the ownership and use of such radio facilities upon the businesses of those in competition with the businesses of those having the radio facilities;

(21) The extent to which broadcast stations are owned or controlled by or are affiliated with newspapers or other media of information or entertainment, and the effect of such ownership, control, or affiliation upon competing newspapers not possessing such facilities and upon the public interest;

(22) The development and present facts concerning broadcasting networks or chains, including the effects of chain association upon the licensee's control over his station;

(23) The effect of chain operations upon the financial results and status of chain-affiliated stations and independent stations, the ability of the chain-owned or affiliated station to render a local service, both sustaining and commercial and the duplication of broadcast programs; and the desirability of special regulations governing chains and stations engaged in chain broadcasting;

(24) The extent to which licensees of broadcast stations censor or refuse programs offered to them for transmission and the reasons for and the effects of such censorship or refusal;

(25) The extent to which, the basis upon which, and the times at which broadcast stations carry programs relating to public affairs, education, religion, labor, agriculture, charity, and public service generally;

(26) The extent to which and basis upon which broadcast stations carry programs offered by or on behalf of candidates for public office or programs relating to controversial subjects in the field of National, State, or local politics; and

(27) The extent to which, the basis upon which, the manner in which, and the times at which broadcast stations are used for commercial programs, including programs advertising products claimed to have medicinal or therapeutic value and programs relating to products or services, the sale or use of which may be illegal in any State in which the programs of the station carrying such programs may be received, the time given by the several classes of stations to commercial advertising or sales talk in the programs broadcast, and whether there should be control or regulation of advertising by radio and the character and extent thereof;

Said committee is further authorized and directed to make and report to the Senate the facts with respect to:

(1) Competition between wire companies in communication between the United States and foreign countries, between radio companies in such foreign communication, and between wire and radio companies in this field of foreign communication.

(2) Instances in which the Commission has granted licenses for transmission in foreign communication or has refused or withheld action upon applications for licenses and frequencies in this field of communication, and whether such action by the Commission or its nonaction, has been with the purpose or has had the effect of aiding one company in this branch of communications or of destroying or lessening competition between American companies in foreign communication.

(3) The extent to which companies engaged in radio communication between the United States and any foreign country have entered into exclusive traffic arrangements or other agreements with the purpose or effect of securing a monopoly in such communication or of lessening competition therein and the effect of such arrangements or agreements upon competing American companies.

Said committee is further authorized and directed to make a study of the policies and principles which should be declared and made effective in legislation providing for the regulation and control of the radio industry, of broadcasting, and of interstate and foreign communication by radio.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places, either in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate in the Seventy-fifth Congress, to employ such experts, and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production and impounding of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths and to take such testimony and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per 100 words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed , shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

DEMOCRACY WILL KEEP THE FAITH—ADDRESS BY SENATOR DUFFY

[Mr. BARKLEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Senator DUFFY on the White House Ellipse at the Fourth of July celebration in Washington, D. C., which appears in the Appendix.]

INDUSTRY AND LABOR—ADDRESS BY SECRETARY ROPER

[Mr. MCKELLAR asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered over the radio on July 5, 1937, by Hon. Daniel C. Roper on the subject Industry and Labor—Their Mutual Problems, which appears in the Appendix.]

SAN JACINTO MEMORIAL MONUMENT—ADDRESS BY JESSE H. JONES

[Mr. SHEPPARD asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Hon. Jesse H. Jones at the laying of the cornerstone of the San Jacinto Memorial Monument on Apr. 21, 1937, the one hundred and first anniversary of Texas independence, which appears in the Appendix.]

AMERICA'S ROLE IN INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS, AND THE DOMESTIC LABOR CRISIS

[Mr. DAVIS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial appearing in the Philadelphia Inquirer of July 6, 1937, entitled "America Has Learned Her Lesson", and an editorial appearing in the same paper on July 2, 1937, entitled "What Are They Waiting For?" which appear in the Appendix.]

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed——

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CLARK. Is the calendar to be called?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The calendar is not subject to call today. Today not being Monday, a motion to take up any bill is in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1392) to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, the question is debatable.

Mr. ROBINSON. I make the point of order that during the morning hour the question is not debatable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MCNARY. That is correct. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MCNARY. If the motion made by the able Senator from Arkansas is agreed to, the President's bill then would be before the Senate for consideration. If a substitute should be offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], it also would be before the Senate, and both the original bill and the substitute of the Senator from Kentucky would be open to amendment. Is that correct?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If a substitute should be offered to the bill, both the substitute and the original text would be open to amendment.

Mr. MCNARY. That is my understanding. If the substitute should be adopted, it would then be too late to offer any amendments to the substitute?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct.

Mr. MCNARY. All amendments to the bill and substitute, therefore, must be offered before action is taken on the substitute to be proposed by the Senator from Kentucky?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the rule.

Mr. MCNARY. Is it the purpose of the Senator from Arkansas to proceed without reference to any other legislation until the final disposition of the bill which he now moves to make the unfinished business?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it is my intention to have the bill known as the Court reorganization bill made the unfinished business. I cannot at this juncture say that it will be proceeded with without reference to other legislation. The fact is the question is rather an unusual one. I shall reserve, of course, the right to object to the consideration of other legislation while the Court bill is the unfinished business. I do not announce in advance that I shall object to the consideration of other proposed legislation.

Mr. MCNARY. Specifically I had in mind some proposed legislation that may be pressing and of an emergent character. Would the Senator be willing to lay aside temporarily the unfinished business and take up such bills for consideration?

Mr. ROBINSON. If emergency measures are presented, I shall not object to laying aside the unfinished business for their consideration. However, I shall reserve full freedom to determine what, in my judgment, is an emergency measure.

Mr. McNARY. Would the Senator from Arkansas be willing to adjourn from day to day in order that the Senate might enjoy the privilege of having routine morning business and a call of the calendar?

Mr. ROBINSON. I cannot answer that inquiry at this juncture. If a filibuster develops, as has been threatened, I shall then take the course, so far as I am concerned, which judgment prompts. I shall not commit myself now to any policy that would be in aid of a threatened filibuster.

Mr. McNARY. Is it the purpose of the Senator from Arkansas to proceed with the consideration of the Court bill today, or the amendment to be offered in the nature of a substitute, and is it his desire and purpose to hold a session of the Senate tomorrow?

Mr. ROBINSON. It is my intention to ask the Senate to be in session tomorrow. I feel that there is no justification whatever for suspending the public business, under the conditions which now prevail, in order that Members may have an opportunity of attending a baseball game. I know there are a great many Senators who would like to attend the ball game, and they are at liberty to do so, with the understanding that they may be sent for if a quorum should not develop.

We have been at leisure quite a long while. My difficulty has been in keeping measures of importance before the Senate for the consideration of this body because of the delay on the part of standing committees of the Senate in submitting reports.

Of that no complaint is to be made at this time. The committees for the most part have been hard at work and have reported in most instances as promptly as was practicable.

However, considering the advanced stage of the session and the fact that it has been heralded throughout the Nation that those who are opposed to the Court reorganization bill in any form have the intention of obstructing business, of preventing the Senate from registering its opinion, I now announce that it is my intention, so far as I am able to do so and so far as I have support in that purpose, to keep the bill before the Senate, when it is taken up, until it is disposed of, making reasonable allowance for such emergency measures as may be brought to the attention of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Copeland	Johnson, Colo.	Pittman
Andrews	Davis	King	Pope
Ashurst	Dieterich	La Follette	Radcliffe
Austin	Duffy	Lee	Reynolds
Bankhead	Ellender	Lewis	Robinson
Barkley	Frazier	Lodge	Schwartz
Berry	George	Logan	Schwellenbach
Bilbo	Gerry	Lonergan	Sheppard
Black	Gillette	Lundeen	Shipstead
Bone	Glass	McAdoo	Steiwer
Borah	Green	McCarran	Thomas, Okla.
Brown, N. H.	Guffey	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Bulkley	Hale	McKellar	Townsend
Bulow	Harrison	McNary	Truman
Burke	Hatch	Minton	Tydings
Byrd	Hayden	Moore	Vandenberg
Capper	Herring	Murray	Van Nuys
Caraway	Hitchcock	Neely	Wagner
Chavez	Holt	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Clark	Hughes	Overton	Wheeler
Connally	Johnson, Calif.	Pepper	White

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1392.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bill (S. 1392) to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, which had been reported adversely from the Committee on the Judiciary, with amendments.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, with the approval of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the pending bill, and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment, in the nature of a substitute, will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause, and to insert in lieu thereof the following amendment in the nature of a substitute:

TITLE I

SECTION 1. Section 215 of the Judicial Code of the United States is hereby repealed and reenacted to read as follows:

"SEC. 215. The Supreme Court of the United States shall consist of a Chief Justice and eight Associate Justices, any six of whom shall constitute a quorum: Provided, however, The number of Justices may be increased by the appointment of an additional Justice in the manner now provided for the appointment of Justices, for each Justice, including the Chief Justice, who at the time of the nomination has reached the age of 75 years, but not more than one appointment of an additional Justice as herein authorized shall be made in any calendar year: Provided, That the authority to appoint for any calendar year shall not lapse by reason of the rejection of the nomination, delay in confirmation, inability to nominate during an adjournment of the Senate or withdrawal of the nomination in a succeeding calendar year; and when such additional Justice, or Justices, shall have been so appointed no vacancy caused by the death, resignation, or retirement of a Justice (except the Chief Justice) who has reached the age of 75 years, shall be filled, unless the filling of such vacancy is necessary to maintain at not less than nine the number of Justices who have not reached the age of 75. The number of appointments so made shall not, at any time, increase the total number of Justices by more than two-thirds of the permanent membership of the Court. If the number of members of the Supreme Court is in excess of nine not less than two-thirds of the membership shall constitute a quorum. As used in this section, the term 'Justice' shall not include a Justice who has retired from regular, active service."

SEC. 2. (a) An additional judge of any court of the United States other than the Supreme Court may be appointed, in the manner now provided by law, and to the same court, for each judge, appointed to hold his office during good behavior, who at the time of nomination of the additional judge has reached the age of 70 years.

(b) The number of judges of any such court shall be increased by the number appointed thereto under the provisions of subsection (a) of this section, but no vacancy shall be created by the death, resignation, or retirement of a judge of such court (other than a Chief Justice) whose continuance in office has occasioned the appointment of an additional judge. No appointment shall be made under subsection (a) which at any one time would result in (1) more than 20 judges in regular active service, in addition to those otherwise authorized by law, or (2) an addition of more than 2 judges to the number otherwise authorized by law to be appointed to any circuit court of appeals, the Court of Claims, the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, or the United States Customs Court, or (3) more than twice the number of judges otherwise authorized by law to be appointed for any district or, in the case of judges appointed for more than one district, for any such group of districts.

(c) Three-fifths of the judges of each of the following courts shall constitute a quorum thereof: The United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, the Court of Claims, and the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals.

(d) An additional judge shall not be appointed under the provisions of this section when the judge who has reached the age of 70 years is commissioned to an office as to which Congress has provided that a vacancy shall not be filled.

SEC. 3. (a) Any circuit judge may be designated and assigned from time to time by the Chief Justice of the United States for general service in the circuit court of appeals for any circuit. Any district judge may be designated and assigned from time to time by the Chief Justice of the United States for general service in any district court, or, subject to the authority of the Chief Justice, by the senior circuit judge of his circuit for service in any district court within the circuit. A district judge designated and assigned to another district hereunder may hold court separately and at the same time as the district judge in such district. All designations and assignments made hereunder shall be filed in the office of the clerk and entered on the minutes of both the court from and to which a judge is designated and assigned, and thereafter the judge so designated and assigned shall be authorized to discharge all the judicial duties (except the power of appointment to a statutory position or of permanent designation of a newspaper or depository of funds) of a judge of the court to which he is designated and assigned. The designation and assignment of a judge shall not impair his authority to perform such judicial duties of the court to which he was commissioned as may be necessary or appropriate. The designation and assignment of any judge may be terminated at any time by order of the Chief Justice or the senior circuit judge, as the case may be.

(b) After the designation and assignment of a judge by the Chief Justice, the senior circuit judge of the circuit in which such judge is commissioned may certify to the Chief Justice any consideration which such senior circuit judge believes to make advisable that the designated judge remain in or return for service in the court to which he was commissioned. If the Chief Justice deems the reasons sufficient he shall revoke, or designate the time of termination of, such designation and assignment.

(c) In case a trial or hearing has been entered upon but has not been concluded before the expiration of the period of service of a district judge designated and assigned hereunder, the period of service shall, unless terminated under the provisions of subsection (a) of this section, be deemed to be extended until the trial or hearing has been concluded. Any designated and assigned district judge who has held court in another district than his own shall have power, notwithstanding his absence from such district and the expiration of any time limit in his designation, to decide all matters which have been submitted to him within such district, to decide motions for new trials, settle bills of exceptions, certify or authenticate narratives of testimony, or perform any other act required by law or the rules to be performed in order to prepare any case so tried by him for review in an appellate court; and his action thereon in writing filed with the clerk of the court where the trial or hearing was had shall be as valid as if such action had been taken by him within that district and within the period of his designation. Any designated and assigned circuit judge who has sat on another court than his own shall have power, notwithstanding the expiration of any time limit in his designation, to participate in the decision of all matters submitted to the court while he was sitting and to perform or participate in any act appropriate to the disposition or review of matters submitted while he was sitting on such court, and his action thereon shall be as valid as if it had been taken while sitting on such court and within the period of his designation.

(d) When any judge is assigned to duty outside of his district or circuit his subsistence allowance shall be $10 per diem.

SEC. 4 (a) The Supreme Court shall have power to appoint a Proctor. It shall be his duty (1) to obtain and, if deemed by the Court to be desirable, to publish information as to the volume, character, and status of litigation in the district courts and circuit courts of appeals, and such other information as the Supreme Court may from time to time require by order, and it shall be the duty of any judge, clerk, or marshal of any court of the United States promptly to furnish such information as may be required by the Proctor; (2) to investigate the need of assigning district and circuit judges to other courts and to make recommendations thereon to the Chief Justice; (3) to recommend, with the approval of the Chief Justice, to any court of the United States methods for expediting cases pending on its dockets; and (4) to perform such other duties consistent with his office as the court shall direct.

(b) The Proctor shall, by requisition upon the Public Printer, have any necessary printing and binding done at the Government Printing Office, and authority is conferred upon the Public Printer to do such printing and binding.

(c) The salary of the Proctor shall be $10,000 per annum, payable out of the Treasury in monthly installments, which shall be in full compensation for the services required by law. He shall also be allowed, in the discretion of the Chief Justice, stationery, supplies, travel expenses, equipment, necessary professional and clerical assistance, and miscellaneous expenses appropriate for performing the duties imposed by this section. The expenses in connection with the maintenance of his office shall be paid from the appropriation of the Supreme Court of the United States.

SEC. 5. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 6. When used in this act—

(a) The term "circuit court of appeals" includes the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia; the term "senior circuit judge" includes the chief justice of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia; and the term "circuit" includes the District of Columbia.

(b) The term "district court" includes the District Court of the District of Columbia but does not include the district court in any Territory or insular possession.

(c) The term "judge" includes justice and the term "chief justice" shall include the presiding judge of the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals.

TITLE II

SECTION 101. Whenever in any court of the United States in any suit or proceeding to which the United States or any agency thereof or any officer or employee thereof, as such officer or employee, is not a party, the constitutionality of any statute of the United States is drawn in question, the court having jurisdiction of the suit or proceeding shall certify such fact to the Attorney General if the court is of opinion that a substantial ground exists for questioning the constitutionality of the statute. The court shall afford the United States an opportunity for presentation of evidence (if evidence is otherwise receivable in such suit or proceeding) and argument. In the suit or proceeding the United States shall, subject to the applicable provisions of law, have the same rights as a party to the extent necessary for a proper presentation of the facts and law relating to the constitutionality of the statute and shall have the right to become a party to such proceeding, case, or controversy.

SEC. 102. Whenever any judgment, decree, or order in any suit or proceeding referred to in section 101 is based in whole or in part upon a decision that any statute of the United States is unconstitutional as therein applied, the United States, irrespective of whether or not it had previously presented evidence or argument under the provisions of section 101 shall have the same right to appeal therefrom as any party to the suit or proceeding. Within 60 days after the entry of any such judgment, decree, or order, whether final or interlocutory, the United States may also appeal therefrom directly to the Supreme Court, in which event any appeal or cross-appeal therefrom by any party to the suit or proceeding taken previously or taken within 60 days after notice of the appeal by the United States shall also be treated as taken directly to the Supreme Court. Such appeals to the Supreme Court shall, on motion of the United States, be advanced to a speedy hearing. This section shall not confer upon the United States any right of review by the Supreme Court unless a party to the suit or proceeding also takes an appeal.

SEC. 103. Within 60 days after the entry of any judgment, decree, or order referred to in section 102, the United States, irrespective of whether or not it had previously presented evidence or argument under the provisions of section 101, may appeal therefrom directly to the Supreme Court. Such appeals will lie if no appeal is taken by any party to the suit or proceeding and such appeals shall, on motion of the United States, be advanced to a speedy hearing. If the United States appeals to the Supreme Court under the provisions of section 102, but no appeal is taken by any party to the suit or proceeding, the appeal of the United States shall be regarded as an appeal under this section. If this section, or any provision thereof, is held invalid, the remainder of this act and the other provisions of this section shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 104. In any suit or proceeding in any court of the United States to which the United States or any agency thereof or any officer or employee thereof, as such officer or employee, is a party, in which the decision is against the constitutionality of any statute of the United States, the United States, within 60 days after the entry of a final or interlocutory judgment, decree, or order, may, in its discretion, in its own name or in the name of such agency, officer, or employee, as the case may be, appeal therefrom directly to the Supreme Court, in which event any appeal or cross appeal by any party to the suit or proceeding taken previously or taken within 60 days after notice of the appeal by the United States shall also be or be treated as taken directly to the Supreme Court. Such appeals shall, on motion of the United States, be advanced to a speedy hearing. This section shall not apply to any judgment, decree, or order of a district court of the United States which may, under existing provisions of law, be appealed directly to the Supreme Court.

SEC. 105. The Attorney General is authorized by himself or by counsel designated by him, to appear and argue in cases described in section 101, and to invoke appellate jurisdiction in cases described in sections 102, 103, and 104.

SEC. 106. As used in this title, the term "court of the United States" means the courts of record of Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico, the Customs Court, the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, the Court of Claims, the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, any district court of the United States, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, any circuit court of appeals, and the Supreme Court.

SEC. 107. If any provision of this title, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provisions to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, those who have collaborated in the preparation of the substitute amendment, particularly including the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], and myself, have had in mind the criticisms which have been directed in public addresses, and in news and magazine articles, against the original bill, presented by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, very shortly after the President sent to the Congress his message on this important subject.

As everyone who hears me realizes, there has been great diversity of opinion not only among those who are opposed to any legislation providing for the reorganization of the Federal courts, but also among those who feel that conditions justify, if they do not require, a change in our statutes relating to the questions at issue.

THE SUBSTITUTE

The substitute amendment provides for the appointment of one Justice in each calendar year in relation to such Justices of the Supreme Court as may be serving after they have reached the age of 75 years. There seems to be widespread if not general or universal sentiment in favor of the retirement of Justices who have attained that age. It is not that all men who reach 75 lose their powers of reasoning or of judgment, but it is that by common acceptance those who have passed beyond 75 usually are in a state of mental and physical decline. Our statutes have recognized the wisdom and the necessity for judges who have the physical vigor to perform the tasks that are assigned to them. Heretofore provision has been made for voluntary retirement at the age of 70 years, and that policy has not only been approved in general public opinion but it has been advocated by some Justices of the Supreme Court who now have passed far beyond 70 years, and who quite naturally are unable to apply to themselves the theory and the doctrine they have sought to apply to other judges.

The statute, as proposed in the pending amendment in the nature of a substitute, permits the appointment by the President of one additional Justice of the Supreme Court in each calendar year where a Justice or Justices are serving beyond the age of 75. I know it has been said by some, and I expect that it will be repeated in the memorable debate that is to follow my statement, that the principle incorporated in this legislation in the particular to which I am now referring is erroneous, that it is disregardful of the spirit of the Federal Constitution, that it tends to give to the President dictatorial powers. Later, during the course of the debate, it may be my privilege to elaborate the arguments which appear to me consistently to refute that contention. It suffices for my purpose on this occasion to say that during the course of this prolonged controversy Senators who lead the opposition to any legislation have introduced constitutional amendments substantially conforming to the provisions of this bill.

No moral or legal reason can be assigned in justification to resorting to the complicated and difficult process of constitutional amendment in preference to the legislative process if it appears that the legislative proposal is itself within the Constitution. I make the declaration now, in order that it may be considered by those who oppose the position I take, that no serious question has been raised by any lawyer, either in this body or in the country at large, that it is within the power of the Congress to enact the legislation contemplated in the proposed substitute; and, if that be true, then the only question left in that particular is one of policy. Manifestly it is neither necessary nor desirable to resort to the slow and difficult process of amending the Constitution if substantially the same ends may be brought about by the enactment of legislation.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, does the Senator care to yield at this time just on that point?

Mr. ROBINSON. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Nebraska, with the understanding that the Senator wishes to ask a question, and is not engaging in a filibuster. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. I shall have to leave that to the Senator's own judgment.

On the question of power, does the Senator realize any distinction between the power of Congress to increase the size of the Court, say, from 9 to 11, or any other number, and the power to place it within the discretion of an outside party—a member of the Court—as to whether the Court shall or shall not be increased? In other words, is it not true that under this substitute, as under the original bill, it is not Congress that increases the size of the Court at all, but members of the Court, who, by electing to stay on the Court, or retire, or resign, themselves determine whether the membership of the Court shall be increased?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in direct answer to the very proper question asked me by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], I say that his question involves not the slightest issue pertaining to the Constitution. No one has ever expressed the thought that by giving judges or Justices the privileges of retirement we were entrusting to them a function that devolves upon the legislative or the executive department.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. LOGAN. If a Justice should remain on the bench after he has become 75, and if that determines the appointive power, what about the Justice resigning under the present law?

Mr. ROBINSON. That is exactly the point I am discussing. We recognize that throughout the history of American jurisprudence. While under the Constitution judges are appointed for life, we permit them to retire before the end of their lives; and that privilege has been exercised time and time again.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. In my judgment, it is an illustration of the desperation of the cause of those who oppose this legislation that they suggest now, for the first time in all this debate, that to give the Justices the privilege of retirement is to violate the Constitution.

I now yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, does not the Senator realize the very clear distinction between filling a vacancy on the Court occurring in the normal way, which certainly is not an exercise of power in Congress to increase the size of the Court, and the other kind of a power, which we are now discussing, to enlarge the Court by adding members to it? Is there not a very open and clear distinction between those two issues?

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course, there is a distinction; but, Mr. President, it is not a legal distinction. It is not a constitutional distinction. It is a distinction in relation to policy.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I asked the Senator from Arkansas if he would yield in order that I might submit a question to the Senator from Nebraska.

I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska if we are to understand now that it is the position of the opposition to this measure that their objection is that it gives too much power to the Supreme Court?

Mr. ROBINSON. I shall be very glad to have the Senator from Nebraska answer the question of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BURKE. I think my question speaks for itself. On a measure of this kind I believe we ought to have some little explanation, and the Senator from Arkansas is doing that very satisfactorily, but he raised the point that no one has questioned in any way the power of Congress to do this thing, and I say there is a serious question about it. It is not a vital point in the case, as will be demonstrated, but it is worthy of consideration.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand from the last statement of the Senator from Nebraska that he himself has little or no confidence in the position he has taken on this feature of the subject. I do not regard it as even necessary or desirable to prolong the debate on this phase of the issue, but I will say that the Congress having admittedly the broader power to increase to any number that it pleases the total number of Justices composing the Supreme Court, it has by every rule of reason and of law the lesser power to make that increase on condition. Those Members of the Senate who are lawyers may take time in the filibuster that is threatened to answer that argument; but I make the statement that any answer to it will not rise to a dignity which will command approval by a Justice of the Supreme Court.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Congress has the same power in this regard over the Supreme Court that it has over the inferior courts. Nearly 20 years ago Congress enacted a law pertaining to the contingent increase in the number of district and circuit judges, about which no constitutional question was raised at the time, nor has such a question been raised since.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AUSTIN. I should like to ask the Senator in respect to the freedom which each Justice of the Supreme Court has and which the Senator has so clearly recognized and spoken of—Does not the Senator expect, as the actual consequence of the passage of such a bill as this, that any and every Justice who comes within the description of having attained the age of 75 years will exercise that freedom and withdraw from the bench upon the passage of this bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. Has the Senator concluded?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; that is the end of the question.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, my imagination has been described at times by others as vivid, but I respectfully decline to prophesy what a Justice of the Supreme Court may do in connection with retirement under this bill, particularly when he has had the privilege of retirement for 5 or 10 years and has failed to avail himself of it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. ROBINSON. I should think that we might regard it as an expression of the public opinion of the Nation that one who has reached the age of 75 years had best avail himself of the privilege of retirement. But the Senator from Vermont, whose imagination is quite unbounded, and whose genius for the conception of possibilities is greater than my own, is as entirely able now, as he was before he asked the question, to form his own conclusion.

Mr. AUSTIN. I think these words in the bill are not entirely imaginatory. I refer to the following language on page 3, line 11, contained in the proposed substitute itself:

> Whose continuance in office has occasioned the appointment of an additional judge.

I submit those words to the learned Senator upon the question whether Justices who are over the age of 75 and who remain on the bench when confronted by this bill will not be necessarily excited to withdraw from the bench to save their dignity.

Mr. ROBINSON. I should hope they would.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is not that one purpose of the bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. I should not regard it as a national calamity if any Justice availed himself of the privilege of retirement any more than I have regarded it as a calamity when other Justices have retired at the age of 70.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to any Senator, but I yield first to the Senator from Kentucky, and then I will yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LOGAN. The language which the Senator from Vermont has just read has no application at all to the Justices of the Supreme Court. It has to do with judges of the inferior courts. If the Senator from Arkansas will yield further——

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. LOGAN. I will call his attention to the fact, for the information of the distinguished Senator from Nebraska, that we now have a Court of six members. The number of members shall not exceed nine, but six may function. One of the Justices has now resigned. So we have eight members of the Court. According to the opinion of the distinguished Senator from Nebraska, however, the Court is now illegal because the Court itself has fixed the number of Justices.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AUSTIN. My question is this: Does not the Senator from Arkansas consider it just as bad, from a legal point of view and from a moral point of view, if the bill by natural effect and consequence terminates the tenure of office at a point less than for life, as it would if it contained a complete and express statement of a tenure that was less than life, fixed by an act of Congress and not by an amendment to the Constitution?

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator's question answers itself. No lawyer would say that Congress has the power to limit the tenure of a Justice of the Supreme Court to less than life and good behavior, and, therefore, no proposal of that nature is presented. But there is, and there has been for more than 50 years, a feeling in the country among those who constitute its citizenship that men are not always conscious of the time when they have passed the climax of their usefulness. It is well illustrated in politics. One who has served long and well is seldom, if ever, conscious of his failing powers, and he keeps on running for office, running and running and running, until everyone gets tired of him and until some man whom he considers his inferior defeats him for office. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURKE and Mr. MINTON addressed the Chair.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have often thought that politics is not an occupation; it is a disease [laughter]; and, by the Eternal, when it gets in the blood and brain, there is no cure for it. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. Just a moment. I have seen dozens of men, discredited and rejected by their constituents, sit on the fence and in the exercise of their "imaginatory" powers—I quote now the Senator from Vermont—see strange hands beckoning them out of the darkness and hear mysterious voices calling them back to run for office again.

I now yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. At this point I make the point of order, as it is very necessary to hear the distinguished Senators, that the Chair be so kind as to remind the occupants of the galleries that a different rule prevails in the Senate than in the other House.

Mr. ROBINSON. The occupants of the galleries are not disturbing me in the least; and if the Senator will excuse me, I will withdraw his point of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEWIS. As the Senator from Arkansas is not disturbed either by the occupants of the galleries or by the Senator from Indiana or by the Senator from Nebraska, I will sit down, quite content.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is right; that is the way to do it.

Mr. MINTON and Mr. BURKE addressed the Chair.

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield now, first, to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. In connection with the proposition the Senator is so ably discussing, I suppose he would accept a statement from very high authority on that point, namely, the present Chief Justice of the United States. In 1928 Chief Justice Hughes said:

> Some judges have stayed too long on the bench. It is extraordinary how reluctant aged judges are to retire and to give up their accustomed work. I agree that the importance in the Supreme Court of avoiding the risk of having judges who are unable properly to do their work and yet insist on remaining on the bench is too great to permit chances to be taken, and any age selected must be somewhat arbitrary, as the time of the failing in mental power differs widely.

Mr. ROBINSON. My favorite authority on that subject is not Mr. Chief Justice Hughes; it is Mr. Justice McReynolds.

Mr. MINTON. If the Senator will permit me, I will also quote what Mr. Justice McReynolds said.

Mr. ROBINSON. I myself am going to read that. The Senator could probably make this speech much more effectively than I can make it, but I still maintain that, as a Senator, I have some right to talk a little within my own time.

In October 1914, when the Associate Justice, Mr. McReynolds, was Attorney General, he submitted a report which no doubt is in the mind and memory of my good friend the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON]. In the performance of his duties he sent an urgent recommendation to Congress, and I shall now read it:

> Judges of the United States courts at the age of 70, after having served 10 years, may retire upon full pay. In the past many judges have availed themselves of this privilege. Some, however, have remained upon the bench long beyond the time they are adequately able to discharge their duties, and in consequence the administration of justice has suffered. I suggest an act—

Not a constitutional amendment, I remind the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE]; just an act—

> I suggest an act providing that when any judge of a Federal court below the Supreme Court fails to avail himself of the privilege of retiring now granted by law, that the President be required, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint another judge who would preside over the affairs of the court and have precedence over the older one. This will insure at all times the presence of a judge sufficiently active to discharge promptly and adequately the duties of the court.

It is true that Mr. Justice McReynolds, then Attorney General, limited his recommendation to the inferior courts, the circuit and district courts of the United States, but there is no difference in principle if the doctrine be applied to the Supreme Court as well as to the inferior courts.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. I may fortify the Senator's splendid argument with another high authority, another Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court. He did not limit it to the lower courts and he did not put the age at 75. I refer to the late Honorable Chief Justice Taft, who said:

> There is no doubt that there are judges at 70 who have ripe judgments, active minds, and much physical vigor, and that they are able to perform their duties in a very satisfactory way. Yet in a majority of cases when men come to be 70 they have lost vigor, their minds are not as active, their senses not as acute, and their willingness to undertake great labor is not so great as in younger men, and as we ought to have in judges who are to perform the enormous task which falls to the lot of Supreme Court Justices.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKE. Let me submit one further question before we get too far away from the power of Congress to fix the size of the Supreme Court. Does the Senator share the view expressed by the First Assistant Attorney General, that the framers of the Constitution purposefully left to Congress the right to fix the number of Justices on the Supreme Court in order that Congress might have that means of checking the Court and bringing its decisions into line with the congressional will?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, that is a peculiar question. Did anyone hear anything like it from a lawyer?

Mr. BURKE. Does not the Senator understand the question?

Mr. ROBINSON. I intend to answer the question. I am not sufficiently familiar with the debates, if there were any on that subject, to know just what was in the minds of the framers of the Constitution to understand or to state here what thought prompted them to vest in the Congress the unlimited and unrestricted power to provide the number of Justices composing the Supreme Court. The significant fact to me is that nothing was brought to their attention that prompted them to fix the number of Justices of the Supreme Court, or to deny to the Congress the power, the unlimited power, to say how many shall compose the Supreme Court.

I regret not to be able to say just exactly what it was that prompted the framers of the Constitution to leave that power with the Congress. It is sufficient for my purpose and for all who hear me to say there was nothing that prompted them to limit the power, but that they left the authority in the Congress, and we are now exercising it as the Congress has exercised it in years gone by.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

Mr. BURKE. Although the Senator has not directly answered my question with reference to the statement of the First Assistant Attorney General——

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not even know what the Senator from Nebraska has in mind.

Mr. BURKE. Surely the Senator has read the hearings before the Senate Judiciary Committee?

Mr. ROBINSON. I read some of them.

Mr. BURKE. He was one of the chief proponents of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. I did not feel it profitable to read some of the hearings. Much of them were mere repetitions of statements I had already read. But I do not know why the Senator persists in pressing me to say whether I think the theory of the Assistant Attorney General as to the motive which prompted the leaving of this power in the Congress be correct. To me it is a matter of indifference. The Senator may reach any conclusion about it that concerns him. It does not concern me at all. We have the power. We have exercised it. We are seeking to exercise it again. The question is whether it is sound public policy to employ that power now.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE. The Senator has stated his view of the matter, that this is an unlimited power possessed by Congress to make the Court 10 or 15 or 100, if they wish, and for any purpose or motive that may appeal to the Congress. Do I correctly state the Senator's position?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes. I think there is no limitation in the Constitution on the power of the Congress to prescribe the number of Justices that shall compose the Supreme Court. I would not say it is sound policy to exercise that power for a bad motive, but the power exists, and that is sufficient for this argument.

Mr. BURKE. The Senator feels that there is no merit whatever in the position of those who take the view that the reason why the framers of the Constitution did not say, "We shall have a Supreme Court of a certain number", was that Congress might be free to give us at any time a Court of a size that could promptly and efficiently do the work of the Court, and that Congress has no power within the spirit of the Constitution to add any members to the Court for any other purpose.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. No, Mr. President; I do not make that statement. The Senator knows I declined to pass judgment on the motives which prompted the framers of the Constitution to leave this power in the Congress. It is a very strong argument that the Senator from Nebraska does not question the existence of the power.

I am glad to yield now to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, when the framers of the Constitution came to create the Supreme Court, they did not by mere accident or inadvertence grant to Congress the power to exercise checks against the overreaching of the liberties of the people by the Court. Many, if not most, of the members of the Convention were scholars; some of them had studied law in the Middle Temple in London, and most, if not all, of the members were familiar with the judicial tyranny which had taken place in England during the troubled period of the Stuarts and other reigns preceding the drafting of the Constitution.

The framers took meticulous care and much pains, scholars and historians as they were, to see to it that the judicial power they granted to the courts should never run so riot as to thwart the will of the American people. Hence, they not only deliberately made Congress the body that should fix the number of the members of the Court, but they even went so far as to deny to the Court the right to fix its own jurisdiction, and the question of jurisdiction of that Court is, within certain limitations, subject to the right and power of Congress to change and modify as and when Congress sees fit.

The framers did not permit the Supreme Court to be the judge of the qualifications of its own members. The framers required the Court to depend upon the Congress for appropriations for its expenses; yea, even its own bailiff.

Nothing in all the history of the Constitution making is more clear than that the makers deliberately saw to it that no judicial branch should be set up that would overreach the legislative branch or the executive branch.

The makers were wise enough also to repose in Congress the legislative power and to grant the Court the judicial power.

I had not intended to interrupt the able speech of the Senator from Arkansas, but whatever may have been said about this proposed legislation, no lawyer in America has ever said that this bill, if it should become the law, would take any judicial power from the Supreme Court of the United States.

If this bill passes, the courts will possess and exercise the same judicial power they had before, and I venture the assertion that if this bill took any judicial power from the Supreme Court of the United States, there would not be 5 votes for it.

I thank the Senator from Arkansas for yielding to me.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield so that I may ask the Senator from Arizona a question?

Mr. ROBINSON. I think I had better proceed.

Mr. BURKE. I merely wish to ask the chairman of the Judiciary Committee a question.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; I will yield. I wish to be a good fellow and yield.

Mr. BURKE. I should like to ask the learned chairman of the Judiciary Committee if it is his opinion, then, that the framers of the Constitution with purpose left fixing the size of the Supreme Court to Congress so that Congress at any time could use that power to check and curb the Court?

Mr. ASHURST. I will say that I believe the framers of the Constitution had in mind that when a judge began to slide into a graceful senility, and refused to resign or retire, Congress at least could give the Court some relief. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I have been entertained and instructed by these interruptions.

Mr. ASHURST. I apologize to the Senator for interrupting him.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; the Senator must not apologize. He has contributed very effectively to my remarks; but I am prompted by the question of the Senator from Nebraska, and by the answer that has been made to that question by the Senator from Arizona, to say that my judgment is that the justification for this legislation lies in large part in the fact that the Supreme Court, according to members of that body and according to great Members of the Senate, have gone outside the sphere of their jurisdiction, which is to interpret and apply the laws, and have entered the realm exclusively ascribed to the Congress by the Constitution—the realm of defining public policies.

I see before me today great Senators, whose names will go down in history among the immortals, who have made that statement on the floor of the Senate of the United States, and who now apparently have forgotten the position they took in days gone by. In another address, on a different occasion, it is my intention to show some of the instances in which the Court went outside the sphere of judicial interpretation, and literally wrote into the statutes words that Congress did not incorporate in them, and changed and gave unnatural meanings to words which had better have been naturally interpreted.

In doing that I do not say that the Supreme Court acted corruptly, or that its members were conscious of trespassing upon the jurisdiction of the legislative department. I do affirm, and believe myself able to prove to a jury of lawyers, that the Court is responsible for many of the troubles against which we are now legislating, because it gave unnatural and illogical definitions to terms employed by the Congress in enacting legislation.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKE. Even at the risk of making somewhat of a nuisance of myself——

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, the Senator cannot do that.

Mr. BURKE. I am afraid he has already done it.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator never makes a nuisance of himself. Whenever he is a nuisance, Nature does it for him. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURKE. Very well; but, passing that over, I think it is important that at the start we find out as definitely as we can something of the purpose of this bill. As I understand, the Senator now takes the position that because the Supreme Court, in the opinion of some persons and in his own opinion, has at times gone outside its own function, therefore, it is now proper and legitimate for Congress to make over the Court to some extent in order to see that that does not happen again. Is that the point?

Mr. ROBINSON. That is not a very bad statement of my position. It is not entirely accurate; but the thought does appeal to me that if the judiciary trespasses on the jurisdiction of the legislative department, and undertakes, in interpreting statutes, to say what is sound or unsound public policy, Congress has the right—yea, it may be the duty of the legislative branch of the Government—to exercise such powers as it possesses to prevent that usurpation of authority; and the Senator from Nebraska and any other Senator may make the most of that admission.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, if I may ask just one other question——

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. BURKE. Will the Senator, in the course of his remarks—I do not ask him to do it now, but in his own good time—explain to us how he can reconcile the statement he has just made with the principle that we have in this country, and desire to maintain, an independent judiciary?

Mr. ROBINSON. Why, certainly—certainly. Independence of the judiciary does not involve or imply usurpation by the judiciary. If the Senator cannot see that without an elaboration of the argument, I think I had better appeal to other minds. My theory is that the demand for this legislation arises principally—not entirely, but principally—out of the fact that the judiciary, not only in the Supreme Court but even in the lower courts, have from time to time confused the question of power with the issue of policy. Do you get it? They have decided that the exercise of a power by the Congress is unconstitutional in some instances when they disapproved the public policy involved in the legislation. That is wrong; and the efforts to prevent it have no sensible relation to the independence of the judiciary. The judiciary must be independent in the sphere ascribed to it by the Constitution. It must not be an outlaw in any other sphere. The mere fact that there is no appeal from the Supreme Court of the United States gives that Court no right to violate constitutional limitations imposed by law and by reason on its own authority.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. If the Supreme Court is doing what the Senator says it is doing—and it is, and has done it times out of number—then it is exercising a legislative function.

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. MINTON. And if it is exercising a legislative function, there is no place to which to turn for the redress of a legislative function except the legislature.

Mr. ROBINSON. The proposition is self-evident. The Senator has stated it better and more accurately than I could state it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. If the Supreme Court up to the present time has been exercising legislative power, in what respect does this bill prevent it from exercising legislative power in the future?

Mr. ROBINSON. There is not any way by which the Congress can prevent a judge from doing the wrong thing; but the theory of the bill is that it will gradually place on the bench those who will respect, as a primary consideration, the limitations on their own authority. I do not ask you to take my word. I will ask you to take the word of the Senator from Idaho himself.

In 1930, I think, the Senator from Idaho arose on this floor and made an eloquent appeal against the confirmation of a great Chief Justice, solely on the theory that that Chief Justice was disposed to decide questions of public policy rather than questions of limitation on the power of the law-making body. The Senator from Idaho may take from now until the end of the threatened filibuster to explain his attitude on that occasion; and he was not alone in that attitude. At the same time a dozen other Senators, among them the brightest and the bravest who are opposing this bill, sought to prevent the confirmation of Mr. Chief Justice Hughes on the theory that Mr. Hughes would lead the Court out of the proper sphere of judicial determination into the realm of legislation. They could not say anything against his character other than that. They could not question his personal integrity, but they fought him to the bitter death; and I cabled back from London, where I had gone on a mission for the Government, my vote in support of Mr. Hughes, because I believed him to be an honest and an able man. The issue was acute; it was tense; it was hard fought, and there was a large vote in the Senate. At one time it was thought doubtful whether he would be confirmed. The opposition rested their argument solely on the ground that he would legislate as a judge. That is the issue raised in the Baltimore railway case, spoken of with such eloquence and force by the able Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. He said in 1930 that he wanted this body to be informed as to his ground of opposition to the confirmation of Mr. Hughes, and it was that in the Baltimore railway case the court, led by Mr. Hughes, had gone outside the sphere of proper judicial consideration and action, and entered the legislative sphere. But of that, another time. I proceed now to a consideration of other features of the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it not true that in the able address made on that occasion by the Senator from Idaho, when asked by another Member of the Senate whether he would remedy the situation by amending the Constitution, he replied no, he would amend the Court?

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, yes. The Senator from Idaho did not then have any sympathy with amending the Constitution, because he said the same old judges would read an erroneous interpretation into any amendment which might be made, so he favored amending the Court. He may take the pending bill as in a sense an "amendment of the Court", if he wishes to do so, but when he makes an argument against it on that ground, I reply to him in his own language—well-considered, forceful, and influential.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. STEIWER. If the members of the Court are disposed to indulge in legislation, that is to say, to assert their views upon policies rather than their views upon law——

Mr. ROBINSON. Not always; sometimes.

Mr. STEIWER. I say, if that is the case——

Mr. ROBINSON. Has the Senator any doubt that that has been the case?

Mr. STEIWER. I have no doubt about it in my own mind.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am only searching the Senator's mind.

Mr. STEIWER. If that is the case, is not the logical and proper means of reaching that to object to the confirmation of the nomination of the judge and not merely to change the composition of the Court?

Mr. ROBINSON. I think that its caviling. After a judge is confirmed he is on the bench for life, and there is no opportunity of knowing what he is going to decide except to use the method employed by the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Virginia, and say, "From what he has done heretofore, from the clients he has represented, from the methods used in other matters, I think he will be unfair to the public, unconsciously unfair to the public."

Of course, if one knows about those things at the time confirmation occurs, and has not confidence in the judge, he would do just what these Senators did in opposing Mr. Justice Hughes. I cannot say that their judgment of Mr. Hughes is confirmed by the history of his actions as the Chief Justice. I have great respect for that able lawyer. I regard him as a learned and conscientious man, and do not wish to be construed as giving endorsement to the arguments which were employed against his confirmation. I voted for his confirmation.

I pass now from the main feature in dispute of the bill—namely, the appointment of additional Justices of the Supreme Court in cases where members are serving beyond the age of 75 years—to certain other provisions in the bill, and refer at once to the subject of the necessity for a proctor.

The Supreme Court, in the pending amendment, as in the original bill, is given power to appoint a proctor, whose duty it shall be to obtain information as to the volume, character, and status of litigation in the district courts and circuit courts of appeals, and such other information as the Supreme Court may require. He is also authorized to investigate the need of assigning district and circuit judges to other courts than their own, and to make recommendations thereon to the Chief Justice; to recommend, with the approval of the Chief Justice, to any court of the United States methods for expediting cases pending on its dockets; and to perform such other duties consistent with his office as the court shall direct.

Under the system now existing there is no one officer charged with the function of keeping in constant touch with the district courts and circuit courts of appeals in order to be posted as to the progress of the judicial business in each court, the state of the docket, the existence of arrears, if any, and the need for temporary or permanent assistance, if it exists. True, the conference of senior circuit judges, which is presided over by the Chief Justice, receives and considers reports as to the state of the judicial business in all of the Federal courts. However, the conference meets only once a year and sits for only 2 or 3 days, and has no executive officer to carry out its recommendations, or even to prepare the material for its use.

The Attorney General submits to the conference information relative to the state of the dockets and the condition of the business of the courts, insofar as he is able to obtain it. Again, it is important to bear in mind that the information is submitted by the Attorney General only once a year.

There is urgent need for an official who will devote his entire time to keeping currently posted as to the state of the judicial business and the needs of each Federal court from day to day. Such an official could recommend the temporary assignment of judges to districts that need such assistance when occasion arises. He would be in a position to suggest improvements in the handling of the dockets and the installation of efficient methods in the transaction of business.

While it is true that the Department of Justice, to some extent, is in touch with the needs of the courts and from time to time suggests the temporary assignment of judges to congested districts, this generally occurs in connection with the handling of Government business. The courts themselves are expected to scrutinize and meet the needs of private litigants. They have no official charged with such a duty, however, each district court and each circuit court of appeals being very largely a law unto itself. It is a strange thing that the Federal judicial system, unlike most public and private activities, has no official charged with the duty of administration. The introduction of systematic methods in the transaction of judicial business can do much toward the elimination of unnecessary delays and waste of time on the part of counsel and litigants.

One can well envisage the proctor maintaining continuous contacts by correspondence with the senior circuit judges, the district judges, and the clerks of the various courts, so as to keep his hand on the pulse of Federal judicial business and to be familiar with the needs of the various circuits and districts. He would be in a position to know what districts need help and what judges are available for temporary assignment to districts or circuits away from their residence, and to aid the overcrowded districts in getting the assistance they should have. From time to time he could visit the various courts and make suggestions as to improvements that could be introduced in the arrangement, the calling and the disposition of the dockets. He could go into a district in which congestion was reported and endeavor to work out some means to alleviate the condition. In other words, he could do the innumerable things in the improvement of efficiency that one expects of an officer who is in a position to devote his entire time and energy to administration, and who is not burdened with any other duties.

The system has been tried out on a small scale in the city of Cleveland, Ohio, where it has met with great success. In that city, the official corresponding to the proposed proctor is known as the assignment commissioner, who has charge of the docket and the assignment of cases for trial. The systematization of business which has resulted from his work has led to a substantial reduction in law's delays.

Court congestion and law's delays are problems which are encountered not only in this country but also are found abroad. In Great Britain a commission was appointed several years ago "on the dispatch of business at common law." In a report which it submitted in January 1936, suggesting a number of improvements for the purpose of achieving efficiency in the transaction of judicial business, it proposed, among other things, the creation of a well-paid, whole-time officer for the purpose of managing the dockets, such officer to be known as the manager of the lists. The commission stated that the business of the courts should be in the hands of a whole-time administrative expert, responsible, under the direction of the Chief Justice, for its organization (pp. 53–54). The functions and duties of the proposed officer are described, as follows, in the report (p. 56):

1. He should be responsible to the Lord Chief Justice for the organization of the business and the making up of the lists, and for insuring the even and continuous flow of the work.
2. He should be the center of such an organized system of information from all concerned in the conduct of litigation, both in London and on circuit, as will enable him to forecast the future course of business.
3. He should constantly review the organization of the courts, and tender advice upon it from time to time, as may be necessary, to the Lord Chancellor and the Lord Chief Justice. He should also report annually to the Lord Chancellor and the Lord Chief Justice on the working of the organization and the administrative requirements.

There is no doubt that the creation of the office of proctor will be a big step forward in the direction of efficiency in the transaction of judicial business in the Federal courts.

I wish to speak now just a moment on the subject of appointment of judges to serve outside their districts and circuits.

ASSIGNMENT OF JUDGES TO SERVE AWAY FROM THEIR CIRCUITS AND DISTRICTS

The purpose of this provision is obvious. It is to make possible temporary assignments of judges to congested areas in order to relieve crowded conditions.

It has been argued by the opponents of the bill that under the formula governing the appointment of additional judges the new appointments will not necessarily be made in congested areas, but in fact they will frequently be made in circuits or districts which require no additional assistance. This argument completely overlooks the purpose of the provision which has just been summarized. Its objective is to create an element of flexibility in the Federal judicial system so as to make it possible to assign a judge temporarily to serve in a district or circuit other than his own for the purpose of alleviating congestion and aiding in the disposition of a crowded docket.

Congestion is not always a permanent condition. It is frequently a variable and temporary state of affairs. A district that needs help this year will not necessarily need it a year later. On the other hand, a district that may not be in arrears today may find itself confronted at some future date with a rush of a particular class of litigation for which assistance is indispensable if the docket is not to get hopelessly in arrears.

Therefore the fact that under the pending measure some additional judges may be appointed in areas not now in need of assistance is not significant. In fact, it may be desirable. Such judges can be assigned and shifted from one district or circuit to another, where their services will do the most good, so long as they are not required in their home locality. To enumerate in the bill specific circuits and districts in which additional judicial positions should be created is neither practicable nor desirable; first, because congestion is a varying phenomenon; and, second, because an attempt to accomplish the desired result in this manner would lead to interminable disputes and controversies, and very likely to logrolling. Similarly, to endeavor to create a group of judges at large, not appointed for any circuit or district, would be beset with obstacles, such as difficulties of selection, that might prove almost insuperable. The only practicable solution is to establish a formula that would operate automatically—one which would require the appointment of additional judges on the occurrence of certain contingencies. This will be accomplished by the pending measure. Its result will be to create a group of judges available for service anywhere in the United States, as necessities require, on the call of the Chief Justice. Let it be remembered in this connection that the assignment of judges away from their own circuits and districts will be lodged solely in the Chief Justice of the United States. The executive branch of the Government will have no connection with the matter.

The question has been asked why the shifting of circuit judges should be permitted. This element of flexibility is necessary because it not infrequently happens that a particular circuit court of appeals is in arrears, or has a congested docket the disposition of which could be much assisted by the temporary assignment of a judge from another circuit.

It has been said that the flexible provision is unnecessary, since under existing law there is authority to assign judges to serve away from their home districts. This contention is based upon a misconception of the provisions of existing law. The present law (Judicial Code, sec. 13; U. S. C., title 28, sec. 17) provides:

Whenever any district judge by reason of any disability or necessary absence from his district or the accumulation or urgency of business is unable to perform speedily the work of his district, the senior circuit judge of that circuit, or, in his absence, the circuit justice thereof, may, if in his judgment the public interest requires, designate and assign any district judge of any district court within the same judicial circuit to act as district judge in such district and to discharge all the judicial duties of a judge thereof for such time as the business of the said district court may require. Whenever it is found impracticable to designate and assign another district judge within the same judicial circuit as above provided and a certificate of the needs of any such district is presented by said senior circuit judge or said circuit justice to the Chief Justice of the United States, he, or in his absence the senior Associate Justice, may, if in his judgment the public interest so requires, designate and assign a district judge of an adjoining judicial circuit if practicable, or if not practicable, then of any judicial circuit, to perform the duties of district judge and hold a district court in any such district as above provided: Provided, however, That before any such designation or assignment is made the senior circuit judge of the circuit from which the designated or assigned judge is to be taken shall consent thereto.

It will be observed that the scope of the present law in this respect is extremely limited. First, there is no provision for assigning circuit judges for service away from their home circuits. Second, before the Chief Justice can make an assignment of a district judge to another district, outside of the circuit in which said judge is located, it is necessary that a request for such an assignment be made by the senior circuit judge of the circuit to which the district judge is to be assigned, and that it be consented to by the senior circuit judge of the circuit from which the district judge is taken. Third, a practice has grown up not to assign judges away from their home districts except with their own consent, although the statute is silent on this point. It is proposed now to wipe out these hampering limitations and restrictions. The flexibility provision will apply both to circuit and to district judges. The result will be the establishment of a mobile judicial force, the members of which will be subject to call, at the direction of the Chief Justice, to any place where they can be of assistance in preventing the accumulation of arrears and in keeping the business of the court in a current condition.

It does not seem desirable, in view of the long time I have held the floor, to discuss at length the provisions of the bill which relate to the prompt appeal and the decision of cases involving the constitutionality of statutes. We all remember that in numerous instances during recent years injunctions have been issued on the ground that a statute is claimed to be unconstitutional, and proceedings under the statute have been abated, sometimes for as long as 3 to 5 years. There are provisions in the substitute which would enable the Government to participate in proceedings involving the constitutionality of Federal statutes, to take prompt appeals from adverse decisions after submitting evidence and argument, or without submitting evidence and argument, so that hereafter, if this substitute becomes the law, the question of the constitutionality of a Federal statute may be promptly, or reasonably promptly, determined.

THREATENED FILIBUSTER

In the conclusion of my remarks today I am prompted to make reference to the subject of a threatened filibuster. It would not seem to me appropriate to do so at this time if it were not for the fact that some of my dear friends who are in the opposition have been quoted in the press as saying that they are determined that the Senate shall never be permitted to register its conclusion on this legislation.

Let me say that the right of full debate is recognized by myself and my associates. There is not the slightest disposition to prevent any Senator from saying what is in his mind and heart on this subject. But I have no patience with and no disposition to submit, further than I have to do so, to an effort to deny any Senators representing their constituencies in this body the opportunity to register their views; and I do not believe that a filibuster will find justification in the conscience and judgment of those who believe in democratic institutions.

As one who is charged with some responsibility in this service, I hope that the questions at issue will be fairly and fully discussed, as I know they will be; and, when that has been done, that those who are opposed to the legislation will yield without putting the Senate to the embarrassment and inconvenience of staying here long days and long nights in a test of physical endurance. Much as it might surprise the Members of the Senate, I would probably come out of that kind of a test better than those who are in the opposition, at least some of them. I think I could endure it longer than could the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. WHEELER. I am in very good physical condition. I have been training for it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, yes; the Senator warns me now——

Mr. WHEELER. No; I do not warn the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON. That he is in training for a filibuster. Very well. Before he gets through, he will not feel so confident as he feels today.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say, then——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not feel "cocky" about it; I never have felt "cocky" about it; and I am not threatening the Senator with a filibuster. I say, however, that the amendment in the nature of a substitute which the Senator is proposing has never been heard or considered by any committee of the Senate of the United States, and, in the natural course of events, it will take considerable time to discuss it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, yes; and do not imagine, my dear friend, that I am going to interfere with that freedom which you so much enjoy of discussing it liberally and fully; but I think I will know when you turn from a debater into a filibusterer, and then, as the old saying goes, it will be "dog eat dog." [Laughter.] We will just have to do the best we can. I hope that these remarks about a filibuster will prove to have been unnecessary. What I am saying now is that those of us who think the American people have the right to have their representatives express their view on this proposed legislation can stay here just as long as can those who are opposed to it.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, did the American people have any right to express their will on this proposition at the last election?

Mr. ROBINSON. No; they have never voted on it. A great thought is in the profound mind of my good friend from Nebraska prompting that question. Of course, we have never had a referendum on it, and of course, there has been no vote on the question. I might remind the Senator that there is no provision in the Constitution for a referendum on a Federal statute. Did he not know that? Then why in thunder did he ask me that question? Of course he knows that the Federal Constitution does not authorize a referendum of statutes to popular vote.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. BURKE. It is not at all necessary for the Senator to shy away from the question that I presented.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, no; bless your heart, I am not shying away from anything. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURKE. I made no suggestion about a referendum to the people on this question at all. The Senator from Arkansas stated——

Mr. ROBINSON. I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. BURKE. That is what I was trying to explain.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am in perfect good faith about it. I thought the Senator asked me if the American people ever voted on this proposed legislation. If I am wrong about it, I will leave it to those who hear me to judge, and if I am wrong I will withdraw my answer.

Mr. BURKE. If the Senator will yield, I will try to set him straight on the matter.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well; the Senator may take all the time he wants; I have about finished.

Mr. BURKE. I merely desire to ask a question.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well; what is the question?

Mr. BURKE. Did not the Senator say, in his colloquy with the Senator from Montana, or following it up, that the people of this country have a right to have their will carried out, or something to that effect?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. BURKE. Then, I asked the Senator the question——

Mr. ROBINSON. No; what I said—the Senator ought not to misquote me either intentionally or carelessly—what I said was that the American people have a right to have their representatives here register or express their opinion on this proposed legislation. I am content when we have had a vote on it to accept the result; but I am not content that my good friends, such as the Senator from Nebraska and others, shall prevent Senators, chosen by the people, expressing their views on this legislation.

Mr. BURKE. The Senator from Arkansas seems to be the only one worrying very much about that at the moment. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, yes; but I know——

Mr. BURKE. The Senator has been reading the newspapers.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; I have been reading the newspapers; I have been reading the interviews—the ill-considered, unwise interviews—by my good friend the Senator from Nebraska. If he would talk less and do more, my judgment is we would have a shortening of the debate.

Mr. BURKE. I should like to go back to the question. The Senator has restated what he said, and correctly. The question I asked the Senator was whether the voters of this country at the last election had an opportunity not to vote on the measure itself but in their choice of Senators or

Members of the other House to express their views on this type of legislation?

Mr. ROBINSON. I have answered the Senator.

Mr. BURKE. Was there anything in the Democratic platform about it?

Mr. ROBINSON. There was no issue, so far as I know——

Mr. BURKE. No.

Mr. ROBINSON. In the last election on the subject except such as may be implied from the general principles of the platform. The Senator is entirely welcome to that. But the point I am making is that this is supposed to be a representative government, in which, after maturing opinions, the Members of the legislative body shall be given the opportunity to pass upon legislation presented for their consideration.

I will conclude with the declaration that to me it is an indisputable evidence of certain failure anticipated by the opponents of this bill when they start out by saying they will not permit a vote on the subject.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit one more question?

Mr. ROBINSON. No. I am talking now; give me a little of my own time. If the opponents of the bill had the votes to defeat us, they would take the vote tomorrow. Do you not all know you would?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, yes; do not answer or you will discredit yourselves; you know you have not the votes, and, therefore, you are starting out with a threatened filibuster.

Mr. BURKE. Would the Senator like to vote on the original bill tomorrow?

Mr. ROBINSON. No; I am not going to take a vote on the original bill at all.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course not; and the reason why you are not going to take a vote on the original bill is that——

Mr. ROBINSON. We do not have the votes to pass it. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER. You do not have the votes to pass it.

Mr. ROBINSON. But we have the votes to pass the amendment in the nature of a substitute; and now you are standing around here talking about a filibuster, which is admission of the fact that you are "licked" to start with.

Mr. WHEELER. No.

Mr. ROBINSON. All right. These things have to come to an end.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to another question?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Was it not the Senator from Arkansas who at the opening of the present session declared that the program of the session would be to work out a constitutional amendment on the question of the power of the Congress in connection with this matter and submit it to the people?

Mr. ROBINSON. I did; yes.

Mr. ASHURST. I think the Senator is thinking of the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ROBINSON. No. I did say that. I thought the Constitution could be amended so as to make certain and definite the power in the Congress to deal with some of the subjects involved in legislation that was being held unconstitutional. I was certain then that some of the decisions were wrong, but I did not know that the Supreme Court itself was going to about face and correct by interpretations what some of us were insisting should be corrected by constitutional amendment. The recent decisions of the Supreme Court, say what you please, have justified the contention that, for the most part questions of interpretation were involved rather than questions of constitutionality, for the Court itself has corrected its errors and has admitted that for 17 years by decisions acts of the Congress were nullified that ought never to have been nullified but ought to have been sustained from the beginning. The Senator from Nebraska is welcome to any consolation or enjoyment he may get out of that condition.

Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. BURKE addressed the Chair.

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. My recollection is——

Mr. BURKE. Will the Senator from Kentucky yield for a moment so that I may finish my question?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I did not know the Senator had not concluded.

Mr. BURKE. I appreciate the Senator's yielding to me. Does the Senator from Arkansas still believe, as he did at the opening of the session, that a constitutional amendment is necessary, or has the change in the attitude of the Court altered his opinion?

Mr. ROBINSON. No. I believe that every provision of the proposed substitute which I assisted in preparing, and to which I have committed myself as forcibly as I am able to do anything, is constitutional, and that for the purposes sought to be accomplished under this bill no constitutional amendment is necessary. I will say, however, that if an opportunity presents itself for an amendment providing for compulsory retirement at the age of 75 I would not be averse to it.

Mr. President, I am very grateful for the very close attention which has been given me by my colleagues and by those who are present on this occasion.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I merely wanted to suggest that it is my recollection that what the Senator from Arkansas said at the beginning of the session about a constitutional amendment had to do with an amendment to clarify and strengthen the power of Congress in matters of legislation, and did not deal with any legislation pertaining itself to the Court.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is true.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, just one more question. Does the Senator from Arkansas, then, consider that the proposed substitute, in the preparation of which he collaborated, is a substitute for a constitutional amendment?

Mr. ROBINSON. No; the Senator from Nebraska knows better than to ask me, as one lawyer to another, a question like that. A constitutional amendment would change the Constitution; it would prevent service on the part of a Justice beyond the period fixed by the amendment. The proposed legislation would not do that; it does not seek to do it. It merely authorizes the appointment of additional Justices in cases where Justices are serving beyond the age of 75.

Mr. BURKE. I am not referring to that kind of a constitutional amendment, and that was not the kind the Senator from Arkansas referred to at the opening of the session.

Mr. ROBINSON. How many constitutional amendments has the Senator from Nebraska proposed since this debate began?

Mr. BURKE. Two or three.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does not the Senator know how many?

Mr. BURKE. I do not know.

Mr. ROBINSON. My God, does not the Senator know how many constitutional amendments he has proposed? Is he so indifferent on the subject that he actually cannot count and tell the Senate how many proposals he has made for amending the Constitution? Apparently his mind is in a state of flux on the subject and he did not know and does not know now what to do.

Mr. BURKE. I neither know nor care as to the number, but I should like to ask a question about the constitutional amendment which the Senator from Arkansas had in mind at the beginning of the session. Has he never gotten to the point of introducing it?

Mr. ROBINSON. I have never offered one. There are 50 pending, and I have never been able to find two Senators in favor of any one of them. Each Senator is in favor of his own constitutional amendment. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I had concluded what I have to say on this occasion. I have not the slightest doubt my good friend from Nebraska will have opportunity and take occasion to express his views on this very important question.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator another question.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; I am through.

Mr. BURKE. No more questions?

Mr. ROBINSON. No more questions today. The Senator may reserve them until next week. Good-bye. [Laughter.]

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

H. R. 2901. An act to extend the benefits of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, to certain employees in the legislative and judicial branches of the Government;

H. R. 6287. An act to amend Public Act No. 467, Seventy-third Congress, entitled "Federal Credit Union Act"; and

H. R. 6737. An act to amend the stamp provisions of the Bottling in Bond Act.

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1392) to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, before we proceed to a consideration of the amendment in the nature of a substitute, I wish to submit a word or two about the original bill and my own views in connection with that measure which was sent to the Senate last February. I think members of the committee know full well what are my views as to that bill.

I am not in accord with some of the views which have been expressed here this morning. It has been my thought that the powers of the Congress relating to the Supreme Court are only implied powers. Nowhere in the Constitution will be found any express grant of authority to the Congress to prescribe the size of the Supreme Court or the number of justices who shall compose it; but when the Constitution authorized the creation of the Supreme Court it was necessarily implied that Congress should have all the power required to set up the Court in such manner and to such extent as that it might exercise the judicial power conferred upon the Court by the Constitution. I agree that is the limit of the power that Congress has; that our efforts must be confined to giving the Court such machinery as may be necessary for it to carry out the judicial powers conferred.

Mr. President, I am in agreement with much that has been said here today about the usurpation of legislative power by the judicial branch of the Government. I believe that the courts of the land throughout a long period of our history have constantly usurped legislative powers and have rendered policy-making decisions, which is something the courts have no right to do. I concede that to be true, and I concede that the Supreme Court has gone further than that. Not only has the Court, in my opinion, invaded the legislative power but in instances it has amended the Constitution of the United States. The Supreme Court of the Nation has usurped the powers reserved to the people of America. I believe that to be the fact.

However, notwithstanding these things, I have believed that Congress was limited in its authority and that judicial usurpation of congressional power was not cured by congressional usurpation of judicial power. That has been my absolute, fundamental objection to the original bill which was sent to us, because I believed that by authorizing the appointment of new Justices in such numbers as that they could be used to control and direct judicial opinion, we would encroach upon judicial power and exercise a power not conferred upon us by the Constitution.

Therefore, Mr. President, I joined the majority of the Judiciary Committee in recommending that the bill should not pass as it was originally drawn, and I believe today just as I voted in the committee on that question.

As to the committee report which was filed in the Senate and in which I concurred and made my own special recommendations, much has been said throughout the country which I do not believe is justified by the report made nor by the intention of the majority of the committee. That of which I speak now is best illustrated by letters which have come to me from over the country generally, complimenting me for signing the majority report. Several of them have contained these exact words: "Now is the time to humiliate the President." "Now is the time to beat Franklin D. Roosevelt."

I want to say here in the opening of this debate that it has never been my intention to humiliate the President of the United States and it has never been my desire to "beat Franklin D. Roosevelt." I am sure when I speak these sentiments I express the sentiments of the majority of the Judiciary Committee which submitted the report.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HATCH. Certainly.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator from New Mexico was present at every meeting of the so-called majority of the Committee on the Judiciary which submitted the adverse report now before the Senate. The Senator from New Mexico participated in every conference. I am sure the statement he has now made is absolutely accurate. There was no intention upon the part of any member of the majority, no matter what his political affiliation may have been, to cast any personal reflection upon the President of the United States, and there never was the slightest intention in any such conference of any such purpose.

The report was purely objective. There is not a derogatory adjective in the report. I am sure the Senator from New Mexico and no other Member of the body would have signed the report had it been in any degree an attack upon the President.

Does the Senator agree with that statement?

Mr. HATCH. I agree entirely with that statement.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I am glad the Senator from Wyoming made that statement. I noticed in the press the other day a statement that conservative Members of the Democratic Party wanted to destroy the Democratic Party and in effect humiliate the President. I hardly think I would be classified as one of the conservative Members of the Senate. Until the time of the introduction of the Court bill I had always been looked upon as the radical Member of the Senate, or at least one of its radical Members.

I have sat in every conference that has been held by the opposition in the Senate to the pending Court bill. Never once have I heard expressed the slightest intimation that anyone who is opposed to the bill wanted to do anything in the way of humiliating the President of the United States.

I can say to the Senator from New Mexico that I think that up until the time the bill came on the floor of the Senate I was nearly as close to the President as was any other Member of the Senate, and as was the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY]. I would be one of the last men in the Senate, as I know the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] would be, as I know the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] would be, as I know the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] would be, as well as every other Member of the Senate on the Democratic side of the Chamber—and probably on the Republican side of the Chamber—to do anything to seek to humiliate the President of the United States, whether he was Franklin D. Roosevelt or whether he was somebody else. Particularly I would not want to do anything to humiliate the President. No one on this side of the Chamber, so far as I know, wants to do anything to split the Democratic Party. All of this talk about it is sheer nonsense, in my judgment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY and Mr. LOGAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HATCH. I will yield first to the Senator from Wyoming, and then I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I may add to what I have already said, that it is perfectly obvious to me that since there was no response of any kind or character to the report of the committee from any Member of the Senate, whether in the Judiciary Committee or out of the Judiciary Committee, or from any other person, the effort is now being made to make it appear to the country that that report was a personal attack. It is an old device. When you are unable to answer a question or to meet an issue, change the subject.

Every single suggestion that this report constituted an attack upon the President of the United States comes from those who were unwilling to meet the arguments in the report on the material phases of the bill; and the fact that the proponents of the bill come here absolutely deserting the measure as originally proposed is a sufficient declaration that the report was a purely objective report, and not a personal one. If it had been otherwise there would have been a minority report.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. HATCH. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. LOGAN. While I do not wish to interrupt the Senator at this time, I hope tomorrow to express my views about the bill. So far as I know, no other Member of the Senate or any one else has said that the majority report of the committee was an attack upon the present administration. I myself said it, and I stick to it, and shall defend that position before the Senate and the country; but I do desire to ask the Senator from New Mexico a question. Whether it was so intended or not, is not that the way the report is accepted throughout the country—as an attack upon the President of the United States?

Mr. HATCH. I will say in reply to the Senator from Kentucky that that is what gave rise to my remarks just now. I have received such letters, charging that we did seek to humiliate the President, and did seek to beat him down; and, more than that, I have letters in my files saying, "Follow that report by impeachment of the President of the United States."

Mr. LOGAN. I may say to the Senator that I had a dozen letters of that kind today, saying that the majority report ought to be used as the basis of an impeachment of the President of the United States. I did not make that report. I shall discuss that report, and I shall answer its arguments, as suggested by the Senator from Wyoming, because it is made up of hypocritical paragraphs of pointless piffle and nothing else; and those who wrote it knew that its arguments were wholly fallacious, and that its conclusions were absolutely false.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I suggest that the Senator from Kentucky file a formal argument in support of that conclusion.

Mr. LOGAN. I shall do that in a speech which I hope to make tomorrow.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course, there are persons in this country who are opposed to the President of the United States; but let me call attention to the fact that when the utility bill was before the Senate a year or two years ago various persons wrote to me and wrote to other Senators who were supporting the bill, suggesting that the Senators ought to be impeached because they were supporting the bill. I never in my life received such vicious letters from anybody as I received during that debate; but anyone who takes seriously such fanatical, crazy letters, whether they come from the power interests or whether they come from anybody else, it seems to me has not much place in a legislative body. In connection with every piece of legislation that comes before us where people are stirred up, either from their economic viewpoint or from their political standpoint or from their moral or religious standpoint. we are bound to get letters of that kind from such persons; but we ought to ignore them.

I agree with the Senator from Wyoming, however, that those who are saying that in the Senate, and whispering it around, are seeking to draw a red herring across the trail. I agree entirely with the statement of the Senator from Wyoming that it was the most unusual thing that has happened in the Senate since I have been here for the proponents of a bill to refuse and neglect to sign their names to a report supporting the bill which they introduced and advocated.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKE. Since the Senator from New Mexico joined the majority of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary in recommending that this bill do not pass, has he not received letters suggesting—even demanding—that he resign his seat in the United States Senate?

Mr. HATCH. Yes; along with the Senator from Nebraska, I had a letter from his State in which it was requested, first, that the Senator from Nebraska resign, and then that I follow suit by resigning with him.

Mr. BURKE. I have had many of them.

Mr. HATCH. I have had several letters to that effect. The thing I wanted to bring out and to make clear to the Senate of the United States, however, was that the majority of the Senate Judiciary Committee was making no personal attack on the President of the United States; and, so far as I myself am concerned, I desire to make it clear that never at any time have I doubted the purposes or the high patriotic motives of President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. May I ask the Senator to add to that the statement that he has never for a moment doubted the purposes and the motives of the members of the Judiciary Committee who joined with him in submitting this report?

Mr. HATCH. I am delighted to make that addition, because I think it is fully true of all the members of the committee; and I do not wish to see this debate, today or in the weeks to follow, pitched on any personal grounds against any person. I had my objections to the original bill and I voiced those objections by my vote in the committee after the amendments which I had previously suggested had been defeated. I now approve the pending amendment, and I trust that I may have the opportunity to voice my approval of the amendment by my vote in the Senate, and that I shall not be deprived of that opportunity by those who now oppose the amended bill.

Mr. President, at the very beginning of this controversy, almost when the bill——

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, before the Senator enters upon a discussion of the amendment, may I interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] pointed out that it was an unusual situation that the minority of the committee had not filed any report. I do not know whether or not what I read in the papers is true, but it certainly could not be any more unusual than that the majority of the committee should go outside the committee to find someone to lead the fight on the floor of the Senate for the majority report.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, as I was saying, when the bill originally came before us, I had faith in the President of the United States; and when in his message he stated certain facts and circumstances, I did not look at his statements with suspicion and distrust. I chose to accept what the President of the United States said, and when he pointed out the necessity for adopting some systematic and orderly plan for adding younger men to the courts of the country in order that the courts might better exercise their judicial powers and functions, I chose to accept at face value what the President of the United States said, though I did not agree with the plan he suggested, because, first of all, it did not carry out the ideas contained in the message.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. The distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] just made some reference to me that I did not catch—my attention was distracted for the moment—about the Judiciary Committee selecting somebody who was not a member of the committee to lead the fight on the floor of the Senate. I desire to call the Senator's attention, however, to the fact that during the debate a few minutes ago the distinguished leader of the Democratic Party refused to let the Senator from Indiana take the floor away from him and make his speech. The Senator from Arkansas decided that he would make his own speech. Of course, I do not blame him in the slightest degree for doing so.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I may be a little bit dense, but I do not know who took the ball away from whom. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator from Indiana tried to take the ball away from the Senator from Arkansas, but the Senator from Arkansas refused to let him do so.

Mr. MINTON. Oh, no; far be it from me to try to take the ball from the Senator from Arkansas or the Senator from Montana, least of all the Senator from Montana.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I thought I was discussing something about the addition of younger blood to the Court. I did not know I had gotten into a football game.

I desire to read the part of the message of the President to which I have referred. The President's message of February 5 contained this language:

> Life tenure of judges, assured by the Constitution, was designed to place the courts beyond temptations or influences which might impair their judgments; it was not intended to create a static judiciary. A constant and systematic addition of younger blood will vitalize the courts and better equip them to recognize and apply the essential concepts of justice in the light of the needs and the facts of an ever-changing world.

Mr. President, those words did not seem to me to be extreme. That seemed to me to be a reasonable statement of a problem and condition which has long afflicted the courts of the United States under the life-tenure clause, a condition which was recognized, not only in the year 1937, but many years ago, and the remedy proposed by the President in his message was exactly the same remedy which was proposed more than a quarter of a century ago.

The Senator from Arkansas this morning read into the RECORD the report of the Attorney General of the United States in the year 1913, the Attorney General then being Mr. McReynolds, now Associate Justice McReynolds, who in 1913 first conceived the plan of appointing an additional judge when the incumbent on the bench had reached the retirment age and had not retired. If there is anything unconstitutional in that plan, if there is any radicalism in it, let Mr. Justice McReynolds bear the brunt of it, for it is his plan and his thought which is now embodied in the pending bill. There has been some talk in the newspapers as to whether or not the present plan was the Hatch plan, or the Logan plan, or the Robinson plan. I say to Senators that if they desire to correctly designate the plan which we are now considering, they may call it the "McReynolds plan."

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I thought it was the Ashurst plan.

Mr. HATCH. That was the original bill, and the Senator from Arizona also joins in supporting the pending amendment. I am quite sure that the Senator from Arizona is following a consistent and steady course of conduct, as I shall prove before I finish. He has been consistent for more than 20 years in supporting the plan for which he stands today.

Let me read again and emphasize the language of Mr. Justice McReynolds. Referring to the judges, he said:

> Some have remained upon the bench long beyond the time when they were capable of adequately discharging their duties, and in consequence the administration of justice has suffered.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I am surprised and amazed to find the Senator from New Mexico following the lead of Justice McReynolds. I never thought I would live to see the day when the Senator from New Mexico and the liberal leader from Kentucky, who stepped out a moment ago, would be following Mr. Justice McReynolds.

Mr. HATCH. If the Senator from Montana is surprised at the so-called liberal leader from Kentucky and the present speaker following in the footsteps of Mr. Justice McReynolds, how does the Senator from Montana think we feel when we see some of the company and associates with whom he is now consorting?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not know of any more conservative gentleman than the Justice about whom the Senator is speaking and whom he is quoting at the present time. I might say that I refused to follow Mr. Justice McReynolds when he was Attorney General of the United States, and I have refused to follow his views ever since, even upon this Supreme Court issue.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, may I ask a question?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Am I to infer from the statement of the very able Senator from New Mexico that some of those who are alined with the Senator from Montana should now be driven from the Democratic Party? Is that the inference we are to draw?

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from New Mexico has made no such statement; but I will say that some of the associates of those who oppose this plan will not have to be driven from the Democratic Party, because they have never been in the Democratic Party, and have opposed every Democratic measure that has been offered.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. May I interrupt again?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. May I point out to the Senator that even if there had not been a Republican vote cast in the Committee on the Judiciary there would not have been a favorable report upon the bill which has now been abandoned? Without the assistance of a single person who never claimed association with the Democratic Party the bill which has now been deserted was repudiated.

Mr. HATCH. I have not sought to bring the political issue into this controversy. In fact, I have sought to avoid it from the very beginning. But if the Senator is interested in the political issue, I have on my desk here references and citations which will show that when other bills of similar nature were presented under Democratic leadership to a Democratic Congress and a Democratic Senate, the opposition to those bills was led by Senators on the opposite side of the Chamber, and the Democrats in those days rallied to the support of the Democratic leadership.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Now, as we see Senators from the other side come over and hover around Senators on this side, are we not reminded of that passage in Scripture to this effect: "And Joab took Amasa by the beard with the right hand to kiss him. But Amasa took no heed to the sword that was in Joab's hand." [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator from Indiana has not been in the Senate very long, but if he had been a member of this body during the Hoover administration he would have found that some of his colleagues who are with him now were leading the battles for Mr. Hoover, a Republican President, at that time. Not only that, but when we are talking about Republicans I am reminded of the fact that some of the Republicans who are opposed to the pending bill left the Republican Party and came over and supported the present President of the United States. If we are to spurn everyone who is a Republican, let us say so now. The Senator would find that in a great many States there would not be many votes for a Democratic administration if we did not get some Republican votes.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I think the question was directed to the Senator from Indiana. I was trying to collect my thoughts at the moment. If the Senator from Indiana does not desire to reply, I shall continue my observations on the proposed amendment to the bill. Recurring to the recommendations made by Mr. Justice McReynolds, I am in earnest when I say that the present plan was sponsored and originated by the then Attorney General of the United States, the present Associate Justice McReynolds, and in his report on the plan which he sponsored as a cure and as a corrective of the evils attending our judicial system because of the life-tenure clause he recommended that the President of the United States be required—note the word "required"—to appoint for all the courts of the United States inferior to the Supreme Court an additional judge in cases where the incumbent on the bench had reached the age of retirement and had not availed himself of the retirement privilege.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. When Attorney General McReynolds made the suggestion which the Senator has quoted, did that follow months of criticism of the Supreme Court because of decisions which they had rendered, so that it could be properly said at that time that the purpose of the suggestion was to add members to the Court in order to secure a different line of decisions?

Mr. HATCH. I do not believe that exact charge was made, but the charge of packing the Court was made in those days, just as it is made today, as I shall presently show. It was said of the measures which were afterward introduced in the Senate and in the House that they were Democratic measures designed—they did not use the word "pack" then—to pad the judiciary.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Is not the Senator willing to say that the two situations were altogether different, that in the one case there was a long-range program, without the Federal judiciary being at the time under particular attack, and a proposal was made to bring some new blood into the Court from time to time, as contrasted with the situation where a bill is now presented following many months of the most acute criticism of decisions of the Supreme Court? So that it must be clear to any man who reads that the purpose even of the substitute is to enlarge the Supreme Court so as to have some effect upon the decisions of the Court?

Mr. HATCH. First, I want to say to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] that he has just asked a question in the same manner that he did in the committee, by starting with a question and answering it himself. I do not resent that, but I should prefer that when the Senator wants to ask himself a question and wants to answer it, he do so in his own time. However, I do want to say to the Senator in frankness and in honesty that I apprehend the very difficulties which the Senator points out in the present proposal, and I say that the only legitimate argument against the pending amendment is the fact that possibly due to its state of mind the public will not be able to recognize the bill for what it really is.

Mr. BURKE. Does not the Senator really think that is a very serious objection to the pending amendment?

Mr. HATCH. It is an objection which shall not deter me from my course, and I will say in that regard to the Senator from Nebraska that he knows, as I know, that the suggestion we now debate and argue I made months and months ago, in the very early part of this year, after the bill came to the Senate. I then pointed out that if the power contained in the so-called President's bill could be limited and restricted in the manner now proposed, so that not more than one Justice could be appointed in 1 year, I believed it would accomplish a permanent and worth-while reform. I was about to divulge a statement made by the Senator from Nebraska in the committee room, which I will not do. Does the Senator object to my saying that even he——

Mr. BURKE. I have not the slightest objection.

Mr. HATCH. Even the Senator from Nebraska saw the merit in the proposal at that time.

Mr. BURKE. Yes; and if I may refer further to what the Senator from New Mexico said, very early after the submission of this proposal on the 5th of February the Senator from New Mexico did point out the very things he has pointed out today, and made it clear in the committee that his support of his amendment extended only to the point where he remained convinced that he would not be a party to a proposal to add members to the Court for the sake of influencing the decisions of the Court, and I went along with the Senator quite a way. I agree fully with the statement that there is merit in the Senator's proposal as a long-range measure. However, I am using the Senator's time again.

Mr. HATCH. That is all right. I was just joking.

Mr. BURKE. I know no reason why we should be very touchy about the matter, as time, all eternity, stretches out in front of us.

As I said, I went along with the Senator up to the point where I became convinced that under the conditions as they now exist, and with what has gone before, we could not give consideration to this long-range measure of the Senator's in safety at this time, although under other circumstances it might be brought up and thoroughly considered.

Mr. HATCH. I appreciate the attitude of the Senator from Nebraska; and I feel quite confident that if he and I could get away from the clamor and the din and the noise and the confusion and the criticism and the distrust and the suspicion and all those things, we could work out a statute along the lines we are now trying to work out which would provide a permanent reform.

Where the Senator from Nebraska and I differ is that he is willing to let the noise and the confusion, the suspicion and the distrust, the question of motives and purposes, deter him from enacting what may be just, right, sound, and good legislation. I know that all our motives will be misconstrued, and when we say one thing people will say we mean something else. I realize that all that is true. I said early last spring, however, that this plan was a good plan. I said it then in opposition to the President of the United States, and to limit his power and authority. If it was a good plan then, when I thought and everyone else thought there was a substantial majority for the President's plan, it is good now, when the situation has changed, and there is a majority against the plan.

So I stand today where I stood in the early part of the year and in the committee. I shall not let the noise and the confusion and the criticism and the distrust and the suspicion deter me from doing what I believe to be right and sound and good.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Eliminating President Roosevelt from the consideration of this particular question, does the Senator think any President should be given the discretion—because that is what this bill gives him—to say, with respect to two men upon the Supreme Court, 75 years of age, or five men of that age, "I do not like the way your decisions are going; consequently"——

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from Montana knows I do not agree to that.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me finish my question.

Mr. HATCH. All right.

Mr. WHEELER. Does the Senator think the President should be given the right to say, "I do not like the way you are acting on the Supreme Court. I can appoint a man in your place; consequently, I will appoint a man in your place"? Or let us suppose he likes the decisions of another Justice. Does the Senator believe the President should be able to say, "I like your decisions, and, therefore, I will not appoint a man in your place, even though you are 75 years of age"?

Does the Senator believe that ought to be permitted by any legislation?

Mr. HATCH. No, sir; not at all.

Mr. WHEELER. Does not the Senator's plan do just that?

Mr. HATCH. No.

Mr. WHEELER. I beg to differ with the Senator in that respect. The Senator will find that instead of the plan being mandatory, the President is granted permission to name one man to the Court today, and another man to the Court tomorrow. He does not have to do it, even though Justices on the bench may be over 75 years of age.

Mr. HATCH. If that is true, Mr. President, it is an error in draftsmanship; and if the Senator from Montana will propose an amendment to make it mandatory and compulsory, I will vote for it. I will not vote to give the President of the United States discretionary power such as is now contained in the statutes of the United States.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me call the Senator's attention to the language of the proposed legislation. It is illustrative of the difficulties of writing legislation on the floor of the Senate:

> The Supreme Court of the United States shall consist of a Chief Justice and eight Associate Justices, any six of whom shall constitute a quorum: Provided, however, The number of Justices may be increased by the appointment of an additional Justice in the manner now provided for the appointment of Justices, for each Justice, including the Chief Justice, who at the time of the nomination has reached the age of 75 years.

Mr. HATCH. That is a matter of judicial interpretation and construction.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, no!

Mr. HATCH. Right now I wish to give my interpretation and construction of the word "may" as used in the provision that has been read. The word "may" should be construed as mandatory, as the Supreme Court of the United States and every other court in the United States has frequently construed the word "may." I mean it to be mandatory, and I want that statement in the RECORD. It is my purpose that it shall be mandatory. If the Senator prefers the word "shall", so far as I am concerned, we will make it "shall."

Mr. WHEELER. Of course when we write the word "may" into a statute, it is ordinarily construed as being permissive, as giving discretionary power. I say, therefore, that under the proposed legislation the President is granted the power to say to one Justice who is over 75 years of age, "I will appoint a man in your place", and to say in the case of another Justice over 75 years of age, "I will not appoint a man in your place."

Mr. HATCH. Let us put the matter in this way, Mr. President: Let us go back to the father of the legislation. Let us take the language of Mr. Justice McReynolds and say, "shall be required."

Mr. WHEELER. I do not want to go back to the father of any legislation who has made such a suggestion as that.

Mr. HATCH. Is there a doubt in the Senator's mind?

Mr. WHEELER. There must be a doubt in the mind of the Senator from New Mexico. He is a good lawyer, and he knows that when the word "may" is used in a statute it is usually regarded as being permissive; but when the rest of the language used in the statute is such that it is clear that the Congress meant "shall", the Court has construed it to mean "shall." I submit, however, that there is nothing in this bill which makes it mandatory in the slightest degree.

Mr. HATCH. Let me say to the Senator from Montana, before we get off the subject, that as concerns the draftsmanship the Senator from New Mexico must confess that his part in drafting this measure was concerned with limiting the appointment of Justices to not more than one in any one calendar year. Those were the words on which I insisted; and it was my intention and my understanding that the bill required the appointment to be made. If it does not require it, then, as the Senator from Nebraska pointed out, with eternity as the limit, we shall have ample opportunity to write in just as strong language as the Senator from Montana may desire or I may desire.

Mr. WHEELER. But in the first Court bill which came to the Senate, and which the Senator from New Mexico rejected, language was contained which was just as offensive. In this amendment, as a matter of fact, is contained the permissive feature, so that the President can say to one Justice who is over 75, "I shall appoint an additional Justice because you are over 75", and to another Justice on the bench he may say, "I shall not appoint an additional Justice even though you are over 75 years." Such a provision in the bill is not only offensive but, in my judgment, it likewise makes the legislation unconstitutional.

Mr. HATCH. I have some very good authority on its constitutionality.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. The original bill read as follows on this particular point:

> attained the age of 70 years * * * and within 6 months thereafter has neither resigned nor retired, the President, for each such judge who has not so resigned or retired, shall nominate—

And then along comes an amendment to the bill which says:

> may nominate.

In view of that fact, is there any doubt in the Senator's mind that a court, if the matter ever reached the court, would say that the word "may" in this case is clearly permissive?

Mr. HATCH. It is a doubt about which I am not at all worried, because, as I have said, if there is any question about it, let us settle it by the necessary correction. So far as I am concerned, it should be mandatory; I think everyone agrees it should be mandatory; everyone connected with the administration, so far as I know, agrees it should be mandatory; and there is no difference or dispute between us on that point.

Mr. WHEELER. We suggest that the Senator perfect it.

Mr. HATCH. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. HATCH. I will yield in a moment.

I should like to say that I am sort of a free lance here and I speak for no one but myself. I now yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Aside from the question of the use of the word "may" or the word "shall", as I understand the bill, it does not require the President to designate any particular judge over 75 for whom he may appoint a substitute.

Mr. HATCH. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. If there is one such Justice, he may appoint an additional Justice in any year; if there are two, three, four, or five such Justices, he may appoint only one.

Mr. HATCH. Yes; in any particular year, and he is not required to say on whose account the appointment of the additional Justice is made.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is a very important point.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, may I interrupt at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I apologize to the Senator from New Mexico, but the suggestion made by the Senator from Kentucky amazes me. If it is essential there should be one Justice appointed for any Justice who is 75 years of age, and there happened to be four or five who had reached 75 years of age, why should there not be one appointed for each of them? Why have one and only one when there are four or five over the age limit?

Mr. BARKLEY. That was the very provision in the bill originally introduced to which the Senator from Wyoming objected.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. And that is the provision that the proponents of the bill have abandoned. They have abandoned that, and now come in with a puny provision for the appointment of but one additional Justice.

Mr. BARKLEY. The statement was made here awhile ago by the Senator from Montana that the President, under the discretion given him, had to choose for which Justice the new appointee was a substitute. My suggestion is that, regardless of the number of the Justices who are 75 years of age, and who are eligible for retirement, the President may appoint only one in any year, and he is not required to designate any one of the Justices for whom he is making the appointment. He makes the appointment and the appointee takes his place on the Supreme Court like any of the other Justices.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course that is true.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Montana please obtain permission before interrupting the Senator having the floor. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HATCH. I yield first to the Senator from Montana, after which I will yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. WHEELER. This is not merely temporary legislation; it is permanent legislation. Assuming that only one Justice of the Court this year is 75 years of age, and the President of the United States, under this bill, says, "I do not have to appoint a Justice to your place", and next year there is another Justice who reaches the age of 75, and the President says, "I am going to appoint a new Justice this year", what is the implication? When the second Justice becomes 75 the President is going to appoint a Justice to take his place, but he does not appoint a Justice to take the first Justice's place. Under those circumstances, one cannot come to any other conclusion than that it would be humiliating in the greatest degree, and I assume that the Senator from New Mexico does not want to humiliate any Justice who sits upon the Supreme Bench of the United States.

Mr. HATCH. I will endeavor to make myself clear on that point, if I may be allowed to occupy the floor.

Mr. WHEELER. Take Mr. Justice Brandeis, who has served this country and the liberal cause for 50 years, who is one of the greatest liberals in this country, a liberal a long time before some of the officeholding pseudo-liberals who are now hanging onto the coattails of the President of the United States were; does the Senator from New Mexico want to humiliate him by saying to him, "Because you are 80 years of age there is going to be appointed a wet nurse for you?"

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from New Mexico has no idea of appointing a "wet nurse" for Mr. Justice Brandeis or any other Justice of the Supreme Court and he has no idea of humiliating any member of any court.

I wish to say to the Senator from Montana that the argument he has just made as to humiliating judges is not new at all. It was raised in 1915, in 1916, and in 1918 in the House of Representatives and the Senate in connection with measures which were then being considered and which were afterward enacted into law. The old cry of humiliation was raised then just as it is being raised now; and if I can get the opportunity, I will read to the Senate some of the things that were then said.

The reason, however, I like this plan better than the other plan is that it recognizes a fact that is as old as the human race, that with passing years the average man does decline and decay physically and mentally. That is the general rule. But the plan also recognizes that there are exceptions to the rule; that there are men such as the late Justice Holmes and Justice Brandeis and other noted examples in the judicial branch of the Government and in our own body today, who have retained their vigor, who have retained their strength of intellect. This plan takes care of such situations. If an old Justice, following the natural law, has declined and decayed mentally and physically, surely the Senator from Montana and no other Member of this body would say that such a Justice should have power over the vast litigation that comes before the Supreme Court, and that the Government of the United States should suffer by reason of such a condition, as the history of the country shows it has suffered by reason of such men being on the bench.

The amendment now proposed, however, also recognizes the other Justices whom the Senator from Montana has mentioned, and it says to them, "We appreciate your services; we appreciate your intellect; and just so long as you are willing to remain on the Supreme Court of the United States and to give to the country the benefit of your wisdom and your experience, under this plan you may remain." I say to the Senator from Montana that, to my mind, is the finest thing about the plan.

Mr. BORAH and Mr. MINTON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HATCH. I promised to yield to the Senator from Washington, but I yield now to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. I think the Senator from Idaho rose before I did.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To whom does the Senator from New Mexico yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I have been associated with the Senator from New Mexico on the Judiciary Committee in working out these measures. While there is a difference of opinion as between the Senator from New Mexico and myself on some of these matters, I have to say that no one has worked more earnestly and sincerely to perfect a plan than has the Senator from New Mexico. I think he has been entirely free from any other purpose than to bring about a practicable plan.

I wish to ask the Senator, in view of the statement which he has just made, whether or not this bill takes care of this situation which he has just described? Suppose there is upon the Supreme Court Bench a Justice who, confessedly, has reached the point where he is not able to discharge his duty, a Justice who is 75 or 76 years of age, and suppose there is another Justice on the Supreme Court Bench who is 76 or 77, and who is a very capable man. By what process, under the terms of this bill, would it be possible to get the incapable Justice off the bench and enable the capable man to remain on the bench?

Mr. HATCH. Of course, the Senator from Idaho knows that we cannot do that under the Constitution. There is no method by legislative action by which the retirement of a Justice can be compelled. Compulsory retirement, perhaps, would answer the Senator's question. The proposed substitute, of itself, does not provide a complete remedy. That is a defect. We can only safeguard our institutions, of course, as best we can, and in the proposed substitute we are safeguarding them by providing for the appointment of an additional judge when an aged Justice has reached the prescribed age. It is not a complete answer to the situation presented by the Senator from Idaho, but it is the best we can do.

Mr. BORAH. For practical purposes it might leave on the bench a Justice who was subject to all the objections which may now exist; it might leave on the bench men whom we think have reached a point when they should retire.

Mr. HATCH. This plan would have the advantage, when it eventually works out, of insuring that the entire Court shall finally reach a membership composed of nine Justices under the age of 75. That is the best we can do, in view of the Constitution.

The situation which the question of the Senator from Idaho suggests has arisen before in the history of the country, and we have found ourselves absolutely powerless to act or correct it. Had there been in the law such a provision as the substitute amendment proposes—and I am sure we are thinking of the same incident—it could have been corrected. We have had two different occasions in the history of the country when if some such law as is now proposed had been on the statute books the cruel humiliation of two Justices of the Supreme Court would have been avoided, and they would have been spared the shame which came to them.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. STEIWER. Did I correctly understand the Senator from New Mexico to say that under the terms of the substitute the time would finally be reached when there would be but nine members upon the Supreme Court?

Mr. HATCH. That is the direction toward which the substitute is intended to go, and I think eventually it would reach that point. That is its purpose, to keep always a court of nine members under 75 years of age. There could be other members in excess of that age.

Mr. STEIWER. I understood the Senator to say the time would be reached when there would be but nine members upon the Court. I now understand him to say he hopes that time will be reached.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator knows full well why I say that. We do not know what Justice will die nor what the age of the Justice would be who would be appointed, nor with what mathematical certainty it could be worked out. The proposal, however, tends to bring about the result I have indicated, and I believe eventually it will do so.

Mr. STEIWER. Is it not a possibility, if not a probability, that the four members of the Court who are now more than 75 years of age would refrain from retiring, resulting in the appointment of four younger men under the proposed substitute?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. STEIWER. Suppose by the time all the older Justices die or retire or resign the other members of the Court, as the Court is now constituted, should have reached the age of 75. In that event, other additional Justices would have been appointed.

Mr. HATCH. Provided they had lived and had not resigned or retired.

Mr. STEIWER. How long would that process continue until we would finally reach a membership of nine Justices on the Court?

Mr. HATCH. In order to answer the question of the Senator with mathematical certainty, I should have to inquire of some of the experts in the departments who have made some remarkable calculations, because we have to take into consideration factors which none of us can foresee.

Mr. STEIWER. I quite agree with that.

Mr. HATCH. We do not know what Justice will live or what Justice will probably retire. We do not know who will be appointed, nor the age of the man to be appointed. The only thing we can do is to legislate in the best possible manner we can to reach and attain the desired results.

Mr. STEIWER. I know the Senator will be ready to concede that under some circumstances many years might elapse before the Court would reach a membership of nine.

Mr. HATCH. That could be so.

Mr. STEIWER. May I ask the Senator another question on the same point? I ask it because he is one of the authors of the proposal.

Mr. HATCH. Just one part of it, one line.

Mr. STEIWER. I notice in the substitute it is provided that the number of appointments to the Court shall not increase the total number of Justices "by more than two-thirds of the permanent membership of the Court." Can the Senator enlighten me as to what is meant by the phrase "permanent membership of the Court"?

Mr. HATCH. That means the whole Court, the nine Justices, and any additional Justices who may have been appointed. Two-thirds of the present Court would be 6, which would make a maximum of 15.

Mr. STEIWER. If "permanent membership of the Court" means nine——

Mr. HATCH. The permanent membership of the Court is nine members.

Mr. STEIWER. What makes it so in the proposed substitute?

Mr. HATCH. The language of the substitute itself. The language is "the Supreme Court of the United States shall consist of one Chief Justice and eight Associate Justices." That is the permanent Court.

Mr. BURKE. The other appointments are temporary?

Mr. HATCH. Yes. I struck out the word "temporary." Originally it was included, but I did not like the word "temporary" as applied to a Justice of the Supreme Court. He is in no sense temporary. He is just as much a Justice of the Supreme Court as any other member of the Court. The size of the Court is temporarily increased by the appointment of additional Justices. Perhaps that would be the better way to express it.

Mr. STEIWER. I do not want to be critical of the form of the proposal, but I think more appropriate language could be used to define the permanent as distinguished from the temporary membership of the Court.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. The new judges to be appointed would be neither temporary nor permanent.

Mr. HATCH. Oh, no; that is hardly fair. The Senator from Nebraska is placing an interpretation on my remarks, which is not borne out by what I said. I told the Senator from Nebraska that the Court would consist of nine members, one Chief Justice and eight Associate Justices, and such additional members as might be appointed under the provisions of the bill, but that each one of those Justices so appointed would be a permanent Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States and have all the power, all the honor, and all the dignity coming to any other Justice.

Mr. BURKE. If they are permanent members of the Court, I am afraid the Senator is in difficulty on the other point raised by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER].

Mr. HATCH. I am not in difficulty at all. On this point there is but one thing in the bill. That is the final objective, the establishment of a permanent long-range program, and there is no use to quibble over "permanent" or "temporary" matters. We all understand perfectly what the amendment means.

Mr. BURKE. To what number does the "two-thirds" refer?

Mr. HATCH. Two-thirds of nine. Two-thirds of nine is six. Six plus nine is fifteen.

Mr. BURKE. But the Senator does not say "two-thirds of nine." He says "two-thirds of the permanent Court."

Mr. HATCH. If the Senator has difficulty in understanding me, it is just my lack of facility in expressing myself in ordinary language.

Mr. BURKE. I do have difficulty in understanding the Senator. May I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. HATCH. I am still glad to yield to my good friend the Senator from Nebraska who now, I think, perceives a chance to answer his own question.

Mr. BURKE. I shall answer it if the Senator from New Mexico is unable to do so. Was the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] correct when he stated a few moments ago that in making the additions, permanent or temporary or whatever they are, whatever number is authorized by the bill, it would be necessary for the appointing power to associate the nominee with any existing justiceship on the Court?

Mr. HATCH. It could happen once, just in one instance. If there was just one Justice over the age of 75, then the appointment would necessarily be for that particular Justice. That is the only situation I could think of where that would apply.

Mr. BURKE. Suppose in the second calendar year there was just that same one Justice still over the age of 75. There being a Justice over the age of 75 on the Court, would not the appointing power be able to add a second Justice also?

Mr. HATCH. Oh, no; decidedly no.

Mr. BURKE. Then, the Senator from Kentucky was not correct in saying that under no circumstances is the appointment allocated to an existing Justice?

Mr. HATCH. No; he was not making the kind of technical discussion in which the Senator from Nebraska is now indulging.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. At this time I wish to assure the Senator from New Mexico, who seems to be rather worried about the question submitted by the Senator from Nebraska——

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from New Mexico has not been worried by the question at all.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The Senator from Nebraska can both read and add. He knows what "nine and six" means. He knows what "permanent" means. He knows all these things, and it is not because of the fact that he cannot read or cannot add that he is asking this and other silly questions.

Mr. HATCH. In the course of my remarks I have mentioned the fact that the plan which we are now discussing originated with a present Justice of the Supreme Court, Mr. Justice McReynolds. I find some quite interesting history following the submission of that plan and that report.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. It seems to me the Senator from New Mexico gives too much attention to Justice McReynolds. In 1869 a bill almost identical in terms as the original plan passed the House, but did not receive the approval of the Senate.

Mr. HATCH. That is correct. Such a bill passed the House in 1869. The reason why I single out Justice McReynolds is because his name is the only one I find in connection with this type of legislation. The first name definitely connected and associated with it was that of Attorney General McReynolds, from Tennessee. I also find that in the following year Attorney General Gregory adopted almost word for word the language used by Attorney General McReynolds, and made exactly the same recommendation in the years 1914, 1915, and 1916.

So, first of all, today we find two prominent Democratic Attorneys General of the United States sponsoring the principle for which we contend today—the principle of requiring the appointment of an additional judge whenever a judge on the bench reaches retirement age and has not retired.

Following that, I find several measures introduced in the Congress of the United States carrying into effect the recommendation of the Attorney General. The first was Senate bill 7041, which was almost in the exact language of the recommendation of the Attorney General, and the Judiciary Committee of the United States Senate at that time, in the year 1915 as I recall, reported that bill favorably to the Senate, and there was no dissent, and no minority report. The bill was not passed, however.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. HATCH. I do.

Mr. AUSTIN. I should like to ask the Senator from New Mexico whether he recognizes as true the characterization which we find in the President's message sending down the bill to which this proposed amendment in the nature of a substitute relates? Does he accept, as properly indicating the purpose of those various statutes and those various recommendations of Democratic Attorneys General, the following language, found on page 26 of the printed copy of the report of the majority of the Committee on the Judiciary, to wit:

> The voluntary retirement law of 1869 provided, therefore, only a partial solution. That law, still in force, has not proved effective in inducing aged judges to retire on a pension.

That is my question.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am sure I should not take unto myself the credit of asking the distinguished Senator from Vermont to listen to my remarks; but, if he had been listening a few minutes ago, I think he would realize that I made myself perfectly clear as to what I thought about compulsory retirement of judges. I do not think we can provide for it, nor do I think we should do so under the Constitution; but, because of that, I see no objection whatever to recognizing the outstanding facts of age, time, and experience, and taking some step to protect the Government and to protect the judiciary itself against aged men remaining too long on the bench.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico further yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not think the Senator understood my question, for I think the language immediately following in the President's message shows that the President regarded all efforts at legislation similar to this bill as efforts to secure the objective of inducing aged judges to retire on pensions. Thus, the next paragraph reads as follows:

Mr. HATCH. May I answer the Senator's question?

Mr. AUSTIN. I have not quite completed my question.

Mr. HATCH. Very well, go ahead.

Mr. AUSTIN. The next paragraph reads as follows:

> This result had been foreseen in the debates when the measure was being considered. It was then proposed that when a judge refused to retired upon reaching the age of 70, an additional judge should be appointed to assist in the work of the Court. The proposal passed the House but was eliminated in the Senate.
>
> With the opening of the twentieth century, and the great increase of population and commerce, and the growth of a more complex type of litigation, similar proposals were introduced in the Congress. To meet the situation, in 1913, 1914, 1915, and 1916, the Attorneys General then in office recommended to the Congress that when a district or a circuit judge failed to retire at the age of 70, an additional judge be appointed in order that the affairs of the Court might be promptly and adequately discharged.

Therefore, although I agree fully with the principle declared by the Senator from New Mexico that the Congress has no power directly to coerce judges directly to retire when they have arrived at a certain age, I also believe that the Congress has no power to coerce them indirectly; and I claim that that is the fundamental defect of this particular bill and the pending amendment to it.

Mr. HATCH. I fully understand the position of the Senator from Vermont, and I repeat that I believe I have made fairly clear my own stand on that subject. I do not believe that by this bill we are asking any judge to retire. The only thing we say in this bill is that when there is on the Supreme Court of the United States a man who has reached the age of 75 years, the President of the United States shall appoint an additional Justice; and, as I said before, if the older Justice has retained all of his faculties, let it be to his glory and to his honor and distinction that he continue to serve his country so long as he will. But by the same token, I say to the Senator from Vermont that the Government of the United States and the judiciary of the United States and the people of the United States should not be threatened and endangered by the continued service of men on the Supreme Court without the addition of younger members when the older ones have reached such an age in life and are in such a condition of mental decay that it is dangerous for them to continue in service without the appointment of younger men.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Does the Senator contend that there are on the Supreme Bench at the present time any men who are in that mental state?

Mr. HATCH. Let me say to the Senator from Montana——

Mr. WHEELER. That is a simple question.

Mr. HATCH. Let me answer it in my own way and in my own time by saying that I have tried to look at this situation without regard to individuals all throughout this controversy, and I am still looking at it in that way; but, because I do so, I am not blind to outstanding facts which every man alive knows.

Mr. WHEELER. I appreciate that the Senator has looked at the matter absolutely objectively, and I think everyone else has; but does the Senator think there are upon the Supreme Bench at this time any men whose mental qualifications by reason of age are such that they ought to get off the Supreme Bench?

Mr. HATCH. Let me say to the Senator that in the committee, during the hearings, whenever the question of any individual was raised, I objected. I said, "Let us not take individuals into consideration."

Mr. WHEELER. I am not asking the Senator to give the name of any member of the Supreme Bench.

Mr. HATCH. But we know that there are on the Supreme Bench four men who are over the age of 75 years.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; we know that there are four men in that category.

Mr. HATCH. And now that the Senator has pressed the point, although he knows what I believe, so far as I know those men are able, physically and mentally, to discharge the duties of their office.

Mr. WHEELER. Why, of course.

Mr. HATCH. I have had no contact with them. I have no intimate knowledge of them. They may be physically unable to carry on the heavy burdens of their office. I do not answer "yea" or "nay" on that proposition, and I refuse to legislate in the light of individuals. No legislation should ever be enacted on such a plane.

Mr. WHEELER. I agree with the Senator. Legislation should not be based on individuals. I am in entire accord with the Senator. I have no personal contact with the members of the Supreme Court; but I am convinced that as a matter of fact there are not upon the Supreme Bench at the present time any men who are not mentally and physically capable of carrying on their work. If the object of this proposed legislation is not to remove from the Supreme Bench men who are not physically and mentally capable of carrying on their work, then it seems to me we should not have this legislation at this particular time as applying to the present members of the Court.

Mr. HATCH. As I say, I am not going to be crowded into the position of legislating for this man or that man. What I want to do is to adopt a long-range program in the light of facts and circumstances which we all know, about which we need no testimony whatever.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator has been extremely generous in letting us interrupt him, and I know he must be getting rather weary.

Mr. HATCH. I am getting a little tired.

Mr. WHEELER. But in view of the statement of the Attorney General of the United States when he said, "If these men do not like what is proposed by the bill, they can get off the bench"——

Mr. HATCH. That has not been my idea about this matter.

Mr. WHEELER. I am aware of that; but apparently that was the idea of the Attorney General of the United States: "If they do not like what is proposed by this bill, let them get off." In other words, the attempt was to apply force to remove men from the Supreme Bench because they were 75 years of age.

Mr. HATCH. I think the Attorney General of the United States is amply able to take care of himself, and is amply able to make any answer or any argument which he may desire to make on that or any other question. To my mind, though, in view of some of the charges that have been made against the Attorney General of the United States, it would be perfectly natural and perfectly reasonable for him to reply in any manner and in any way that he saw fit; and in those exchanges between, shall I say, Senators and the Attorney General, as warm as they have become at times, I do not censure anyone for what he may have said in the heat of argument or of strife. I prefer again to look at legislation in the light of facts and circumstances which we know, and to keep individuals and personalities out of it; for whenever we put them in we shall get into deep water and shall not be able to legislate at all.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator from New Mexico desires to have it understood that he is not filibustering, and I think we will all agree that the Senator from New Mexico is not doing that; neither are any other Senators.

Mr. President, in view of what the Senator has said and the nature of the argument he has been making, I ask his permission to insert at this point a provision of the present statutes of the United States. This is to be found in title 28 of the United States Code, section 375, the second part of which reads as follows:

> In the event of any circuit judge, or district judge, having so held a commission or commissions at least 10 years continuously, and having attained the age of 70 years as aforesaid, shall nevertheless remain in office, and not resign or retire as aforesaid, the President, if he finds any such judge unable to discharge efficiently all of the duties of his office by reason of mental or physical disability of permanent character, may, when necessary for the efficient dispatch of business, appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an additional circuit judge of the circuit or district judge of the district to which such disabled judge belongs.

Mr. HATCH. To what particular point would the Senator from Wyoming direct my attention? I know it is not just interest in reading a statute into the RECORD that causes the interruption. Does the Senator have in mind a provision of the law which requires a finding of fact that the judge is mentally or physically disabled or incapacitated?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The President, if he finds that a judge is unable mentally or physically to carry on the duties of his office, may appoint a judge to take his place. That is the law of the land. It may be done. The objection which is raised to the amendment which the Senator brings forward is that, regardless of whether a Justice is mentally or physically able, an additional judge may be appointed.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from Wyoming raises a question which has been raised before, raised in the debates on the very law to which he has referred, and the language which he has read was offered as an amendment to the original bill introduced by the then Senator from Georgia, Mr. Smith, and it was offered by a Republican Member of the Senate because he did not want to give the President of the United States power, as the bill then provided, to appoint additional judges when the public good might require. It was desired then to put a limitation on a Democratic President of the United States, and a statute was enacted that gave to the President power which no President should ever have.

Talk about humiliation, talk about disgracing a judge and making a court subservient, and threatening the judiciary that it might decide cases the way the Executive wants them decided. Under the law just read the Congress of the United States gave the President power to find as a fact, without a word of testimony, without a witness before him, and without an opportunity for an aged judge to be heard in his own behalf, that he was incapable, mentally or physically, of discharging the duties of his office, and thereupon the President could appoint an additional judge. Would the Senator from Wyoming vote for such a measure?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, I shall now read another statute which is on the books. This is section 17 of title 28 of the Judicial Code:

> Whenever any district judge by reason of any disability or necessary absence from his district or the accumulation or urgency of business is unable to perform speedily the work of his district, the senior circuit judge of that circuit, or, in his absence, the circuit justice thereof, may, if in his judgment the public interest requires, designate and assign any district judge of any district court within the same judicial circuit to act as district judge in such district and to discharge all the judicial duties of a judge thereof for such time as the business of the said district court may require.

That was approved on March 4, 1907.

Mr. HATCH. I am thoroughly familiar with the statute the Senator just read, and it does not conflict with anything we are seeking to do today at all. But I wish to get back to the other statute the Senator read. The Senator did not answer my question, but knowing him as I do, I do not believe he ever would have voted for such a statute as that.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that the power has never been used, much less ever abused.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from Wyoming has spoken truthfully when he has stated that that section of the statute has never been abused. Let that be a grain of comfort to those who fear the Presidents of the United States, and fear they are going to use power to create subserviency in the courts. The records show—and I say it to the credit of Woodrow Wilson, Harding, Coolidge, Hoover, and Franklin D. Roosevelt—that, although each of those Presidents had the power and held over the head of every aged judge in the United States a sword which could have humiliated, disgraced, and destroyed him, no President has ever used such power for such purpose. But three times in the history of the country, possibly five times, has the power been known to be used, and naturally I do not wish to call the names of the judges. Never more than five times has it been used. Although the law referred to every judge in the United States below the Supreme Court, every circuit judge and every district judge, courts which decide 98 percent of the litigation which reaches the Federal courts and decide it finally—some of them being little supreme courts—no President has sought to make the judiciary subservient to the Executive, and I say that fact stands to the credit of each and every one of these Presidents; and Senators who fear this day to give the present President power may well look to whether or not their fears are justified, or whether they are merely fancied.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If it be true, as the Senator from New Mexico has implied, that he would not have voted for this statute because it was liable to abuse, then it seems to me to follow with inescapable logic that no Member of the Senate now should vote for another proposed statute that would be equally liable to abuse.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the difference is simply that under the law as it is now written the President has discretion. If he wanted to make a Court subservient he could wave that sword over the head of a timid, shrinking judge, if he so desired. Under the pending bill no such discretion would be given.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That, Mr. President, would be true if the bill were amended.

Mr. HATCH. That will be so before the bill is passed. I have made myself clear on that point, have I not?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator certainly has, and I hope the Senator from New Mexico will propose an amendment to change the word "may" to "shall", so that there may be no doubt in the mind of any other person.

Mr. HATCH. Let us eliminate that doubt between us now. That condition shall not exist.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I understood the Senator to say he did not think the Court had been packed by anyone up to the present time.

Mr. HATCH. Yes; it has been; courts have been packed.

Mr. WHEELER. I mean the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. HATCH. I do not wish to become too personal, but I shall prove, if I ever am allowed to finish my argument, that the courts of the Nation have packed themselves against both the legislative and the executive branches of the Government.

Mr. WHEELER. That is quite a different thing.

Mr. HATCH. They have been packed.

Mr. WHEELER. Does the Senator agree with some persons that the Supreme Court has been packed deliberately by a President of the United States?

Mr. HATCH. Does the Senator mean in times past?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. There is one instance that looks rather suspicious.

Mr. WHEELER. What instance is that?

Mr. HATCH. The Grant administration; but Grant denied it, though some of the historians look rather suspiciously on that transaction.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course, all of Grant's friends denied that he appointed the judges for the purpose charged.

Mr. HATCH. And circumstances in many respects bear them out.

Mr. WHEELER. His enemies all charged him with doing it for the purpose of packing the Court.

Mr. HATCH. That is true, just as today our friends see good in us, while our enemies see evil.

Mr. WHEELER. The statement has been made repeatedly, with reference to the present Supreme Court, by persons who have been uninformed, that it had been deliberately packed by some interests and some Presidents for the purpose of getting decisions, and that now we are seeking to unpack the Court. I take it from the Senator's statement that he does not subscribe to that viewpoint.

Mr. HATCH. I do not subscribe to the viewpoint of either packing or unpacking.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Speaking about "packing", and without referring to the word in the invidious sense, does the Senator think it is a mere coincidence that the Supreme Court since 1869 has been predominantly Republican?

Mr. HATCH. I think not; but, if I may continue——

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

Mr. HATCH. I should like to continue.

Mr. WHEELER. The mere fact that the Supreme Court may be predominantly Republican or predominantly Democratic does not mean that it has been packed in the interest of some particular crowd.

Mr. HATCH. Not necessarily; but if the situation continues too long, suspicions may be aroused.

Mr. WHEELER. It should be remembered that some of the liberal members of the Court have been appointed by Republican Presidents and some of the reactionary members of the Court have been appointed by Democratic Presidents.

Mr. HATCH. That is entirely true.

Mr. President, I was referring to the bill originally introduced in the year 1915 and favorably reported by the Committee on the Judiciary. By the way, I think the report of the Judiciary Committee was unanimous. The bill proposed that the President should have power to appoint an additional Justice, subject only to the limitation that such appointment should be made only when, in his opinion, the public good required. Giving such discretion to the President was, to my mind, unwise. On that committee were some great outstanding men of America, men as devoted to the Constitution and to the Government as any man who ever occupied a seat in this Chamber. Listen to me, Senators, while I read the names of the three Senators who reported that bill. There was the Senator from Georgia, Mr. Smith. There was the Senator from Florida, Mr. Fletcher. Do Senators doubt the patriotism or the motives of those men? And listen to the name of the third member. He was not a Democrat. The third member of the Senate Judiciary Committee was the Senator from New York, Mr. Root. Do Senators doubt his patriotism? Do Senators doubt his wisdom or his judgment? Do Senators think the Senator from New York, Mr. Root, would approve a plan that was destructive of the Constitution and would make the Court subservient to Executive will? Yet the fact is that the bill then reported, which gave this vast discretionary power to the President, was approved by these three eminent Senators; and the only objection raised by the Senator from New York, Mr. Root, was that the language was not strong enough.

On the floor of the Senate on February 23, 1915, during the debate on the bill to which I have just referred, the Senator from Georgia, Mr. Smith, answered the Senator from Wyoming, Mr. Clark, and expressed the attitude of the Senator from New York, Mr. Root, as to such legislation. I am sorry one of the Senators from Wyoming has left the Chamber.

Senator Clark had charged:

> Here we are padding——
>
> "Padding", not "packing"——
>
> Here we are padding the Federal courts with additional judges to take the place of men who are well qualified by years of experience and by their physical vigor to carry on the business of their districts; and we are putting in new men. * * *
>
> Mr. President, it seems to me that it is time, no matter how many offices we may create—let us go into the departmental service and create offices, but for heaven's sake, do not let us make the office of the judge at this time the prey for political appointments.

That was the Senator from Wyoming, Mr. Clark, speaking.

In response to that charge, the Senator from Georgia, Mr. Smith, said:

> Mr. President, I do not think the criticism of the Senator from Wyoming that the purpose of the bill is to pad the judiciary, is just. This measure went to a subcommittee composed of the Senator from New York [Mr. Root], the Senator from Florida [Mr. Fletcher], and myself. The bill was perfected by the unanimous action of the subcommittee, the Senator from New York taking as active an interest in it as any other member of the committee and really favoring stronger language.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I understand from the quotation that the Senator from Wyoming, Mr. Clark, was against padding the Court.

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. He set a very good example.

Mr. HATCH. He was against a Democratic measure designed to accomplish a needed reform, and his argument against it was that it padded the courts.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Whether it was a Democratic measure or a Republican measure, if the Senator from Wyoming believed honestly, as I have no doubt he did, that it was a measure to pad the Court, he was justified in being against it. He would never have been true to his oath of office had he been otherwise.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield just at that point?

Mr. HATCH. I yield. Mr. President, I see that I shall not be able to finish my remarks today.

Mr. BURKE. I recur to the question I asked originally. At the time the subcommittee referred to studied the matter and submitted its report, was there any prevalent criticism of decisions of the Court which motivated such action?

Mr. HATCH. I do not know.

Mr. BURKE. The Senator does not know?

Mr. HATCH. I do not know whether any such situation developed.

Mr. BURKE. Did not the Senators who took that action have in mind an altogether different situation than one involving dissatisfaction with Court decisions?

Mr. HATCH. The Senator is putting me in a position where I must say I do not know.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to ask the date of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD from which he read?

Mr. HATCH. I read from the RECORD of February 23, 1915.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, I am not trying to put the Senator in any position. I am merely trying to get the facts, if he knows them.

Mr. HATCH. If the Senator will pardon me, I should like very much to finish my remarks and surrender the floor, if I may. I think I have yielded fairly, liberally, and consistently.

Mr. BURKE. If the Senator will let me make one more statement, I should like to say that I understand the Senator does agree that the situation is very different where we have a continual course of criticism of the Court's decisions as contrasted with a situation where there has not been such a course of criticism.

Mr. HATCH. I think there is no use of repeating my position.

Mr. BURKE. The Senator agrees to that?

Mr. HATCH. That was my opposition to the original bill; yes, certainly.

Mr. BURKE. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. Again in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD appears a statement setting forth the cordial support of the measure by the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT].

I pass on as quickly as I may, Mr. President. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point the report of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate on proposed legislation at that time and to which I have been referring.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report is as follows:

> The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 706) to amend section 260 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary", approved March 3, 1911, having considered the same, beg leave to report it back and to recommend that it be passed.
>
> The first recommendation made by Mr. Attorney General McReynolds in his report for 1913 was as follows:
>
> Judges of United States courts, at the age of 70, after having served 10 years, may retire upon full pay. In the past many judges have availed themselves of this privilege. Some, however, have remained upon the bench long beyond the time when they were capable of adequately discharging their duties. The power of Congress to correct this condition is limited by the provision of the Constitution that judges shall hold their offices during good behavior. I suggest an act providing when any judge of a Federal court below the Supreme Court fails to avail himself of the privilege of retiring now granted by law that the President be required, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint another judge, who shall preside over the affairs of the Court and have precedence over the older one. This will insure at all times the presence of a judge sufficiently active to discharge promptly and adequately the duties of the Court.
>
> Mr. Attorney General Gregory, in his report for 1914, renewed the recommendation of his predecessor, adopting his exact language.
>
> We had, therefore, at the last session of Congress, the recommendation of Mr. Attorney General McReynolds, now Mr. Justice McReynolds, that judges were remaining upon the bench after they had passed the age of 70 years and long beyond the time when they were capable of adequately discharging their duties, and in consequence the administration of justice had suffered.
>
> We had, also, his recommendation that the President be required, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint another judge, "who shall preside over the affairs of the Court and have precedence over the older one in cases where the judge reached the age of 70, after serving 10 years, and failed to resign."
>
> We had, also, the express endorsement by Mr. Attorney General Gregory of the views of Mr. Attorney General McReynolds on this subject.
>
> A bill to carry out these recommendations was reported favorably by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate at the last session. Mr. Root, the senior Senator at that time, from New York, served upon the subcommittee which reported the bill favorably, and cordially supported the measure.
>
> The report of Mr. Attorney General Gregory for 1915 recommends again this legislation in the following language:
>
> "Judges of United States courts who have attained the age of 70 and have served 10 years may retire upon full pay. In the past many judges have availed themselves of this privilege. Some, however, have remained upon the bench long beyond the time when they were capable of adequately discharging their duties, and in consequence the administration of justice has suffered. The power of Congress to correct this condition is limited by the provision of the Constitution that judges shall hold their offices during good behavior.
>
> "I again renew the suggestion made by my predecessor that Congress pass an act providing that when any judge of a Federal court below the Supreme Court fails to avail himself of the privilege of retiring now granted by law, the President be authorized, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint another judge to preside over the affairs of the court and have precedence over the older one. This will insure at all times the presence of a judge sufficiently active to discharge promptly and adequately the duties of the court."
>
> We have, therefore, three recommendations from the Department of Justice and from two different Attorney Generals, one of whom is now upon the Supreme Court Bench of the United States, recommending this legislation. These recommendations, of course, cover the opinion of the Department of Justice not only that the legislation is needed and is desirable but that it is constitutional.

The bill which the Judiciary Committee reports favorably follows the recommendations of the Department of Justice, except that, instead of requiring the President to appoint an additional judge when a judge of the circuit or district court who has served 10 years reaches 70 years of age, it authorizes the President to make such appointments "if in his opinion the public good so requires."

The bill as favorably reported permits the President to make the appointments but does not require it. There may be cases in which a judge of unusual vigor is capable of performing the work of his circuit or district without injury to his health and without injury to the service, even though he has reached "the days of our years", which, we have been told, are threescore years and ten.

There are now seven positions upon the circuit court bench where judges have served more than 10 years and have passed 70 years of age. There are also seven positions upon the district court bench where the same situation exists.

In a majority of these cases it is probable that the service would be improved and the health of the judges saved by the immediate appointment of the judges authorized by this bill.

Giving an extreme case, there is a circut court judge now more than 80 years of age who, I am informed, for more than 4 years has been entirely unable to attend sessions of the circuit court of appeals or do any business, and who has no prospect of ever being able to again perform the work of circuit court judge. For a number of years before he ceased to sit upon the circuit court of appeals he was not capable of efficiently performing the full duties of the office, yet he has failed to resign and the work of the court has suffered for the lack of a judge.

This bill will in future relieve the circuit and district court bench from the clogging of business by the lack of a judge of sufficient youth to give it proper attention. It will prevent the necessity for resignation, and thus retain the services of judges who have passed 70 to the extent they are abie to do judicial work.

Mr. HATCH. The Senate committee, needless to say, reported the measure favorably.

I should also like to have included in my remarks at this point certain excerpts from statements made in a speech by the Senator from Georgia, Mr. Smith, on March 23, 1916, concerning the wisdom of such legislation. I had desired very much to read many of these worth-while statements and remarks; but, due to the passage of time, I ask instead that they be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, Senate bill 706 provides a remedy for a trouble which now exists in connection with our circuit and district courts. It is intended to complete a plan for the relief of the Federal, district, and circuit courts. By the terms of the Constitution, the judicial power is vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as Congress may from time to time ordain and establish, and the judges shall hold their office during good behavior. It was found years ago that some relief must be given against the presence upon the bench of Federal judges advancing in years.

* * * * * * *

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It was found years ago necessary to protect the administration of justice in the circuit and district courts against the failure of the judges to do their full work owing to advancing years, and for this reason an act of Congress was passed permitting Federal judges to retire at the age of 70 with full pay.

Unquestionably the subject before Congress when that act was passed was the designation of a time after which, probably, the district and circuit court judges would not be in a position to do efficient work. Seventy was named as a time when they could retire with full pay, upon the theory that having reached threescore and ten—the allotted period certainly of active life, if not of life—it was not to be expected that they would be able to continue to fill the offices they held and measure up to the responsibility of those offices.

Later on it has been found that even the provision allowing judges to retire at 70 does not meet the situation.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. WORKS. Does not the Senator from Georgia think it would be very much better to make retirement compulsory at 70?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am not sure that it could be done.

Mr. WORKS. It could not under the Constitution undoubtedly; it would be necessary to amend the Constitution; but does not the Senator think that would be much better than conditions as they exist at the present time?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think it would be better than the conditions as they now exist, but I do not think that is preferable to the plan we now lay before the Senate. I believe we have worked out the very best way to handle this subject.

I was stating, Mr. President, that experience has shown that the provision allowing judges to retire at 70 did not fully meet the trouble that caused the act to be passed which allowed them to retire. A number of judges reaching 70 did not retire but retained office and failed to do the full work of their office. The desire to hold office, the desire to have something to do, in many instances, the desire, perhaps, in some cases, to retain the patronage connected with the office, prevented circuit and district judges from retiring at 70. They are now, in a number of instances, holding office to the detriment of the proper discharge of the duties of the offices which they fill, and they are thereby preventing a proper administration of justice.

Mr. President, so necessary was it that relief should be given against the Federal judges who were past 70 that the subject came before the Department of Justice for consideration, and the very first paragraph of the report of the Attorney General in 1913 calls attention to this subject and requests legislation. We all know that Mr. Justice McReynolds, now of the Supreme Court Bench, was then Attorney General, and the first paragraph of his report in 1913 urges this subject upon the attention of Congress and requests legislation.

* * * * * * *

The real necessity for such legislation is the subject to which, first, I wish to address myself. We are admonished it is necessary by the Department of Justice, not only by Mr. Attorney General McReynolds making this report in 1913, but his report was followed with the same language by his successor, Attorney General Gregory, in 1914, and followed in substantially the same language by the Attorney General in 1915.

What does that mean? It means that the Department of Justice, familiar with the work that is being done in the various district and circuit courts of the United States, with the large volume of business for the Government before those courts, feels that it is necessary to relieve the courts against inefficient work by judges past 70 years of age.

But it has been suggested that where a judge past 70 fails to retire and the business of the Court suffers from his age, relief can be given by a special statute authorizing an appointment such as this bill authorizes. Evidently the Department of Justice did not consider such a course was sufficient. Evidently the experience of the Department of Justice was that separate bills have not met the requirements, and it is easy to point out that they have not and do not.

In the fifth circuit there is a circuit court judge who has not been upon the bench in 4 years and who for 4 years before had not been upon the bench half the time the court was in session. For 4 years he has been confined at his home. He is 82 years old. For 12 years he has had the privilege of retiring, and he would not retire. Bill after bill has been introduced to provide an additional judge for the circuit, and it has never gone through Congress. Here is proof of the fact that the individual bill remedy does not meet the situation. That circuit also has another judge 78 years old upon the bench, who today cannot do the work that he did 20 years ago or 10 years ago. Why do they not retire? I believe largely and principally because they dread to have nothing to do.

This bill meets that trouble. It names a new judge to carry the burden of the work and leaves the older judge still with judicial authority and judicial power, subject to assignment for special work. There is ample work to occupy them even if the additional judges are appointed.

A judge past 70 may be unable to stand the fatigue, the labor, the mental and physical strain of the entire work of a district, but he could do work half the time and work well. He could be assigned to some district by the Chief Justice where his work was needed to relieve a crowded docket. If there is need for it, he can help in his own district. He still can be called on to serve his country and do his work to the extent of his physical capacity. This bill will enable the Government to obtain much valuable service from judges who otherwise would retire on full pay.

The recommendation of the Attorney General was brought to my attention by two United States court judges, one a district and the other a circuit judge, each past 70, who did not wish to quit entirely but were anxious that the bill recommended by the Attorney General should pass, and that they might still contribute to the service of their country while they were drawing a salary such work as their country might need from them.

This bill not only makes it certain that there will be an active judge to handle the business of the district and the circuit, thereby insuring to litigants the prompt and efficient attention they are entitled to for their business, thereby insuring to the Government the prompt and efficient trial of Government cases; but it will be a great economy. Where a district court judge is old and slow the cost to the Government in the Government business of its witnesses and the administration of the court far exceeds the mere salary of an additional judge.

The judges themselves, at least a majority of them whom I know and from whom I have heard, are desirous that this bill shall pass. I have a letter from a retired district court judge in Wyoming or Idaho expressing regret that we did not extend the bill so as to allow those who had already retired to do work to the extent of their continuing strength.

Mr. HATCH. At this point, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, and really to call as witnesses, the names of the 33 Members of the Senate of the United States who voted in favor of the passage of that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Senate vote on Senate bill 706, December 7, 1916:

Yeas—33: Messrs. Bankhead, Chamberlain, Fletcher, Gore, Hitchcock, Hughes, Husting, James, Johnson of South Dakota, La Follette, Lane, Lea of Tennessee, Lee of Maryland, Martin of Virginia, Martine of New Jersey, Overman, Owen, Pittman, Pomerene, Reed, Saulsbury, Shafroth, Sheppard, Shields, Simmons, Smith of Arizona, Smith of Georgia, Smith of South Carolina, Stone, Swanson, Tillman, Underwood, and Williams.

Mr. HATCH. The bill went to the House of Representatives, and there a vote was had, but the bill failed of passage in the House. Among the Members of the House who voted for the bill I observe the names of several who now occupy seats in this body. Among the names are those of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY]; also the name of Mr. Hull, of Tennessee, now Secretary of State.

Those Members of the House of Representatives, Mr. President, voted in favor of a bill which the minority report of the House committee condemned as unconstitutional, as constituting an invasion of judicial power by the executive branch of the Government; and to those names I want to add the name of another distinguished Member of the House who voted for the bill. If I am not correct in this, I ask the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] to correct me. I found among those voting "yea" at that time, in favor of the principle of adding a new judge when the incumbent had passed the retirement age—the exact principle for which we this day contend—the name of the Member from Kansas, Mr. Jouett Shouse. If I am not mistaken——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have not looked up the roll call on that bill recently; but, relying purely on my recollection, the Senator from New Mexico is correct.

Mr. HATCH. The name of Mr. Shouse is on the roll call. I wonder if he could happen to be the same man who has held some sort of connection with an institution or organization called the Liberty League.

Mr. BARKLEY. If there is any other Jouett Shouse, I know nothing about him.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I think I can enlighten the Senator as to that. Mr. Shouse has been residing in my State for some time, and he is the secretary of the Liberty League and the manager of it, though he does not contribute the money; but he draws a salary of $50,000 a year.

Mr. HATCH. He is the same man, then?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes; and he receives $50,000 a year.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask to include the complete roll in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the matter will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Senate bill 706 was sent to the House of Representatives, and on the 2d day of March 1917 the question of whether the Senate bill should pass was voted on in the House. The measure was defeated by a vote of 192 yeas as against 200 nays.

In the House vote it is interesting to note that certain of those House Members afterward became Members of the Senate. Some of those names appearing as voting for the passage of the bill when they were Members of the House are: Messrs. Barkley, Byrnes of South Carolina, Caraway, Connally, Harrison of Mississippi, Hayden, Hull, McKellar, Neely.

I must not forget to include with those House Members who voted for S. 706 the name of a Democratic Member from the State of Kansas. He also approved the idea of an orderly infusion of new blood. His name was Jouett Shouse. He is so recorded.

The Vice President, then a Member of the House, voted for the principle now involved in the pending measure.

The following Members voted for S. 706 in the House March 2, 1917:

Yeas—192: Abercrombie, Adair, Adamson, Aiken, Alexander, Almon, Ashbrook, Aswell, Ayres, Bailey, Barkley, Barnhart, Bell, Black, Blackmon, Booher, Borland, Buchanan of Illinois, Buchanan of Texas, Burgess, Burke, Burnett, Byrnes of South Carolina, Byrns of Tennessee, Caldwell, Chandler of Mississippi, Cantrill, Caraway, Carlin, Carter of Oklahoma, Casey, Church, Clark of Florida, Cline, Coady, Collier, Connelly, Cox, Crisp, Crosser, Cullop, Dale of New York, Davenport, Decker, Dent, Dewalt, Dickinson, Dies, Dixon, Doolittle, Doremus, Doughton, Dupre, Eagan, Eagle, Edwards, Estopinal, Evans, Ferris, Fields, Fitzgerald, Flood, Foster, Gandy, Gard, Garner, Glass, Godwin of North Carolina, Goodwin of Arkansas, Gordon, Gray of Alabama, Gray of Indiana, Gregg, Hamlin, Hardy, Harrison of Mississippi, Harrison of Virginia, Hastings, Hayden, Heflin, Helm, Helvering, Henry, Hilliard, Holland, Hood, Houston, Howard, Huddleston, Hughes, Hull of Tennessee, Humphreys of Mississippi, Igoe, Jacoway, Johnson of Kentucky, Keating, Key of Ohio, Kincheloe, Kitchin, Konop, Lazaro, Lee, Lesher, Lever, Lewis, Lieb, Linthicum, Littlepage, Lloyd, Lobeck, London, McAndrews, McClintick, McCorkle, McGillicuddy, McKellar, McLemore, Mays, Montague, Moon, Morgan of Louisiana, Morrison, Murray, Neely, Nicholls of South Carolina, Oglesby, Oldfield, Oliver, Olney, O'Shaunessy, Overmyer, Padgett, Page of North Carolina, Park, Patten, Phelan, Pou, Price, Quin, Ragsdale, Rainey, Raker, Randall, Rayburn, Reilly, Riordan, Rouse, Rubey, Rucker of Georgia, Rucker of Missouri, Russell of Missouri, Sabath, Saunders, Sears, Shackleford, Shallenberger, Sherley, Shouse, Sims, Small, Smith of New York, Smith of Texas, Steagall, Stedman, Steele of Iowa, Steele of Pennsylvania, Stephens of Mississippi, Stephens of Nebraska, Stephens of Texas, Stone, Sumners, Taggart, Talbott, Tavenner, Taylor of Arkansas, Taylor of Colorado, Thomas, Thompson, Tillman, Van Dyke, Venable, Vinson, Walker, Watson of Virginia, Webb, Whaley, Williams, W. E., Wilson of Louisiana, Wingo, Wise, Young of Texas, Watkins.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am about to approach an unpleasant task, but duty compels me to undertake it. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that on the three measures providing for the same principle as set forth in the President's bill and in the amendment which we are now discussing there was one Member of this honorable body who adopted a steady and consistent course then and now. If I may have the attention of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] I may say that on the roll calls on these various votes since 1915 down to this good day the Senator from Arizona has been found supporting the principle for which he now contends. The Senator from Arizona has been consistent. [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. That may be a dubious compliment. I just finished a conversation with a friend, and told him that in my service here I never examine to see how I voted in the past. Many Senators—and I respect them for it—when a vote comes, look to see how they voted yesterday or the day before. I never do that. Each problem must be solved by the facts, contingencies, and circumstances that present themselves at the particular time.

I had forgotten the incident; it was an inconspicuous part I played; and will the Senator from New Mexico permit me to thank him—and I think the Senate feels that thanks are due—for the patience, the assiduity, and the diligence with which he has made research into this question. His speech today, whether we agree with him or not, evinces historical investigation.

The able Senator from New Mexico states a fact, and I now remember the bill, although it has been over 22 years ago since the question was raised and discussed. I am glad to have it noted, for what satisfaction it may give, that my action in supporting the pending bill is in no sense in contradiction of the action I took at that time. Much as I have changed my mind, on this question at least I have never changed my mind, and a defense of my position in this respect never occurred to me until just now when I heard it fall from the lips of the able Senator from New Mexico. I do not think I need any defense, but, if I did, he has made a superb one, founded in truth. I am not much for defensive explanations, because, Mr. President, a public man who makes an explanation today will tomorrow be explaining his own explanation. [Laughter.]

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, in the course of my search of the records concerning these various bills, I found some other interesting matter. At this point I am about to insert in the RECORD a letter. I regret very much that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is not present at the moment.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. The able Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], who is one of the able lawyers of this body, asked a question, if I heard him aright, as to whether or not when the question was pending in 1915, there was before the country any such excitement or discussion as to the Supreme Court as is now pervading the country.

Mr. HATCH. That is correct.

Mr. ASHURST. Did the Senator from Nebraska ask that question?

Mr. BURKE. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. It was a natural question; the logical mind of the Senator would prompt it. I wish to say it will be recalled that about in 1910 a tremendous public discussion arose throughout the country with respect to the Federal courts. It was in 1911 that Theodore Roosevelt, speaking in Ohio, urged the recall of judges. It will be remembered that in both the Democratic and Republican national conventions in 1912 one of the most important questions, one of the questions which was at the forefront, was the one affecting judges. It was widely claimed that they had usurped the legislative functions of the Government. It is true that, by 1915, the acuteness of the question had somewhat subsided, but the genesis of the pending legislation was almost in the very spot-center of the tremendous agitation that stirred the public mind at that time regarding the alleged usurpation of legislative power by the Court.

Mr. HATCH. I am grateful to the Senator from Arizona for his contribution on that point.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico yield in order that I may ask the Senator from Arizona a question?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Did the Senator from Arizona support the legislation in 1915 because he wanted to put additional members on the Court in order to curb the activities of the Justices or because he wanted to effect and to secure a different line of decisions?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, that was 22 years ago. I wish to give the able Senator from Nebraska a fair answer. The Senator from Nebraska asked me if I supported the bill then pending for the reason indicated. Call the roll of Senators and let them open the door of the sanctuary which is within the breast of every human being, that monitor that tells them when they are right or wrong, and on their honor they are sometimes unable to say just what particular factors determined them to vote this way or that way. When we look back upon a vote, sometimes within 10 minutes after a vote, it is quite difficult to say just what particular factor caused us to vote this way or that way. That is not easy to do. I may assign one reason and others may assign a different reason.

However, I am asked if my vote in 1915, and if my activity, modest as it was, in the committee at that time were prompted by a desire to secure a different line of decisions.

About that time, or possibly a year or two previously, the then able Senator from Iowa, Mr. Cummins, who is remembered here with affection and respect, submitted to this body from the Committee on the Judiciary a report couched in dignified language, to the effect that the people would never permit the Court to become the legislative power of the country; that they would never permit the Court to invade the legislative branch. It is quite likely, Mr. President, although I am asked to reply quickly, that when I cast that vote in 1915, which was in accordance with my present views, I was impressed with the idea that the Court had invaded the legislative power of the Government.

Mr. President, I was not alone in that view. The able Senator from New Mexico has referred to the late Elihu Root. I refer to Senator Root with affection. As a lawyer interesting matter. At this point I am about to insert in the Yet Mr. Root had the same view, and took the view that if the courts began to trench upon and to usurp the legislative function the method to obviate it would be to infuse or transfuse new blood into the Court. I do not know that he used that language.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to a question, I should like to challenge the Senator from Arizona at this time to produce that language or any language of Senator Elihu Root that bears the remotest resemblance to the statement he has just made.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator has challenged me. I cannot answer, because Senator Root did not use that exact language.

Mr. BURKE. Nor anything like it.

Mr. ASHURST. But the effect of his argument, the effect of his vote, the effect of the report, the effect of his activity in the committee were that he wanted additional judges to serve on the Federal bench to take the place of those who by reason of extreme debility, had manifested, if any of them had, a willful deliberate desire to take the bit in their teeth and run riot contrary to the wishes of the people of the country and to the genius of our institution. Of course Senator Root would not have stated it in the rather blunt and rough words I have used, but let me say to my friend from Nebraska that Senator Root had that idea in mind or he could not have cast the vote he did.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President——

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, may I regain the floor in my own right for just for a few minutes?

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, may I speak just one sentence?

Mr. HATCH. Very well, just one sentence.

Mr. BURKE. I will say to the Senator from Arizona that in my own time I shall set forth very fully the views of Mr. Elihu Root on this subject, and I am sure the Senator from Arizona will then want to strike from the RECORD or qualify anything he may have said today in reference to Senator Root's reason for supporting that piece of legislation.

Mr. ASHURST. We will meet on this common ground, that Senator Root supported in the committee and voted for a bill which, in my judgment, did nothing more or less than this bill proposes to do.

Mr. HATCH. That was a bill applying to the lower courts, however.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from Nebraska does not contend otherwise than that, does he? He does not contend that Senator Root was not a member of that subcommittee?

Mr. BURKE. Oh, no.

Mr. HATCH. Nor does he deny the statements of former Senator Smith, of Georgia, and Members of the House made through the course of those debates after Senator Root had left the Senate, that he favored the legislation and the bill which the subcommittee was considering when he was a member of it and which contained not the limitation the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] read, but which followed the language almost requested and desired by the then Attorney General, Mr. McReynolds.

Mr. BURKE. What I am saying in reference to Senator Root while he was in the Senate and outside is that he never favored any legislation proposing to add judges to any court for the purpose of influencing the decisions of the court.

Mr. HATCH. No; but the then Senator from New York, Mr. Root, did recognize the evils which come with aged Justices remaining too long on the bench and he sought to find a remedy by which that evil could be overcome. The remedy he suggested and for which he voted as a member of the subcommittee was the same remedy we seek to apply today to the Supreme Court. He was not alone in that.

Mr. WHEELER rose.

Mr. HATCH. Pardon me, but I decline to yield further.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Mexico declines to yield further.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to offer for the RECORD another letter, a letter written by another outstanding jurist and statesman who has been quoted time and time again throughout the debate, a man whom Senators admire and respect. It is in the RECORD, a part of the history of Congress. In a letter which he wrote the present Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States approved a plan of appointing an additional judge whenever the incumbent on the bench below the Supreme Court passed the age of retirement and did not retire.

On June 27, 1918, Charles Evans Hughes wrote this letter to Hon. H. J. Steele, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I trust that House bill No. 12001 will not fail to pass.

That was the bill which finally became a law, and which contained a limitation restricting it to judges who were mentally and physically disabled, and gave the President of the United States the power to find those questions as a fact. The letter continued:

As I have already written to Congressman Caraway, I regard it as a highly important measure which should be passed in justice to the judges and in the interest of the public. I stated the grounds of this opinion in my letter to Congressman Caraway, and I need not enlarge upon them. I write now to say that I am also in favor of the provisions in House bill no. 12001, relating to the retirement of circuit and district judges. I was not in favor of the provisions embraced in House bill No. 11134, relating to the compulsory retirement of district judges, but these provisions have been eliminated and under House bill 12001 circuit and district judges have been put on the same basis with regard to retirement, and these provisions it seems to me are eminently wise.

Very sincerely yours,

CHARLES E. HUGHES.

I will say, in justice to the present Chief Justice, that he was referring to the provisions of a bill which created additional compensation for judges. The present junior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] voted against it in the House, although he had previously voted for the first bill which did not carry the feature of compensation.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, did the Senator from New Mexico make some reference to the junior Senator from Texas?

Mr. HATCH. Yes; I referred to the junior Senator from Texas. I am sorry he was not here when I did so. In the discussion of the various bills which have been before the House and Senate throughout the years I merely read the record of the votes and showed that a bill embodying this same principle had failed of passage in the House of Representatives, although the present junior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] voted in favor of the bill in the House.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I challenge the Senator from New Mexico to find any vote or any sentiment ever uttered by the junior Senator from Texas favoring the idea that, because a judge did not decide as he would want him to decide, additional judges ought to be put on the bench. That is the issue here.

Mr. HATCH. I never made any such statement, nor do I recognize that as the issue. I made no such statement as that, I assure the Senator from Texas.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HATCH. I am very anxious to conclude, but I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. Does not the Senator think there is a vast difference between increasing the number of Justices on the Supreme Court of the United States by this method and increasing the number of judges of the inferior courts by this method?

Mr. HATCH. I do.

Mr. WHEELER. The proposition as to the inferior courts is vastly different because the Supreme Court is the final arbiter.

Mr. HATCH. I say to the Senator from Montana that the distinction I make is that there is more need for such a law as applied to the Supreme Court than as applied to the inferior courts. I shall not ask the Senator from Montana to take my word for that, because I shall also prove it by the utterances of eminent statesmen and jurists and thus show the truth of the statement.

Mr. WHEELER. Adding to the number of judges when incumbents are 70 or 75 years of age may be packing, even in the case of the lower courts. There is a vast difference between doing such a thing to the lower courts and doing it to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. HATCH. I should like to argue the matter further with the Senator from Montana, but I am anxious to conclude. I am going to deal with that point later and shall submit some evidence which I am sure even he will consider quite conclusive.

Mr. President, the effect of the letter of Chief Justice Hughes, to which I was referring, was disclosed in the debate which took place in the House. The question of whether the bill was constitutional was raised, and Representative Webb said:

Does the gentleman think that so eminent a man as Mr. Justice Hughes would say he regards this provision as eminently wise if he thought it was unconstitutional?

Mr. TOWNER. I think that Judge Hughes never gave the constitutional question any consideration at that time.

Mr. WEBB. Oh, yes; Judge Hughes had this under consideration for quite a while.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Yes; he did, in the section letter.

Mr. WALSH. There is not a word about the constitutionality of it.

Mr. WEBB. I read from the letter of June 27, 1918, addressed to Hon. H. J. Steele:

"I was not in favor of the provisions embraced in House bill No. 11134, relating to the compulsory retirement of district judges, but these provisions have been eliminated, and under House bill No. 12001 circuit and district judges have been put on the same basis with regard to retirement, and these provisions, it seems to me, are eminently wise."

That is the letter which I just read for the RECORD a moment ago. At that time those Members of the House construed that the present Chief Justice had approved the legislation then proposed.

There is much more of the debate along that line which I will not take the time to present.

That debate took place on December 13, 1918; but, referring to the point raised by the Senator from Wyoming, I will not answer it. Let us get back and see what was said about the matter then—not what some of the proponents of the measure said, but let us see what some of its opponents said.

We find in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 29, 1916, the following exchange between the then Senator from Iowa, Mr. Cummins, and the then Senator from Utah, Mr. Sutherland. Mr. Cummins said:

The Supreme Court of the United States is constitutionally as vulnerable to the attack made upon the judiciary in the bill as is either the circuit court of appeals or the district court. If a judge, who has passed beyond the age of 70 years and refuses to resign, ought to be retired, and if his judicial power, no matter what may be his physical and mental condition, should be taken away from him, the reason is as potent in its application to the Supreme Court as it is to any other Federal court.

The then Senator from Utah, Mr. Sutherland, said:

Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Iowa a question?

The Senator from Iowa yielded; and the Senator from Utah, Mr. Sutherland, said:

I ask the Senator from Iowa whether or not the reason in the case which he is supposing would not be stronger as applied to the Supreme Court, because there is a certain degree of flexibility in the circuit court of appeals and in the district court; that is, the judges are to a certain extent interchangeable. If a judge upon the bench of the circuit court of appeals is incapacitated, a district judge may be called to take his place and may sit upon the circuit court of appeals; if a district judge is incapacitated, another district judge may be assigned to take his place; but no such condition exists as to the Supreme Court of the United States. Nobody else can be called into that court. So, if there are degrees in a matter of that kind, I ask the Senator from Iowa whether he does not think the reason would be stronger in favor of such legislation as to the Supreme Court?

Mr. CUMMINS. Undoubtedly, Mr. President, the observation of the Senator from Utah has great weight, and I was about to touch upon that phase of the subject. The remark I had made was that, constitutionally speaking, the Supreme Court of the United States can be dealt with in precisely the same way as the circuit court or the district court can be dealt with. From the other point of view, that of policy, there is, as the Senator from Utah has stated, a much more persuasive reason for at all times keeping the Supreme Court full of able-bodied men under 70 years of age than exists with regard to the other Federal courts.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I am not unmindful of the fact that a man who is on the Supreme Bench, and who reaches the age of 75 years, if he is incompetent, ought to retire; but the difference, it seems to me, is apparent. It seems to me that all this talk about the age of the Justices is beside the question. Let me call attention to the fact that the Assistant Attorney General of the United States, Mr. Keenan, in a public speech at Tulsa, Okla., made the statement that "what we want is six judges whom we can trust." Let me further call attention to the fact that Mr. Keenan is the man who was constantly in attendance on the Judiciary Committee arranging for the appearance of witnesses there, and I am told that he is one of the men who drafted the proposed legislation.

Are we to take the word of the Assistant Attorney General when he said, "What we want is six judges whom we can trust"? And is it not a subterfuge to say that this proposed legislation is based upon the ages of the Justices, simply because there happen to be on the Supreme Bench at the present time some men who are over 75 years of age?

The real issue in this case is not the age of the Justices of the Supreme Court. Nobody connected with this administration wants to get Mr. Justice Brandeis out because he is 75 or 80 years of age. What they want is to have on the Supreme Bench, as Mr. Keenan said, six men whom they can trust. I cannot conceive that all this talk about age is anything but camouflage. We know that is what it is. Why are we not frank and honest about it?

Mr. HATCH. I do not know just what the Senator from Montana means by his last statement, that "all this talk about age is camouflage."

Mr. WHEELER. I do not refer to the Senator from New Mexico. When the office of the Attorney General, who drafted the bill, says, "What we want is six men whom we can trust", then I say for them to come out and put the reason for this legislation on the ground of age is camouflage.

Mr. HATCH. I do not want to get into more of these side debates. I desire to finish the argument.

I will say to the Senator from Montana that I do not know what motives or purposes inspire any man. We are all subject to criticism; but when the President of the United States sent to this body a message in which he said that he believed in the enactment of legislation which would provide a systematic and regular way of adding younger blood to the courts I consider that it was my duty as a member of his party and as a Member of this body to believe the President and try to make the legislation what the President said he wanted. That I have done; and it does not lie in the mouth of the Senator from Montana or any other man to say to me that I have tried to do any other thing.

Mr. WHEELER. But when the President sent that message to Congress, he also sent up a bill; and the Senator from New Mexico sat as a member of the Judiciary Committee and listened for 6 weeks to the testimony given before that committee, and voted against reporting the bill favorably.

Mr. HATCH. I did.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator not only voted against reporting the bill favorably, but he signed the report of the Judiciary Committee against the bill.

Mr. HATCH. I did.

Mr. WHEELER. Everything that may be said about the original bill providing for the appointment of six additional Justices may be said about the amendment that is proposed to the bill. When the Senator from New Mexico puts his advocacy of the amendment on the basis that he wishes to go along with his party, I remind him that the President of the United States wanted six additional judges just as much as and more than he wants the number provided for in the amendment.

Mr. HATCH. I have not put my advocacy of the amendment on the basis that I want to go along with my party on this measure. I think I demonstrated what I wanted to do when it was sought to make the question a party issue. The Senator from Montana knows how I cast my vote; but I did believe it to be my duty as a Member of this body to take that which I saw to be good in the bill and make it conform to the wishes and desires of the President of the United States as set forth in his message.

Another former distinguished Member of this body, the then Senator from Rhode Island, Mr. Colt, said:

> It may be said that the application of the principle of this bill to the Supreme Court bears a close analogy in its mode of operation and effect to its application to the nine circuit courts of appeal. These courts may be called little supreme courts, since they are courts of last resort in most cases, and they were established for the very purpose of relieving the Supreme Court. Indeed, as pointed out by the Senator from Utah [Mr. Sutherland], there is even more justification for applying this bill to the Supreme Court by reason of the flexibility of the circuit and districts courts, owing to the interchange of the judges in these courts.

Mr. President, many other statements could be read sustaining this proposition.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HATCH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I understand that the Senator is drawing to the close of his discussion.

Mr. HATCH. I hope so.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If the Senator will yield to me, I desire at this point to offer an amendment to the proposed substitute.

Mr. HATCH. Very well.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. On page 2, line 3, after the word "year", I propose to insert the following:

> nor within 12 months after any such appointment has been made.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, as I had started to say, I have much other material on my desk which I expect to use later in the progress of the debate. But I shall not detain the Senate longer today, except to say, as I said in the beginning, and as I said in the early part of the hearings on the President's bill, the bill contains a limitation that not more than one Justice shall be appointed in any one year, and also a provision that the Court shall return to its original number of nine, and those two provisions now make of the bill a sound and constructive measure which will bring about a long-needed reform in the judicial system of this country.

HOUR OF MEETING AND ORDER FOR RECESS TOMORROW

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its labors today it take a recess until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning, and that at the hour of 1 o'clock p. m. tomorrow it take a recess until 12 o'clock noon the following day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nomination of William J. Hughes to be postmaster at Loris, S. C., in place of W. J. Hughes.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers for promotion in the Navy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the nomination on the calendar will be stated.

POSTMASTER

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Chester A. Brown to be postmaster at Idaho Springs, Colo.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

That completes the Executive Calendar.

RECESS

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate take a recess, pursuant to the order heretofore entered.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess, the recess being, under the order previously entered, until tomorrow, July 7, 1937, at 10 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate July 6, 1937

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

Grenville T. Emmet, of New York, now Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Netherlands, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Austria, vice George S. Messersmith.

Ray Atherton, of Illinois, now a Foreign Service officer of class 1 and counselor of Embassy at London, England, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Bulgaria, vice Frederick A. Sterling.

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY

MARINE CORPS

Lt. Col. Jeter R. Horton, assistant quartermaster, to be an assistant quartermaster in the Marine Corps with the rank of colonel from the 1st day of July 1937.

Lt. Col. Sydney S. Lee to be a colonel in the Marine Corps from the 1st day of July 1937.

Maj. Field Harris to be a lieutenant colonel in the Marine Corps from the 30th day of June 1937.

Maj. Roy C. Swink to be a lieutenant colonel in the Marine Corps from the 30th day of June 1937.

The following-named majors to be lieutenant colonels in the Marine Corps from the 1st day of July 1937:

Donald Curtis
Ery M. Spencer
William N. Best

The following-named majors to be majors in the Marine Corps to correct the dates from which they take rank as previously nominated and confirmed:

Edward G. Hagen, from the 1st day of September 1936.
Bailey M. Coffenberg, from the 1st day of November 1936.
Samuel W. Freeny, from the 1st day of December 1936.
Otto E. Bartoe, from the 1st day of January 1937.
John K. Martenstein, from the 3d day of January 1937.
John Kaluf, from the 1st day of February 1937.
Albert W. Paul, from the 1st day of March 1937.
Arthur D. Challacombe, from the 1st day of April 1937.
William F. Brown, from the 22d day of April 1937.

Capt. Ralph W. Culpepper to be a major in the Marine Corps from the 1st day of June 1937.

The following-named captains to be majors in the Marine Corps from the 30th day of June 1937:

Paul R. Cowley	Paul A. Lesser
George D. Hamilton	William D. Bassett
Norman E. True	James D. Waller
Carl W. Meigs	Cyril W. Martyr

Capt. Frank S. Gilman to be a major in the Marine Corps from the 1st day of July 1937.

Capt. Thomas J. Cushman to be a major in the Marine Corps from the 1st day of July 1937.

The following-named first lieutenants to be captains in the Marine Corps from the 30th day of June 1937:

Paul D. Sherman	Francis H. Williams
John Wehle	Paul W. Russell
William P. Battell	Frank M. Reinecke
Cornelius P. Van Ness	John M. Davis
Lewis R. Tyler	Walfried H. Fromhold
Archibald D. Abel	James T. Wilbur
Charles E. Shepard, Jr.	Charles H. Hayes
Peter A. McDonald	Donald M. Weller
Michael M. Mahoney	Samuel S. Yeaton
Frank G. Wagner, Jr.	Edward A. Montgomery
Paul Moret	Edgar O. Price
Harold W. Bauer	Robert E. Hill
William B. McKean

The following-named first lieutenants to be captains in the Marine Corps from the 1st day of July 1937:

James M. Daly	Wright C. Taylor
Ronald D. Salmon	Marcellus J. Howard
Ernest W. Fry, Jr.

The following-named citizens to be second lieutenants in the Marine Corps, revocable for 2 years, from the 1st day of July 1937:

Fletcher L. Brown, Jr., a citizen of Florida.
John F. Dunlap, a citizen of Georgia.
Glenn E. Fissel, a citizen of Ohio.
John J. Gormley, a citizen of Maryland.
James D. Hittle, a citizen of Michigan.
Hugh R. Nutter, a citizen of California.
Robert H. Ruud, a citizen of North Dakota.
Joseph L. Stewart, a citizen of Alabama.
Marvin C. Stewart, a citizen of Mississippi.
Tom M. Trotti, a citizen of South Carolina.
Jack F. Warner, a citizen of California.

CONFIRMATION

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate July 6, 1937

POSTMASTER

COLORADO

Chester A. Brown, Idaho Springs.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JULY 6, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our Father upon earth, who has committed unto us the solemn trust of the public service, keep us deeply conscious of our responsibilities. Direct us with Thy most gracious favor and further us with Thy continued help. We pray Thee to give us that due sense of all Thy mercies, that our hearts may be unfeignedly thankful. Day by day enable us to show forth Thy praise in our behavior by walking before Thee in truth and righteousness. We entreat Thee, blessed Lord, at the beginning of these days, that we may free ourselves of irritations, impatience, and worries, and thereby extend our spiritual frontiers and enlarge the boundaries of our understanding. Thou Holy One, our Passover, may we remember Thee with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth; whosoever shall do Thy will the same is our brother. Merciful, gracious Lord, increase the strength and the number of our brotherhood. Through Jesus Christ our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, July 2, 1937, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 6287. An act to amend Public Act No. 467, Seventy-third Congress, entitled "Federal Credit Union Act"; and

H. R. 6737. An act to amend the stamp provisions of the Bottling in Bond Act.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 7562. An act to encourage and promote the ownership of farm homes and to make the possession of such homes more secure, to provide for the general welfare of the United States, to provide additional credit facilities for agricultural development, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House thereon, and appoints Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. POPE, and Mr. FRAZIER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 2332. An act for the relief of William Sulem; and

H. R. 2565. An act to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and enter judgment upon the claims of contractors for excess costs incurred while constructing navigation dams and locks on the Mississippi River and its tributaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

On July 1, 1937:

H. R. 6692. An act making appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7726. An act making appropriations for the first half of the month of July 1937, for certain operations of the Federal Government which remain unprovided for on July 1, 1937, through the failure of enactment of the supply bills customarily providing for such operations; and

H. J. Res. 433. Joint resolution making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, for the Civilian Conservation Corps, the railroad retirement account, and other activities, and for other purposes.

On July 5, 1937:

H. R. 1731. An act for the relief of Angelo and Auro Cattaneo;

H. R. 2703. An act to provide for the representation of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia on the annual conference of senior circuit judges;

H. R. 3284. An act to transfer Crawford County, Iowa, from the southern judicial district of Iowa to the northern judicial district of Iowa;

H. R. 4711. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across Pudget Sound at or near a point commonly known as The Narrows, in the State of Washington;

H. R. 4795. An act to provide for a term of court at Livingston, Mont.;

H. R. 5848. An act to extend times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Wabash River at or near Merom, Sullivan County, Ind.;

H. R. 6049. An act to amend the Interstate Commerce Act;

H. R. 6285. An act authorizing the State Roads Commission of the State of Maryland and the State Road Commission of the State of West Virginia to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Potomac River in Washington County, Md., at or near a point opposite Shepherdstown, W. Va., and a point at or near Shepherdstown, Jefferson County, W. Va., to take the place of a bridge destroyed by flood;

H. R. 6286. An act authorizing the State Roads Commission of the State of Maryland and the State Road Commission of the State of West Virginia to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Potomac River at or near a point in the vicinity of Hancock, in Washington County, Md., and a point near the north end of Morgan County, W. Va., to take the place of a bridge destroyed by flood;

H. R. 6292. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Niobrara, Nebr.; and

H. R. 6494. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Snake River between Clarkston, Wash., and Lewiston, Idaho.

FARM TENANCY BILL

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7562) to encourage and promote the ownership of farm homes and to make the possession of such homes more secure, to provide for the general welfare of the United States, to provide additional credit facilities for agricultural development, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7562), with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference requested by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. CALDWELL. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] has objected.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. Speaker, addressing myself to my chairman, he knows our convictions in the matter. A strong group in the Committee on Agriculture, composed of Members on both sides of the aisle, feels as I do, in view of the fact that the Senate has stricken out all after the enacting clause of the House bill and put in an amendment which is a bill which the House committee had turned down on several occasions by a majority vote. We feel we should have a fair chance to have the matter heard in the House and to present arguments pro and con, and therefore I object.

Mr. JONES. May I say to the gentleman, if he will withhold his objection a moment, that I do not think his action in the matter would add anything to the time allowed for discussion. As a matter of fact, the only recourse would be to ask for a rule, which would bring the matter up for a discussion such as we are having now, and, finally, it would be sent to conference for adjustment, anyway. Of course, the House will have full opportunity to vote any conference report we may agree upon up or down, and I think, finally, the gentlemen will have to agree or disagree to whatever the conferees of the House present.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New Hampshire withhold his objection?

Mr. TOBEY. I do; yes, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LUCAS. In the event objection is made to the request of the gentleman from Texas, am I correct in my understanding that then the bill will be referred back to the Rules Committee?

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Illinois kindly restate his parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. LUCAS. If objection is made to the unanimous-consent request submitted by the distinguished gentleman from Texas, my inquiry is what will then happen to the bill as presented to the House?

The SPEAKER. In answer to the inquiry, the Chair will state that it is within the discretion of the Chair to allow the bill to lie on the Speaker's table for a reasonable length of time, or to refer the bill and Senate amendments to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, may I answer the question further by a parliamentary inquiry? Would it not be in order for the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture to apply to the Rules Committee for a rule to send the bill to conference?

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. JONES. And that would simply bring the question up of sending it to conference or not sending it to conference by a vote of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of that opinion.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, am I further correct in my understanding that should that happen, then the merits of the bill will not be debated on the floor of the House under time allotted to the chairman of the committee?

Mr. JONES. As I understand it, the chairman of the Rules Committee would have 1 hour within which to debate the question of whether the measure should be sent to conference.

The SPEAKER. That is a correct statement of what the parliamentary situation would be.

Mr. JONES. I, therefore, hope the gentleman will not object, because it will simply put the Rules Committee and myself to that trouble and, finally, the issue would come on sending the bill to conference, and, finally, it seems to me, if the House would send it to conference, which I think it would, the issue would come on whether the House desires to accept the work which may be reported by its own conference committee.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from New Hampshire will permit, this matter is of great importance and the House has spent considerable time on it, as the gentleman knows. The Committee on Agriculture has spent several months in the consideration of this particular legislation, and we finally brought in a bill that was acceptable to an overwhelming majority of the House. Does not the gentleman think we should at least have an opportunity of having a conference with the Senate to see if the differences can be ironed out? The views of the gentleman and my own views do not coincide as to the merits of the bill, but does not the gentleman feel we should have an opportunity to iron out the differences and attempts to get some agreement on the legislation during this session?

Mr. TOBEY. I will answer the gentleman's interrogation, if I may, by saying that for months we debated this bill in the Committee on Agriculture and, finally, three different votes were taken whereby a majority of the committee ruled against putting the Government into the business of buying and selling land. We stood steadfast on that and we passed last week the farm tenancy bill without any such provision. It went to the Senate and the Senate, on motion of Senator BANKHEAD, struck out all after the enacting clause and put in its own bill, which would put the Government into the land buying and selling business, and I say that if we allow the measure to go to conference without any objection, the Senate measure would be considered by Members who did not know the lights and shadows of the bill. I propose to object for the reason that I believe the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], and his Committee on Rules should consider the matter, to that end we will go before the committee and ask for sufficient time to elucidate the matter and give the House an opportunity to know what it is voting on, and then in addition, instruct the conferees to stick by the bill as agreed upon by the committee, and passed by the House.

Mr. JONES. May I state to the gentleman that the committee would practically be instructed to insist on what it voted the other day. It voted on its bill, and we cannot control the Senate and what the Senate may do when it has a bill of its own up. When this bill is sent to conference, both bills will be in conference, regardless of what action the House may take.

Mr. TOBEY. Then the only recourse of the House will be to vote the conference report up or down.

Mr. JONES. I think the gentleman knows that we are familiar with the position taken by the committee; we are familiar with the various steps and action taken by the House. In other words, I think the conference committee, so far as it is practical to do so, will sustain the position taken by the House, but we cannot, of course, dictate terms to the other body, and the gentleman by his objection will not further his purpose any more. As a matter of fact, we would have more time in conference to work this out if we could go immediately into conference.

Mr. TOBEY. I disagree with the gentleman. I want this House to know by careful argument the pros and cons of this situation and what we are going into when we appoint the conferees, and then I want the House to instruct the conferees to stick by their guns, according to the House bill.

Mr. JONES. May I suggest this? Unless a point of order is made, under reservation of objection, the gentleman may now state to the House what he thinks the whole history and picture of the situation is. Unless some one demands the regular order under a reservation of a point of order, the gentleman can have an opportunity to state to the House what he thinks the whole situation is.

Mr. TOBEY. I am working on principle and not from the personal standpoint. I think we can have a better opportunity, and better consider this bill in its different shades by appearing before the Rules Committee, and then take the wise action of instructing our conferees to stand by the House bill than we would under the present program. I therefore insist on my objection.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman would not have any more opportunity to instruct than he would in the regular way.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire objects to the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection momentarily?

Mr. TOBEY. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. Will the gentleman from Texas yield for a question?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. When the conference report comes into the House for adoption or correction, am I correct in my understanding that a certain amount of time will be allotted to the Members of the House to then debate whatever the conclusions of the conferees may be?

Mr. JONES. Yes. I can allow as much time as is desired up to 1 hour, which is as much as would be given on a rule. On the adoption or rejection of the conference report a full hour will be allotted, and I would be disposed to permit everyone to talk within the range of that time.

Mr. TOBEY. But the only recourse we would have would be to vote the conference report up or down.

Mr. JONES. But I say to the gentleman that he will have the same opportunity to move to instruct the conferees at any time that he would have if we had a rule.

Mr. TOBEY. My judgment and confidence in the Rules Committee is such that if we go before that committee and put this matter before them, I believe they will share the righteous indignation that some of us feel on both sides of the aisle against the policy pursued and carried on.

Mr. JONES. But the gentleman realizes that we have not a right to even attempt to control the action of the other body.

Mr. TOBEY. We have a right to secure legislation we desire by using every expedient in our power, and I propose to do it.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOBEY. Yes.

Mr. KELLER. What, in the gentleman's judgment, would be the result—suppose our conference committee confers with the Senate committee and fails to agree? Does the gentleman not believe that such a conference might lead to a more clear understanding? Has it not been the gentleman's observation that our committees always represent the attitude of the House insofar as possible, where it is a direct question, as the gentleman proposes it here? I agree with the gentleman entirely, but I see nothing to be gained by putting it off. It seems to me that we ought to do this as quickly as we can so as to accomplish the very thing the gentleman talks about, so that, if they cannot get together——

Mr. TOBEY. Everything is relative in this world, and the gentleman has suggested a relative argument.

Mr. KELLER. Is there anything to be gained by not going ahead and trying to do the thing first?

Mr. TOBEY. Yes; I think there is much material to be gained.

Mr. KELLER. Would not the gentleman put himself into the attitude of taking an alternative position and saying you can either come to us or we quit?

Mr. TOBEY. No.

Mr. BOILEAU. In view of the chairman's request that we disagree to the Senate amendments, does not the gentleman feel that that shows the House's position—if we disagree to the Senate amendment with the assurance that there will be full opportunity of discussion when the matter comes back?

Mr. TOBEY. No.

Mr. BOILEAU. You cannot instruct them, as I understand it, by the adoption of a rule.

Mr. TOBEY. We can when it comes on the floor under a rule. We can put with that an instruction that will be definitely forwarded.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOBEY. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. I happen to be one of the few who oppose this bill in the House, and one of the reasons suggested was that the purpose was to send this bill to the Senate and do to the bill just what has been done by the Senate. At the time the matter was before the House this matter was not discussed. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] asked the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture [Mr. JONES] some very pointed questions, and the gentleman, in a very proper way, said he could not discuss the matter then. It is of such prime importance that it seems to me it should be discussed in the House and that the House should thoroughly understand the matter and give instructions to the conferees, to make their road easy in the Senate, because we have had experience with these conference reports. What happens too often is that the House yields and the chairman of the conference committee comes back and says they did the best they could. That will be the Senate bill in this case. I do not believe a majority of the House favors it. The only way we can get this before the House is to object today, and get a rule and bring it in and give ample time for discussion.

Mr. TOBEY. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOBEY. I yield.

Mr. JONES. I would like to make this statement in that connection: The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] knows that if we were instructed not to dot an "i" or cross a "t" in the House bill we would have no conference. On the two propositions made by the gentleman from Michigan, if we were instructed not to make any changes in the House bill, we would have no conference. On the second proposition, that we usually yield, I beg leave to most humbly disagree with the gentleman from Michigan. If he will look over the measures which this committee has handled, he will find that nearly always the major features of the House bills have been retained. As a matter of fact, so much so that on one occasion one of the conferees in the other body made the complaint that we always ran away with the ball. I do not think we always do it, but he made that complaint. The conferees on the part of the House, I think, understand the temper of the House and the wishes of the House and will try to interpret them. Of course, we will try to fight for our proposition.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOBEY. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. I am one of the Members who wants to stand by the House bill, but I doubt very seriously if you would accomplish anything by objecting now and forcing a rule on the proposition. I am going to make a suggestion. The way to do it is to instruct conferees by a motion. I suggest to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] and the gentleman from Texas, chairman of the Committee on Agriculture [Mr. JONES] that there are certain features of the House bill that we want to see carried out. Instead of forcing this measure to go to the Rules Committee, I suggest that the gentleman from Texas withdraw his request for the time being and let those Members who are interested in this proposition work out their motion to instruct the conferees on the specific questions in the bill, in which they are so vitally interested. I would not accept the Senate bill, if I could possibly help it. I hear that sentiment expressed all around me.

Mr. JONES. If the gentleman will yield further——

Mr. TOBEY. I yield.

Mr. JONES. I would rather the instructions would come, if they do come, after we have tried to see what we can do in conference. I will state this, that if we have to depart very widely in order to reach any sort of agreement, in fact, if we had to abandon the essential features of our bill, insofar as what the gentleman has in mind is concerned, I would probably want to come back, and I think the other conferees would want to come back for instructions. I would not want to say that we would not make any concessions. I do not want to go to conference with another body with my hands completely tied, with instructions which say, "Now, you go over and say to the other body", which has equal dignity and power, "you take what we offer or nothing." I do not think that is the proper spirit of a conference.

Mr. RANKIN. The instructions I had in mind were not on the entire bill.

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. TOBEY. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. DOXEY. I did not want to inject myself into this discussion for the reason that I can appreciate the position of both of the gentlemen. However, the House tenant bill has several titles that the Senate bill does not have. It has a submarginal title; it has a rehabilitation title. I do not know whether I will be a conferee or not, but this is by way of adjusting our differences: My honest opinion is that we should appoint conferees now and go into conference, because there are a number of differences that may be ironed out. I know the gentleman is honest and I know his fairness, and if I make a fair proposition I believe the gentleman will accept it, but I suggest, in order to work out these differences which will come up, for instance, I know the gentleman is interested possibly in the rehabilitation feature, in the purchase of submarginal lands for better land uses, and so forth. There are a number of important House provisions that the Senate bill does not contain that I feel sure the Senate conferees will approve and accept. We can get to work as conferees and analyze each bill and see just what we can agree upon, before we ask this House for any instructions.

I am not entirely familiar with the Senate bill, but I think possibly—in fact, I know—the House bill contains many provisions not in the original Senate bill. Now, if the conferees of the House are appointed they can meet with and see the temper of the Senate conferees.

May I not also augment what the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture said about conferences between the House and Senate, and I happen to have been selected, I think, a member of most of the conference committees on bills dealing with agriculture? I know that the Senate has always been reasonable and we have usually brought back to this House in the main what the House has voted. I do not know what will happen in this instance, but knowing the gentleman from Texas as I do, and knowing my distinguished friend from New Hampshire, as I do, I believe that if he and the gentleman from Texas, our chairman, could have some understanding that we will try to iron out this thing it would help. It is possible that the Senate will yield, although I am not prophesying anything; but after we do the best we can as House conferees I think then in the matter of expediency and getting started toward an agreement, if the distinguished gentleman from Texas would say, especially with reference to title I, that the House will not yield its position entirely until the House conferees bring it back to the House for further consideration, that all this delay and perfunctory procedure might be eliminated. I do not know what the gentleman from Texas will say, for I have not conferred with him. I know the gentleman's interest in title I; I can appreciate it, but I know there is something else in the bill besides title I. That is the outstanding section of the bill, title I.

I know, too, that of the Senate conferees one will be Senator BANKHEAD. I have always found him in any conference willing and ready to give and take for what he thought was the best interests of agriculture in general, and I should hate for the whole conference to be blocked or the conference committee prevented from beginning work immediately, which is absolutely necessary, if the gentleman is assured by the chairman of our Committee on Agriculture that we will not surrender or capitulate with reference to title I until we have some understanding with the House. I do not know whether this is the most practical suggestion or not, but it appeals to me as being in the interest of expediency and just about the best way in which to attack this problem and solve it to the best interests of all concerned. Then the conferees can go to work immediately.

Mr. JONES. I thank the gentleman from Mississippi. I take pleasure in stating that before I will surrender the substantial features of title I of the House bill I will come back for further instructions or special vote. There might be some minor changes that we would agree to, but I mean the substantial features.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. HOPE. Does the gentleman from Texas mean by that that he would bring this back to the House before yielding to any changes which might amount to a change in the philosophy of the bill?

Mr. JONES. Yes; that is correct, before agreeing to a substantial change in the philosophy of the House bill.

Mr. HOPE. The fundamental difficulty here is that we have two entirely different philosophies, one embodied in the House bill and the other in the Senate bill. One House or the other will have to surrender its philosophy in conference on the bill for there is no middle ground. I think this is the thing that the Members who favor the House bill want to be assured of, that there will be no surrender of the principles of the House bill without the matter being fairly submitted to the House; and it is rather difficult to do that in the course of a conference.

Mr. JONES. I have no hesitancy in stating that, so far as I personally am concerned—I could not bind the other conferees—as far as I personally am concerned, before I would agree to an outright change of the philosophy of title I for the Government to buy this land and resell, I would want the instructions of the House on that particular subject, and, in fact, I would come back and ask for instructions.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. In this situation should not the House conferees at least make a report and then the House decide as to whether they would instruct the conferees under the circumstances?

Mr. JONES. That should be the procedure, as I understand it.

Mr. DOXEY. The gentleman from New Hampshire would accomplish his purpose in a more satisfactory way, in my humble judgment, by following that procedure than the one he now seeks to pursue.

Mr. TOBEY. I may say to the gentleman from Mississippi, with all due deference, that I yield to no one in the regard I have for MARVIN JONES; I have an affection for the man; and, while I would like to go all the way with him, there is a principle involved and my proposal is one that would save MARVIN JONES from a devil of a lot of pressure. He knows it, and I know it.

I propose to do this thing and to stick by my guns, if necessary, going before the Rules Committee. Members of the House on both sides of the aisle are agreed on the policy of the House, and I think we should stand by our guns against launching the Government into a policy of the purchase and sale of land.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOBEY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. It appears to me, following the suggestion of the gentleman from Kansas especially, the gentleman from Texas, and the gentleman from Mississippi, that there is a fundamental difference in title I of the House bill and the Senate bill. As expressed by the gentleman from Kansas, there is a difference in governmental philosophy. I believe the gentleman from New Hampshire would in all probability serve his purpose better by accepting the agreement that the gentleman from Texas has just said he is willing to make. That is, before the fundamentals of title I of the House bill are abandoned in any essential particular, that the gentleman bring the matter back to the House for discussion and vote. We would get further on that proposition than we would by a debate under a rule and a flat vote on whether or not we were going to tie the conferees on the part of the House and to a slight degree at least say we were so hide-bound we were not willing to go to conference. Frankly, I have always stood by the House committees, especially since I have been in the position I now hold. I think the gentleman from New Hampshire and all of those who believe and act with him would really get further under that procedure than the one he proposes with reference to a rule.

Mr. TOBEY. I respect what the gentleman says, and I believe he is earnest and sincere in every point he has raised; but there is an old axiom that "he who is convinced against his will is of the same opinion still." I am still of the same will, and my convictions work the other way; therefore I shall stick to my objection.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New Hampshire insist upon his objection?

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a speech made by ex-Gov. Charles Mabey, of Utah.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF CANAL ZONE CODE

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 4597) to amend the Canal Zone Code, with an amendment thereto, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 5, after line 19, insert:

"SEC. 10. That section 222 of title 2 of the Canal Zone Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'222. Carriage by Panama Railroad Co. of marine and fire insurance: The Panama Railroad Co. shall carry no insurance to cover marine or fire losses: Provided, That this section shall not prohibit the company from carrying insurance to cover shipments of its own funds and securities.'"

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Virginia should tell us what the new section means.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, section 222 of the existing law provides that the Panama Railroad Co. shall carry no insurance to cover marine or fire losses. That was to protect against the necessity of spending a lot of money. However, it has been felt that would prohibit the Panama Railroad Co. from insuring shipments of its own funds and securities; so that the only new thought contained herein is the proviso which reads:

This section shall not prohibit the company from carrying insurance to cover shipment of its own funds and securities.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and include therein an able address by assistant administrator, Agricultural Adjustment Administration of North Carolina, Mr. J. B. Hutson.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to the Treasury statement issued by the Secretary of the Treasu y, Mr. Morgenthau, dated June 30, whereby the total receipts of the Government for last year were $5,293,840,236.87. The total expenditures were $8,105,158,547.47. The deficit is $2,811,318,310.60, according to the Treasury statement. This is a deplorable situation. A travesty to America's future. An unjust obligation on the future generations.

I call attention to the fact that there should be charged off, according to the President in his Budget message, $404,525,000 for interest. The Treasury did not do it; there was only charged off $103,971,200, which leaves a shortage of $300,553,800, showing that the national debt increased last year over $3,111,872,110.60. Much of this great debt is caused by willful waste and extravagance. Much by incompetence and inexperience. Stop the extravagance. Stop the waste. Stop unworthy projects of the Government.

I call attention to the enormous waste of money by many of the bureaus of this Government, and especially by the Resettlement Administration.

Mr. Speaker, with the appropriation about to be made in the emergency relief appropriation bill for 1937, more than $536,000,000 will have gone into the greatest conglomeration of mismanaged and wasteful projects that has ever been conceived by the mind of man. I refer to the Resettlement Administration. Look where you will and you can find evidence of gross waste and misuse of public funds on every side.

These Resettlement projects will undoubtedly prove to be the most costly of all of the experiments of the "brain trusters", for while the money has already been spent, practically nothing of permanence has been accomplished but at an expense which is far above the limits of economy and common sense. Even the annual report which was published at a cost of $1.07 per copy is being sold at a loss for 40 cents a copy at the Government Printing Office.

Although there are some who will attempt to justify the waste which has already taken place, no sensible person can condone a continuation of the same processes in the future. No one can challenge the recent remark of Senator BORAH that the excessive administrative expense of the Resettlement Administration "approaches a national scandal."

No one can justify the Resettlement's program of buying and retiring marginal land in some sections of the country and in the next moment turning right around and buying up land at $7.10 an acre and expecting the people of this country to believe that a family can make a living on 20 acres of this land if they are provided with about $6,000 or $8,000 worth of improvements and modern conveniences.

No one with common sense will believe that there is any element of economy in taking farm families from Minnesota and Wisconsin to resettle them at a cost of more than $20,000 per family in the Matanuska Valley in Alaska. But everyone within the range of my voice, or everyone who can read the results of the wasteful spending which has already taken place, can instantly realize that when we are hiring from twelve to thirteen thousand persons at a cost which runs from $25,000,000 to $30,000,000 a year to supervise the squandering of the taxpayers' money it is time for this Congress to wind up this resettlement business and save money.

FEW EXAMPLES OF WASTE

These projects have all been more or less wasteful in general, so the purposes of this argument can best be served by directing your attention to specific examples of waste and mismanagement.

GREENBELT

First, I will take up this Greenbelt project, right close at hand. You can drive out and see for yourselves just what a wasteful proposal this amounts to. To begin with, the site selected for the Greenbelt project is an assemblage of various properties totaling 12,393 acres. The location is approximately 5 miles from the District line, near the village of Gresham.

NOTHING TO RECOMMEND SITE

There is nothing to recommend this particular site except its nearness to both Baltimore and Washington. The terrain is very poorly adapted for residential purposes, there being many hills and deep gullies. It was never any good for farming, as the topsoil has for the most part been eroded away for generations, and the underlay is a mixture of red clay and a sandy gravel. About the only vegetation which grows on the site is scrub oak and stunted jack pine. Part of the acreage is so low that during preliminary building operations corduroy roads had to be laid down so that vehicles could get to the field headquarters.

FIRST CONSTRUCTION WORK

First construction work at Greenbelt was initiated by recruiting an army of laborers from the transient relief bureaus in Baltimore and Washington. Each morning last year this pitiable crew of down-and-outers were assembled at the transient bureau and marched to Union Station. There was a train waiting to haul them part way to the project. The balance of the way they were hauled by truck.

Rain or shine these men were taken out to the job and whether or not they did any actual work depended on the whim of the field foremen. Now, this army of the unemployed, many of whom had been left stranded in Washington when the New Deal jobs began to peter out, had about as much interest in work as a mouse has with a first-class tomcat.

It was, indeed, an interesting sight to watch them put in time. Most of the spring the roads and field were either a sea of mud or a tangle of vines and underbrush. The work to be done was undoubtedly distasteful, but somehow roads were staked out, the brush gradually began to disappear from the right-of-way, the stacks of wheelbarrows and shovels began to show signs of use, and some work at least was being accomplished.

These men were on relief and received relief wages. Whether or not they were charged against the project I have grave doubts, but at the time I am informed this work was not charged as an item of the cost of the whole Greenbelt project.

Before the roads were fully laid out, materials began to arrived on the site for construction purposes, so a guard force was established, and enough red lanterns scattered around to take care of all the traffic in the District of Columbia. The guards were quite inquisitive as to who would visit the construction site, and many inquiring visitors were turned back, but now we are able to report at least in part what a great mistake this Greenbelt project really is.

ITEMS OF WASTE

As I mentioned before, the site had nothing special to recommend it. But to make the site more suitable for the families who will eventually occupy a small part of the area we find that $456,603.50 has been spent for landscaping the grounds, $223,884.77 has been spent for a water-supply system, and $536,262.31 for a sewage-disposal plant. In addition to these sums, $198,850.17 has been spent in land preparation and $238,276.89 building roads and streets. Now, try and imagine if you can buying this land at $4 per acre and then spending money preparing it for use in part at a rate more than twice the cost of the land itself.

COST PER UNIT EXCESSIVE

But to bring all the facts together—we find that the final cost of each of the projected unit homes in Greenbelt will be something like $16,182 or more.

No Federal employee in the low-salaried brackets will therefore be able to buy or rent one of these Greenbelt homes, and the Government will in all probability lose the greater part of the investment sooner or later.

This is just another instance of the futility of the Government trying to meddle in business. Almost invariably their efforts at establishing a precedent or a yardstick, so to speak, have been not only failures but costly enterprises to the taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to dig too deeply into the record of the Resettlement Administration, but it seems to me that the $112,340 of the taxpayers' money which was spent last year in maintaining a staff of 32 publicity experts is the most sordid chapter in the whole affair. To say the least, the information and the publicity put out by these experts was very highly colored if not deceptive and untruthful in many instances. This was not a publicity bureau; it was a propaganda bureau. The facts about the Resettlement Administration have only been brought to light by the insistence of Senator BYRD, of Virginia, and others, who have had a suspicion for a long time that there was something "rotten in Denmark" when Mr. Tugwell suddenly decided to go into the molasses business.

The waste I have mentioned at Greenbelt can be multiplied by the waste of the projects of a similar nature near Milwaukee, Wis., and Cincinnati, Ohio.

At Greenhills, Ohio, the waste was so flagrant that even engineers on the job who visited at Washington talked about it. Although the whole site in Ohio was underlaid with limestone rock suitable for road building and despite the fact that there were several former quarries on the properties purchased, I am informed that the management spent upward of half a million dollars buying crushed rock for road-building purposes, when all they would have had to do is to have some contractor install a small crusher and get all the materials at low cost and without a long haul at a fraction of this sum.

Mr. Speaker, these suburban resettlement projects have cost the Federal Government more than $33,000,000 and not one single family has been housed so far. What more need be said of this feature of the Resettlement Administration?

Besides the suburban resettlement activities, some one of the brain trusters conceived the idea that they ought to start a back-to-the-land movement in various sections of the country at the same time the Department of Agriculture were promoting their crop-reduction program and buying millions of acres to put into grass and grazing lands, conservation projects, and wildlife refuges.

A typical rural resettlement project is Penderlea Homesteads, near Penderlea, N. C.

PENDERLEA HOMESTEADS, N. C.—ANOTHER RESETTLEMENT FANTASY

Penderlea Homesteads consists of an original tract of 4,550 acres of land purchased at a cost of $7.10 per acre. On this land 142 houses for farm homesteaders have been erected. The average farmstead is about 20 acres in size.

The improvements consist in general of a frame four- to six-room house, a chicken house with fenced-in chicken run, a barn, a movable hog house, and a pump house. Every house is equipped with a complete built-in bath, kitchen cabinets, sewage system with septic tank, a water system with electric pump, pressure tank, and hot-water facilities. All in all these farmsteads are thoroughly modern and well above the average accommodations of the farmers of North Carolina or any of the Southern States.

The particular feature of this Resettlement activity is the fact that these expensive improvements were placed on land which was obtained at the low price of $7.10 per acre. By contrast in other sections of the country the Department of Agriculture is constantly purchasing lands in this price range as part of the land-retirement program. There seems to be something out of kilter in a program which is so poorly designed as to try on the one hand to encourage farming in North Carolina on land which anyone could obtain probably with a maximum investment of $200 per farm, and the promotion of colonies in Alaska which requires an investment of over $15,000 per farm family.

Besides the activities in rural and urban resettlement, this Resettlement Administration also had some strange, if not weird, experiences in the operation of their land-development program.

SHELBY FOREST IN TENNESSEE

For instance, there was the Shelby Forest in Tennessee. This is a tract of 9,688 acres in the State of Tennessee, which was to be acquired at a cost of $141,874. Now, let me relate just what happened here, according to Mr. Tugwell's report, made before the lure of the molasses business drew him away from the public service.

On page 138 of the annual report, I find that the Resettlement Administration have already spent $148,273 in salaries and wages on the Shelby Forest tract and have furnished employment to 444 persons, although title to not one single acre of the properties has been obtained or one cent spent for the property. What business or what government can exist and maintain the confidence of the people by such haphazard and uncalled-for practices?

Mr. Speaker, not the least of the shortcomings of the Resettlement Administration is the apparent disregard for sound business principles coupled with excessive waste which is everywhere apparent, but it is in the expressed attitude of those who would continue these wasting processes. In appearing before the subcommittee of the House of Representatives while considering the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act for 1937, Mr. Secretary Wallace said:

> It is a part of our progress, and inevitable progress, to displace, for a time at least, a large number of human beings by machinery. This goes on in the country as well as in the towns.

While I quite agree with Mr. Wallace's statement, I respectfully ask the Secretary of Agriculture if he believes that we can solve the problems of the machine age by either attempting to domicile the city worker in a $16,000 mansion somewhere in the country or by settling the farm misfits on small tracts of low-productive land equipped with all the conveniences of the modern city? Both theories, I feel sure will prove false and deceptive and conducive to general discontent on the part of the population who must pay the bills that a select few may enjoy advantages brought to them by a patronizing government.

Mr. Speaker, there are many other items of interest in the Resettlement Administration's record which I would like to review but time will heal this scar upon the face of decency, but I do want to call attention to one more item in the waste which is still going on. That is the amount being spent for traveling expenses.

TRAVELING EXPENSES

If all of the money which has been spent for traveling expenses were actually used for that purpose, we either have a highly mobile force working for the Resettlement Administration or in fact a large number of employees must have put in their entire time traveling. We all enjoy a trip now or then, but the amount of money which has been spent for traveling expenses, namely $6,241,668 in 1936, and $4,407,219 in 1937, or a total of $10,648,887, is appaling. This is enough money to buy 1,000,000 tickets from here to Pittsburgh. It is enough money to buy 20,000 tours around the world. It is enough money to buy each one of the 12,000 Resettlement Administration employees a first class circle tour of the Orient. Now where did they find time to do all this traveling and still have time to do any work for the Government salaries they draw? If this was a mobile and traveling force, I cannot see what use the Resettlement Administration could possibly have made of all the high-priced office space they rent and occupy here in Washington and practically every other large city of the country. Are we about to uncover another national scandal or is this traveling made in the interests of the New Deal and the party in power?

Mr. Speaker, this Resettlement Administration has more to condemn it than any single enterprise ever attempted by the brain trust. The time will come, I venture to predict, when the Democratic Party will be loath to admit that they were instrumental in voting this wasteful outfit, now a part of the Department of Agriculture another $100,000,000 to carry on, and pay for that which does an irreparable injury to the credit of the United States and the morale of the American people.

Mr. Speaker, we have met the advances of the brain trusters, and played their game. The cards were against us and we have lost. Let us now heed the philosophy of the Chinaman who said, "Fool me once—shame on you. Fool me twice—shame on me." [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include a short letter from Herbert Resner, of the Tom Mooney Molders' Defense Committee, with regard to a certain situation prevailing at San Quentin Prison.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. TEIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include an address recently made by me at Detroit, Mich.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a speech delivered before the League of Women Voters by Mrs. Edith B. Cook.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a brief excerpt from a court decision dealing with the oil situation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. This is Private Calendar Day. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Private Calendar.

LILLIAN J. GLINN

The Clerk called the first bill, S. 727, validating homestead entry, Billings 029004, of Lillian J. Glinn.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the stock-raising homestead entry, Billings 029004, made by Lillian J. Glinn on June 28, 1927, as amended, for all of section 32, township 7 south, range 54 east, Montana principal meridian, is hereby validated, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to accept the final proof submitted by the entrywoman, now Lillian J. Castleberry, in support of said homestead entry on December 20, 1934, and to issue patent for the entry in regular course.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ROGER H. YOUNG

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3231, for the relief of Capt. Roger H. Young.

Mr. COSTELLO and Mr. BARDEN objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on War Claims.

J. MONROE JOHNSON

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7140, to authorize J. Monroe Johnson, Assistant Secretary of Commerce, to accept a decoration and diploma from the Belgian Government.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 2497) may be considered in lieu of the House bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That John Monroe Johnson, Assistant Secretary of Commerce, is authorized to accept the decoration which has been tendered him by the Belgian Government.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 7140) was laid on the table.

MARJORIE L. BAXTER

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 420, for the relief of Marjorie L. Baxter.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Marjorie L. Baxter, of Port Chester, N. Y., the sum of $12,000. The payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States for damages sustained by the said Marjorie L. Baxter on account of permanent injuries received when the automobile in which she was riding was struck on the Bronx River Parkway near Crestwood, N. Y., April 24, 1934, by a motor vehicle in the service of the Civilian Conservation Corps.

With the following committee amendments:

Line 5, strike out "not otherwise appropriated" and insert "allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps."

Line 8, strike out "$12,000" and insert "$3,500."

Page 2, after line 4, insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A. F. AMORY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 851, for the relief of A. F. Amory.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of A. F. Amory against the United States for damages alleged to have been caused on the early morning of August 6, 1929, by a collision in the harbor of Cape May, N. J., between a submerged wreck alleged to have been then in custody of the United States Coast Guard, at Cape May, N. J., and the power boat Mocking Bird owned and operated by the said A. F. Amory, as a result whereof it is alleged that the said power boat Mocking Bird sustained substantial damage, may be sued for by the said A. F. Amory in the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Virginia, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of the said A. F. Amory upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases between private parties and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided for by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend said United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within 4 months from the date of the passage of this act.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 3, strike out "that the claim of A. F. Amory" and insert "that jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of A. F. Amory, of Hampton, Va."

Page 2, line 4, after the word "damage", insert "and the same."

Line 6, strike out "Eastern District of Virginia" and insert "District of New Jersey."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of A. F. Amory."

H. G. HARMON

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1075, for the relief of H. G. Harmon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 885) may be considered in lieu of the House bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, to H. G. Harmon, of Hampton, Iowa, the sum of $400 in full satisfaction of his claim against the Government for damages arising out of personal injuries to his wife and son and the destruction of his automobile, suffered when such automobile was struck and completely demolished by a Civilian Conservation Corps truck, on September 10, 1935, near Hampton, Iowa, and for expenses and losses resulting therefrom: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: Page 1, line 7, after the words "the sum of", strike out "$400" and insert in lieu thereof "$500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 1075) was laid on the table.

AGNES EWING HARTER

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1114, for the relief of Agnes Ewing Harter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I object.

There being no further objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Agnes Ewing Harter, of Columbus, Ohio, the sum of $10,000. The payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States for damages sustained by the said Agnes Ewing Harter and her two minor children on account of the death of her husband, Albert Edward Irvine Harter, late first lieutenant, Air Corps Reserve, United States Army, who was fatally injured in line of duty on July 27, 1932, in an airplane accident at Circleville, Ohio, while voluntarily participating in an aerial flight in a Government-owned aircraft by proper authority as an incident to his military training.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of the current appropriation of the War Department for pay of the Army, to Agnes Ewing Harter, of Columbus, Ohio, widow of Albert Edward Irvine Harter, late first lieutenant, Air Corps Reserves, United States Army, who was killed in line of duty July 27, 1932, in an airplane accident at Circleville, Ohio, a gratuity equal to 6 months' pay at the rate which said Albert Edward Irvine Harter would have received had he been on active duty at the time of his death: Provided, That Agnes Ewing Harter shall first establish to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War that she was actually dependent on the said Albert Edward Irvine Harter at the time of his death, as prescribed by the act of December 17, 1919 (41 Stat. 367)."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MAT HENSLEY AND OTHERS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1122, for the relief of Mat Hensley.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500 to Mat Hensley, of Wallins Creek, Ky., in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for personal and permanent injuries suffered by him on September 13, 1935, when a taxicab in which he was riding in Harlan County, Ky., was, through and by the negligence of one of the employees and enrollees of the United States Civilian Conservation Corps, struck and demolished by a Civilian Conservation Corps truck operated by him; that his injuries were caused by the reckless, careless, and negligent manner in which said truck was operated by said Civilian Conservation Corps enrollee, and he would not have been injured but for the said recklessness, carelessness, and negligence of said enrollee: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Kentucky to hear, determine, and render judgment, as if the United States were suable in tort, upon the claims of Mat Hensley, Arnold Blanton, Lillie Price, and Clyde Thorpe, all of Wallins Creek, Harlan County, Ky., for damages resulting from personal injuries and property damage, and upon the claim of D. L. Mason, of Wallins Creek, Harlan County, Ky., for damages resulting from the death of his minor daughter, Dorothy Mason; said injuries, death, and property damage having been received when the taxicab in which they were passengers was in a collision with a Civilian Conservation Corps truck on the highway between Lake View and Harlan, Harlan County, Ky., on September 14, 1935: Provided, That the judgment, if any, shall not exceed, in the case of Mat Hensley, $1,500; in the case of Arnold Blanton, $1,000; in the case of Lillie Price, $3,500; in the case of Clyde Thorpe, $1,500; and in the case of D. L. Mason, $5,000.

"SEC. 2. Suit upon such claims may be instituted at any time within 1 year after the enactment of this act, notwithstanding the lapse of time or any statute of limitations. Proceedings for the determination of such claims, appeals therefrom, and payment of any judgments thereon shall be in the same manner as in the cases over which such court has jurisdiction under paragraph 20 of section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read as follows: "A bill conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Kentucky to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of Mat Hensley, Arnold Blanton, Lillie Price, Clyde Thorpe, and D. L. Mason."

H. T. CAMPBELL AND E. O. O'NEAL

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1207, for the relief of H. T. Campbell and E. O. O'Neal.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000 to H. T. Campbell, father of Marshall Campbell, and the sum of $10,000 to E. O. O'Neal, father of Raymond O'Neal, said Marshall Campbell and Raymond O'Neal having died of injuries received as a result of a collision with a United States Civilian Conservation Corps truck on August 30, 1935.

With the following committee amendments:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the United States District Court for the Middle District of Georgia to hear, determine, and render judgment, as if the United States were suable in tort, upon the claims of the estate of Marshall Campbell, and the estate of Raymond O'Neal, of Greene County, Ga., for damages resulting from the deaths of said Marshall Campbell and Raymond O'Neal by reason of an automobile collision involving a Civilian Conservation Corps truck on August 30, 1935, on the highway between Greensboro and Union Point, Ga.: Provided, That the judgment, if any, shall not exceed, in the case of the estate of Marshall Campbell, $5,000; and in the case of the estate of Raymond O'Neal, $5,000.

"SEC. 2. Suit upon such claims may be instituted at any time within 1 year after the enactment of this act, notwithstanding the lapse of time or any statute of limitations. Proceedings for the determination of such claims, appeals therefrom, and payment of any judgment thereon shall be in the same manner as in the cases over which such court has jurisdiction under the provisions of paragraph twentieth of section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title of the bill was amended to read as follows: "A bill conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Middle District of Georgia to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of the estates of Marshall Campbell and Raymond O'Neal."

LAWRENCE E. THOMAS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1355, for the relief of Lawrence E. Thomas.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is authorized and directed to consider and act upon any claim filed by Lawrence E. Thomas for disability from injuries incurred by him in March 1934 while an employee of the Civil Works Administration, and pay him compensation from the date of disability in accordance with the provisions of aforesaid act.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "Thomas", insert "of Whitman, Mass."; and in line 10, after the word "injuries", insert the word allegedly."

On page 2, beginning in line 1, after the word "Administration", strike out the remainder of line 1 and all of line 2 and insert "in accordance with the act entitled 'An act making an additional appropriation to carry out the purposes of the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933, for continuation of the Civil Works program, and for other purposes', approved February 15, 1934: Provided, That said claim shall be filed within 6 months after the approval of this act: Provided further, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the approval of this act."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SAM ROMACK

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1734, for the relief of Sam Romack.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $250 to Sam Romack, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for the loss of his gas boat T–4389, when sunk by the United States Coast Guard patrol boat Morris, on or about September 26, 1935: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 5, strike out "the sum of $250 to Sam Romack" and insert "to Sam Romack, of Seward, Alaska, the sum of $125."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BOLINROSS CHEMICAL CO.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2353) for the relief of the Bolinross Chemical Co.

Mr. COSTELLO and Mr. BARDEN objected, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

DWAIN D. MILES

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2358) for the relief of Dwain D. Miles.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Dwain D. Miles, of Coolidge, Tex., the sum of $7,500 for personal injuries sustained by him, resulting in the loss of his left arm, occasioned by the negligent driving and operation of a United States Department of Agriculture truck on a highway near Coolidge, Tex., on August 29, 1935.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "Treasury", strike out "not otherwise appropriated" and insert "allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps."

Page 1, line 8, strike out "$7,500" and insert "$3,500, in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States."

Page 1, line 10, after the word "him", strike out "resulting in the loss of his left arm, occasioned by the negligence of driving and operation of" and insert "when the automobile he was driving was struck by."

Page 2, line 2, after the word "truck", insert "operated by an enrollee of the Civilian Conservation Corps."

Page 2, line 4, strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

JOHN N. BROOKS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2740) for the relief of John N. Brooks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. O'CONNOR of New York). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and in full settlement of all claims against the United States, the sum of $2,500 to John N. Brooks, of Cincinnati, Ohio, which sum was paid by him April 14, 1925, to the United States by reason of the forfeiture of the bail bond of Frank Overturf, the case against whom was afterward nolled: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 10, strike out the words "afterward nolled" and insert "subsequently dismissed because of his absence for 7 years."

The amendment was agreed to and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

CLIFFORD L. BOHN

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3192) for the relief of Clifford L. Bohn.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Clifford L. Bohn, of Traverse City, Mich., the sum of $7,500 in settlement of all claims against the United States for damages to him caused by injuries sustained when he slipped and fell on the ice-covered steps of the Traverse City, Mich., post office and thereby fractured his spine.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, strike out "Bohn" and insert "Bonn."

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$7,500 in" and insert "$4,000 in full."

Page 1, line 10, strike out "and thereby fractured his spine" and insert "on November 30, 1935: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in exces of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read: "A bill for the relief of Clifford L. Bonn."

W. H. LENNEVILLE

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3745) for the relief of W. H. Lenneville.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the accounts of W. H. Lenneville, postmaster at Dickinson, N. Dak., in the sum of $504.90 on account of the loss of postal, Treasury, savings, money-order, war-revenue, and other funds resulting from the failure of banks in Dickinson, N. Dak.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the postal-savings account of W. H. Lenneville, postmaster at Dickinson, N. Dak., in the sum of $504.90, on account of the loss of postal savings funds resulting from the failure of the Dakota National Bank of Dickinson, Dickinson, N. Dak., prior to April 1, 1924."

The committee amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

H. A. MONTGOMERY

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4257) for the relief of H. A. Montgomery.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to H. A. Montgomery the sum of $873.45 in full settlement of all claims against the United States because of the loss of personal effects as the result of a fire in the apartment quarters 8F at Grand Canyon National Park, Ariz., September 1, 1935: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "Montgomery", insert "of Oakland, Calif.", and strike out "$873.45" and insert "$600."

Page 1, line 10, after the figures "1935", insert "which fire occurred through the defective condition of said building."

The committee amendments were agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

C. J. MURRILL

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4260) for the relief of C. J. Murrill.

Mr. COSTELLO and Mr. BARDEN objected, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

WILLIAM SPERRY

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4378) for the relief of William Sperry.

Mr. DONDERO and Mr. HALLECK objected, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

LAKE SPENCE

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4526) for the relief of Lake Spence.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Lake Spence, the sum of $15,000, the payment of such sum to be in full settlement of all claims against the United States for damages sustained by the said Lake Spence, on account of permanent personal injuries suffered by him when the automobile which he was driving was struck on October 10, 1936, at Rift, W. Va., by a truck in the service of the Civilian Conservation Corps.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "Treasury", strike out "not otherwise appropriated" and insert "allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps."

Page 1, line 7, after the word "Spence", insert "of Berwind, W. Va."

Page 1, line 8, strike out "$15,000, the payment of such sum to be" and insert "$5,000."

Page 2, line 3, strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

MRS. E. V. COCKERHAN

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4527) for the relief of Mrs. E. V. Cockerhan, mother and natural guardian of Luther Jennings Workman.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000 to Mrs. E. V. Cockerhan, mother and natural guardian of Luther Jennings Workman, of Red Jacket, W. Va., in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for personal injuries suffered by him on January 11, 1936, when he suffered burns from the explosion of gasoline in a fire left by employees of the Works Progress Administration at Red Jacket, W. Va.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, strike out "$10,000" and insert "$2,500."

Page 1, line 6, strike out "Mrs. E. V. Cockerhan, mother and natural guardian" and insert "the legal guardian."

Page 1, line 8, after the word "Workman", insert "a minor."

Page 1, line 11, strike out "suffered burns from" and insert "was burned by."

Page 2, line 2, strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

The title was amended to read: "A bill for the relief of Luther Jennings Workman, a minor."

HENRY CLAY GIBSON

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4622, for the relief of Henry Clay Gibson.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Henry Clay Gibson the sum of $191.25, in payment of cost unnecessarily incurred by United States in the case and on appeal from judgment of district court of United States in favor of Henry Clay Gibson, which appeal was dismissed by United States for lack of merit, and said cost wrongfully and unlawfully charged and deducted from the judgment in favor of said Henry Clay Gibson.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "to", to strike out the remainder of line 5 and all down to and including line 11 on page 1; page 2, line 1, after the word "Gibson", insert the following: "of Delhi, La., the sum of $186.25, in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for costs wrongfully assessed against him as the result of an appeal taken by the United States from a judgment of the United States District Court for the Western District of Louisiana in favor of said Henry Clay Gibson, which appeal was later withdrawn by the United States for lack of merit: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PAUL H. NORBOE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4875, for the relief of Paul H. Norboe.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500 being 25 percent of the amount recovered from the forfeiture of bail bonds in the case of The United States of America v. Mon Kee Lee, Lim Bok Young, Liu Sang, and Liung Sui Chun in the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, to Paul H. Norboe for original information furnished by him on November 9, 1934, to customs officers concerning a violation of the customs laws which resulted in the seizure of 2 pounds of morphine and the conviction of the above-named defendants: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, strike out "United States."

Page 1, line 5, after the word "appropriated", insert "to Paul H. Norboe, of San Rafael, Calif."

Page 1, line 7, strike out the word "being" and insert "in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for an award to him by the United States District Court for the Northern District of California as."

Page 2, line 3, strike out the words "to Paul H. Norboe."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. CHAMPION. Mr. Speaker, at the direction of the Committee on the Judiciary, I ask unanimous consent that that committee may be permitted to sit during the session of the House for the balance of the day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

PRIVATE CALENDAR

LUDWIG BAHNWEG

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 5144, for the relief of Ludwig Bahnweg.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Ludwig Bahnweg the sum of $500. Such sum represents reimbursement for the loss sustained by the said Ludwig Bahnweg on account of the forfeiture to the United States of a $500 Liberty Loan bond deposited by him to secure the appearance of Elizabeth Wilhelm or Kuhn in proceedings for her deportation. The said Ludwig Bahnweg in June 1931 warned the immigration authorities that unless provision was made for her immediate deportation such alien would disappear and not be available for deportation at a future date, but the Government did not take her into custody at that time. When the said Ludwig Bahnweg was called upon to surrender such alien he could not locate her within the time allowed him, but she was subsequently apprehended and deported.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Ludwig Bahnweg, of New York City, the sum of $500, in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for the value of a Liberty bond in that amount deposited by him to secure the appearance of an alien, Elizabeth Wilhelm, on June 3, 1931, and forfeited to the United States Treasury March 3, 1932, after her failure to appear, although said alien had been apprehended with the efforts of Ludwig Bahnweg, and deported on February 26, 1932: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ETHEL B. LORD

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5168, for the relief of Ethel B. Lord.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the legal guardian of Ethel B. Lord, of Bibb County, Ga., the sum of $10,000 in full settlement of all claims against the United States for the injury of said Ethel B. Lord, who was injured by the explosion of an old hand grenade at the former site of Camp Wheeler, near Macon, Ga., on November 23, 1935: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "Lord", insert "a minor."

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$10,000", and insert "$5,000."

Page 1, line 8, after the word "for", strike out "the injury of said Ethel B. Lord, who was injured by" and insert "personal injuries sustained by her as the result of."

Page 1, line 11, after the figures, insert "part of which site is now occupied as the home of her family."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read: "A bill for the relief of Ethel B. Lord, a minor."

CARSON BRADFORD

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5229, for the relief of Carson Bradford.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Carson Bradford, of Miami, Dade County, Fla., the sum of $3,500 to compensate said Carson Bradford for damage done to his house and property, located at Lake Weir, Marion County, Fla., on or about January 16, 1935, by agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice in line of duty: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$3,500, to compensate said Carson Bradford" and insert "$2,500, in full settlement of all claims against the United States"; page 1, line 10, after the word "on", strike out "or about January 16, 1935" and insert "January 15, 1935"; page 2, line 1, strike out "line of duty" and insert "apprehending certain fugitives from justice."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MARIAN MALIK

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5622, for the relief of Marion Malik.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Marion Malik, Minneapolis, Minn., the sum of $5,000. Such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States for damages sustained by the said Marion Malik as the result of being struck and seriously injured by a truck owned by the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey of the Department of Commerce in Minneapolis, Minn., on October 23, 1934: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $5,000.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the word "Marion" and insert "Marian."

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$5,000" and insert "$2,000."

Page 1, line 8, after the word "by", strike out "the said Marion Malik" and insert "her".

Page 1, line 9, strike out the word "seriously."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read: "A bill for the relief of Marian Malik."

WILLIAM SULLIVAN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6010, for the relief of William Sullivan.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William Sullivan, the sum of $5,000 in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for personal injuries received by him on April 23, 1936, resulting from being struck by a bullet from a revolver in the hands of a postal employee at the Babylon, Long Island, N. Y., post office, said injuries to William Sullivan resulting from the accidental discharge of said firearm while being cleaned as part of the routine of official business by said postal employee.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "Sullivan", insert "of West Islip, Long Island, N. Y."

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$5,000" and insert "$3,500."

Page 2, after line 3, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

E. W. ROSS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6574, for the relief of E. W. Ross.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to E. W. Ross, in full settlement of all his claims against the Government of the United States for injuries received by him on the 12th day of January 1934 when an automobile, being driven by him in a lawful manner, was run into by a truck owned by the Government of the United States, then and there being operated by Albert A. Potts, a member of the Civilian Conservation Corps, in a negligent and reckless manner: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the words "not otherwise appropriated" and insert "allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps."

Page 1, line 5, also, strike out the figures "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,000."

Page 1, line 6, after the name "Ross", insert the words "of San Diego, Calif."

Page 1, line 10, after the word "truck", strike out all of the bill through the word "manner", on page 2, line 1, and insert the following: "operated in connection with the Civilian Conservation Corps, at the intersection of Fairmount Street and Broadway, San Diego, Calif."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GEORGE E. SHOCKLEY

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 171, for the relief of George E. Shockley.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to George E. Shockley, the sum of $323, in full settlement of all claims against the Government occasioned by the cancelation of a contract entered into between the said George E. Shockley and the United States Coast Guard Service: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, after the name "Shockley", insert the words "of Rehoboth Del.,".

Page 1, line 7, after the word "Government", insert "for losses."

Page 1, line 9, strike out the word "Service" and insert the words "for repairs and additions to the lifeboat house and launchway at Lewes (Del.) Coast Guard Station."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SHEEHY DRILLING CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 630, for the relief of the Sheehy Drilling Co.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Sheehy Drilling Co., of Casper, Wyo., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $660, said sum to be in full settlement of any and all claims against the Government for the balance due said Sheehy Drilling Co. for completing performance of Department of the Interior (United States Geological Survey) contract no. 1-ga-2423, dated October 5, 1933, for plugging and abandonment of the Zola Oil Co. well no. 1, located on the southeast northwest section 25, township 27 north, range 93 west sixth principal meridian, Crook's Creek Area, in Fremont County, Wyo., on canceled oil and gas prospecting permit, Cheyenne 029569: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LUCILLE M'CLURE

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 707, for the relief of Lucille McClure.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Lucille McClure the sum of $3,600, compensation as the widow of former Deputy Administrator of Prohibition H. S. McClure, of Spokane, Wash., whose death on January 15, 1929, was caused by injuries sustained while in the Government service: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all of the bill after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized and directed to receive and consider the claim of Lucille McClure, of Spokane, Wash., widow of a former deputy administrator of prohibition, H. S. McClure, whose death occurred on January 15, 1929, allegedly as a result of injuries sustained by him while in the performance of his duties, under the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes', approved September 7, 1916, as amended, except that the limitations of time in sections 15 to 20 thereof, both inclusive, are hereby waived: Provided, That claim hereunder shall be filed within 6 months from the date of the approval of this act: Provided further, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the approval of this act."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CHARLES T. MILLER HOSPITAL, INC., ET AL.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 767, for the relief of the Charles T. Miller Hospital, Inc., at St. Paul, Minn.; Dr. Edgar T. Herrmann; Ruth Kehoe, nurse, and Catherine Foley, nurse.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the naval hospital fund to the Charles T. Miller Hospital, Inc., at St. Paul, Minn., the sum of $135.45; to Dr. Edgar T. Herrmann, the sum of $117; to Ruth Kehoe, nurse, the sum of $9; and to Catherine Foley, nurse, the sum of $4; in all, $265.45, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for services and professional treatment rendered Leonard James Graves, storekeeper, second class (F-1), United States Naval Reserve, while ill with diabetic acidosis during the period from August 17, 1935, to September 7, 1935: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WILLIAM SPERRY

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 459, H. R. 4378, for the relief of William Sperry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4378) for the relief of William Sperry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,000 to William Sperry, Newport, Wash. Payment of such sum should be in full settlement of all claims against the United States for damages sustained by the said William Sperry on account of the loss of his son, Clifford Sperry, who was struck and killed on May 27, 1934, at Newport, Wash., by a Forest Service truck driven by an enrollee of the Civilian Conservation Corps stationed at Silvernite, Mont.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act, in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 5, strike out "not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,000", and insert in lieu thereof "allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, the sum of $5,000."

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 7, strike out "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$4,000."

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: In lines 8 and 9, strike out "Washington. Payment of such sum should be" and insert in lieu thereof "Washington,".

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ELLEN TAYLOR

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 828, for the relief of Ellen Taylor.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Ellen Taylor, the sum of $2,626 in full and final settlement of any and all claims against the United States for injuries sustained when the automobile in which she was a passenger was struck by a National Capital Parks truck at the intersection of Twentieth and Otis Streets NE., Washington, D. C., on September 15, 1934: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "Taylor", insert "of Richmond, Va."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ALEXANDER E. KOVNER

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1048, for the relief of Alexander E. Kovner.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Alexander E. Kovner, of Seattle, Wash., the sum of $5,000, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for cost of hospital and medical care, pain and suffering, and permanent disability, resulting from the said Alexander E. Kovner being struck by a truck belonging to the Third Brigade of the United States Marines, in the city of Tientsin, China, on May 14, 1928, such accident being primarily due to the negligence of the driver of the said truck: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "Seattle, Wash.", and insert in lieu thereof "San Francisco, Calif."

Page 2, line 1, strike out "primarily."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JAMES H. SMITH

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1257, for the relief of James H. Smith.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to James H. Smith, formerly employed as laboratorian in roentgenology by the United States Veterans' Bureau, the sum of $5,000 in full settlement of all claims against the Government for injuries received by him as a result of X-ray burns sustained by him in August 1922 and March 1923 while employed at the United States veterans' hospital at Dwight, Ill., and at the United States Veterans' Bureau regional office at Lexington, Ky.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

After line 5, insert "of Washington, D. C."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GOLDENBERG FURNITURE CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1849, for the relief of the Goldenberg Furniture Co.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Goldenberg Furniture Co., Parkersburg, W. Va., the sum of $115.25. Such sum represents the value of certain materials and equipment (plus the cost of labor on a portion thereof) furnished the district engineer, fourth district, Works Progress Administration, Parkersburg, W. Va., by the said Goldenberg Furniture Co. The claim of such company for the payment of such sum was disallowed by the Acting Comptroller General of the United States on the ground that such materials and equipment were delivered and labor thereon performed upon the verbal order of an employee of the Works Progress Administration who was not authorized to act as a purchasing or contracting officer for the United States: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 7, strike out "represents" and insert "shall be in full satisfaction of its claim against the United States for."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HALLE D. M'CULLOUGH

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1934, for the relief of Halle D. McCullough.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow credit in the accounts of Halle D. McCullough, as superintendent and special disbursing agent of Fort Berthold Indian Agency, Elbowoods, N. Dak., for expenditures of $283.61 and $107.06 made during the month of June 1933 from the fund "Indian moneys, proceeds of labor, Fort Berthold Agency."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 10, add the following: "Which sums have been disallowed by the General Accounting Office for lack of accounting evidence to substantiate the propriety of the expenditures."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JOHN A. ENSOR

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2266, for the relief of John A. Ensor.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John A. Ensor, of Sparks, Md., the sum of $25. The payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States on account of the slaughter, prior to its registration as a purebred, of one diseased cow owned by the said John A. Ensor: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 10, after the word "Ensor", insert "and in furtherance of the Bureau of Animal Industry's project for the elimination of Bang's disease."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WILLIAM K. RICHARDSON

The Clerk called Senate Joint Resolution 30, for the relief of William K. Richardson.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas William King Richardson invented a new form for a projectile for use in present constructed guns, consisting of three salient features, to wit, a long point, a relatively reduced cylinder length, and a beveled base now known as the streamline shell; and

Whereas this invention was submitted to the United States War and Navy Departments by said Richardson in 1914 as a secret invention, and later application for Letters Patent was made, and United States Patent No. 1141415 was granted to said Richardson on June 1, 1915, and later adjudicated by the Court of Claims as a valid patent; and

Whereas the United States Army used many millions of said streamline shells in the war against Germany and Austria, and there were no streamline shells for cannon used in the aforesaid war until after the issue of the Richardson patent; and

Whereas the streamline shell greatly increased the range and preserved accuracy of our guns, and the patent disclosed a great discovery in the science of streamline of a body, and for the first time in science gave the correct velocity flow of air to an instantly created vacuum, making it possible to mathematically express as demonstrated in the patent the pressure at the point and base of a projectile due to form and velocity; and

Whereas in suit no. A-200, brought by said Richardson against the United States in the Court of Claims for use of his invention during the Great War, a judgment was rendered December 1, 1930, "that the patent is valid and not infringed"; and

Whereas noninfringement was established by imposing exact dimensions on the elements of the claim; and

Whereas the court rendered a dual opinion on special finding of fact XI of said judgment; and

Whereas the court ignored competent testimony in the case; and

Whereas motion for a new trial was made by plaintiff, and this motion was overruled on November 2, 1931, whereupon petition in the Supreme Court for writ of certiorari was made and denied March 17, 1932, without review; and

Whereas the Senate, by Senate Resolution 119, remanded the claim of W. K. Richardson to the United States Court of Claims under section 151 of the Judicial Code, with complete authority to hear and consider questions of law and fact complained of in the motion for a new trial made January 28, 1931; and

Whereas the Court of Claims of the United States, by its decision of November 4, 1935, dismissed claimant's petition filed pursuant to said Senate Resolution 119 for want of jurisdiction because, judgment having been entered by the court in Richardson's suit no. A-200, the claim referred to the court by the Senate under section 151 of the Judicial Code was res adjudicata; and, further, because the jurisdiction of the court in this case could be invoked only by an act of Congress or by a joint resolution of the Senate and the House of Representatives; and

Whereas the judgment rendered December 1, 1930, in said case shows a dual opinion on special finding of fact XI, and that dual opinion is a negation of the court's judgment "that the patent is valid"; and

Whereas special finding of fact XI holds the invention is novel, and special finding of fact VI indicates great merit of the invention and new and desired results in ordnance, and the court admits the invention "possessed advantages", and that claim 3 of the patent reads in terminology upon the structure of a 155-millimeter shell; and

Whereas the court imposed the exact dimensions of the shell (12-inch) used by Richardson merely to illustrate his invention in his patent, on the elements of the claim, contrary to the terminology of said claim, and on such unsound facts hold the claim not infringed: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the case of W. K. Richardson, A-200, be remanded to the Court of Claims on matters set forth in this resolution to consider and render judgment in accordance to law and equity, on the evidence used and testimony taken and findings of facts in case A-200, and Congress waives the statute of limitation, rules of practice of the Court of Claims, previous action of the Court of Claims, or any provision of law to the contrary notwithstanding, under the stipulation and agreement that the amount for which suit was originally brought be reduced to 3 percent of that amount, and if payment is made to be a settlement in full for use of the invention by the United States Government during the life of patent 1141415, and that said case shall be advanced on the docket and promptly placed on the trial calendar.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 4, line 5, strike out the word "law" and insert "section 179 of the Judicial Code."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EDITH JORDAN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6059, for the relief of Edith Jordan.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Edith Jordan, the sum of $5,000. Such sum shall be in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States for damages resulting from serious injury of the said Edith Jordan who, on September 16, 1933, suffered serious injuries while walking across a railroad spur crossing owned or controlled by the Panama Railroad Co., in the city of Gatun, Canal Zone: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "Jordan", insert "of Gatun, Canal Zone."

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$5,000" and insert "$2,500."

Page 1, line 8, after the word "from", strike out "serious injury of the said Edith Jordan who" and insert "injuries sustained by her."

Page 1, line 10, strike out "suffered serious injuries."

Page 2, line 1, strike out "railroad company" and insert "canal."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RUSSELL J. VAUGHAN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1729, for the relief of Russell J. Vaughan.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I object.

There being no further objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Russell J. Vaughan, of Shiprock, N. Mex., the sum of $980.84. Such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States for pay withheld from said Vaughan, and shall represent reimbursement for suspension from duty and pay status for a period from October 18, 1933, to April 19, 1934, inclusive.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 11 after the word "inclusive" insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CHAIM (HYMAN) KAPLAN

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1265, for the relief of Chaim (Hyman) Kaplan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COSTELLO and Mr. BARDEN objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

ETTORE CORDOVADO

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3746, for the relief of Ettore Cordovado.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COSTELLO and Mr. BARDEN objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Im-Immigration and Naturalization.

CECILE C. CAMERON

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7387, for the relief of Cecile C. Cameron.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Cecile C. Cameron, widow of Alfred D. Cameron, late an American Foreign Service officer assigned as American consul at London, England, the sum of $4,400, equal to 1 year's salary of her deceased husband, who died of illness incurred while at his post of duty in the Consular Service; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sufficient sum to carry out the purpose of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JOSEPH PELLON

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5565, to authorize the cancelation of deportation proceedings in the case of Joseph Pellon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COSTELLO and Mr. BARDEN objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

AGATHA YAKAVONIS (NEE AGATHA MILAUSKAS)

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1474, for the relief of Agatha Milauskas Yakavonis (nee Agatha Milauskas).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COSTELLO and Mr. BARDEN objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

MRS. ZEBA SHARGABIAN

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 779, for the relief of Mrs. Zeba Shargabian.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COSTELLO and Mr. BARDEN objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

FRANCESCA INCARDONE IACONA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 518, for the relief of Francesca Incardone Iacona.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Francesca Incardone Iacona the sum of $1,000, being the amount of a bond deposited with the United States Immigration Service guaranteeing the departure of Francesca and Cologero Incardone and later forfeited because of their failure to leave the United States.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, jointly to Rosolino Zamito and Maria Zamito, of Buffalo, N. Y., the sum of $1,000, in full satisfaction of their claims against the United States for the value of two bonds deposited by the National Surety Co., in January 1921, with claimants as indemnitors, to secure the deportation of Francesca and Cologero Incardone, after a decision by immigration officials that they were not entitled to entry in the United States; and forfeited on August 11, 1922, when the said Cologero and Francesca Incardone failed to depart from the United States, although, by subsequent decision of the Labor Department, the said Incardones were entitled to admission in December 1920, when they returned to the United States from a temporary absence abroad: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read as follows: "A bill for the relief of Rosolino Zamito and Maria Zamito."

JOHN VOORHEES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 615, granting compensation to John Voorhees.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to John Voorhees, of Fonda, N. Y., in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for injuries sustained on July 2, 1935, at Fonda, N. Y., by Margaret Voorhees, minor daughter of the said John Voorhees, as the result of the explosion of a torpedo firecracker thrown by a member of Company H, Sixty-sixth Regiment United States Infantry.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "John Voorhees" and insert "the legal guardian of Margaret Voorhees, a minor."

Line 10, strike out "minor daughter of the said John Voorhees."

Page 2, line 2, after the word "Infantry", insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DOROTHY KRICK

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1241, for the relief of Dorothy Krick.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Dorothy Krick, of Galice, Oreg., the sum of $21,500 in full satisfaction of her claim against the United States for damages for personal injuries suffered on December 9, 1933, in Josephine County, Oreg., on Merlin-Almeda Market Road, about 6.3 miles west of Grants Pass, Oreg., when the automobile in which said Dorothy Krick was riding was struck by a motor truck owned by the United States and driven by Oliver Whitmeyer, an employee of the Civilian Conservation Corps.

With the following committee amendments:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, to Dorothy Krick, of Galice, Oreg., the sum of $8,399.50; to Ernest Krick, of Galice, Oreg., the sum of $1,743; and to May Elizabeth Ferren, administratrix of the estate of James Albert Ferren, deceased, late of Galice, Oreg., the sum of $5,250; in all, $15,392.50, in full settlement of their claims against the United States for damages as a result of personal injuries sustained by Dorothy and Ernest Krick, and the death of James Albert Ferren, and for property damage, when the automobile in which they were riding was struck by a truck operated in connection with the Civilian Conservation Corps, on December 9, 1933, on the Merlin-Almeda Market Road, near Grants Pass, Josephine County, Oreg.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with these claims, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended.

J. ROY WORKMAN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1869, for the relief of J. Roy Workman.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to J. Roy Workman, of Clinton, S. C., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000 in full payment of all claims of the said J. Roy Workman for personal injuries received near Clinton, S. C., on the 4th day of December 1935, when struck by a truck, alleged to have been operated by the Works Progress Administration and being driven by one Frank Curry, an employee of the said Works Progress Administration.

With the following committee amendments:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to J. Roy Workman, of Clinton, S. C., the sum of $1,000; to Adelaide W. Workman, of the same city, the sum of $1,000; and to the legal guardian of J. Roy Workman, Jr., of the same city, the sum of $1,500. Said sums to be in full settlement of all claims against the United States for expenses incurred and injuries received when the car in which they were riding was struck by a truck in the use of the Works Progress Administration on December 4, 1935, near Clinton, S. C.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended.

ROBERTA CARR

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2191, for the relief of Roberta Carr.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Roberta Carr, of Tazewell, Tenn., the sum of $7,180.45. Such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States for damages caused by reason of the killing of her husband by a Government truck in the service of a Civilian Conservation Corps camp.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, to Roberta Carr, of Sandlick, Claiborne County, Tenn., the sum of $7,090.23 in full satisfaction of her claim against the United States for a judgment in that amount, plus one-half the costs, obtained against an enrollee of the Civilian Conservation Corps in the Circuit Court for Claiborne County, Tenn., as a result of a collision between a truck operated by said enrollee for the Civilian Conservation Corps and an automobile driven by her husband, Swan Carr, on Highway No. 25–E, between Tazewell and Cumberland Gap, Tenn., on April 27, 1935, which collision caused the death of said Swan Carr: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the committee amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: Page 2, line 5, after the words "the sum of", strike out "$7,090.23" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000."

Strike out all of lines 7, 8, and 9, and in line 10 strike out the word "said" and insert the word "an."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ORBA CARESS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2339, for the relief of Orba Caress.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Orba Caress, the sum of $375 in full settlement of all claims against the United States for losses incurred in preparing, by the purchase of equipment and otherwise, to perform service under the contract awarded him for carrying the mail on star route no. 53992, Woodward to Forgan, Okla., for a period of 30 days, with a view to award a regular contract at the expiration of 30 days, the award of such contracts having been revoked before any service was performed thereunder: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "Caress", insert "of Woodward, Okla."

Line 6, strike out "$375" and insert "$196."

Line 8, after the word "preparing", insert "in November 1935."

Line 9, after the word "contract", insert "to be."

Page 2, line 1, after the word "days", strike out the remainder of line 1 and all of line 2 and insert "the award of such contract."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GEORGE O. CLAYPOOL

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3503, for the relief of George O. Claypool.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission be, and is hereby, authorized to consider and determine, in the same manner and to the same extent as if application for benefits of the Employees' Compensation Act had been made within the 1-year period required by sections 17 and 20 thereof, the claim of George O. Claypool, on account of disability due to tuberculosis alleged to have been contracted by reason of exposure to patients while on duty during his employment, in the service of the United States, at the Veterans' Administration facility, Chillicothe, Ohio, between April 1925 and March 1926: Provided, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the enactment of this act.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, strike out lines 5 to 8, inclusive, and insert the following: "notwithstanding the limitations of time in sections 15 to 20, both inclusive, of the act entitled 'An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes', approved September 7, 1916, as amended, the claim of George O. Claypool, of Chillicothe, Ohio."

After line 9, insert a colon and the words "Provided further, That claim hereunder shall be filed within 6 months after the enactment of this act."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COL. C. J. BARTLETT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3987, for the relief of the estate of Col. C. J. Bartlett, United States Army.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. C. J. Bartlett, of San Francisco, Calif., administratrix of the estate of Col. C. J. Bartlett, Medical Corps, United States Army, the sum of $600. The payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States for the loss sustained by the said Col. C. J. Bartlett on account of damage to his personal property incident to its shipment from San Francisco, Calif., to Fort Slocum, N. Y., and its reshipment to San Francisco, Calif., during the year 1934. Such shipment and reshipment were occasioned by the transfer, by order of the Department of War, of the said Col. C. J. Bartlett from the Presidio of San Francisco to Fort Slocum, N. Y., and his subsequent return, by order of the Department of War, to his home in San Francisco to await retirement.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 8, strike out "$600" and insert "$293."

Page 2, after line 10, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GEORGE R. BROWN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4156, for the relief of George R. Brown.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to George R. Brown, a former second lieutenant in the National Guard in the service of the United States, the sum of $698.90 in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for pay from the date of his alleged discharge and last receipt of pay, August 9, 1917, to the alleged date of the receipt of notification of his discharge on January 7, 1918: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CHARLOTTE SWEENEY AND HOWARD SWEENEY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4936, for the relief of the legal guardian of Charlotte Sweeney and Howard Sweeney.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,000 to the legal guardian of Charlotte Sweeney and Howard Sweeney in full settlement of all claims against the United States for personal injuries sustained by them as a result of a collision between the car in which they were riding, belonging to William Hentz, and a Coast Guard truck, said collision occurring on July 16, 1936, at Curtis Bay, Md.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "appropriated", strike out the remainder of the line and down to and including all of line 8 and insert "to the legal guardian of Charlotte Sweeney, a minor, of Baltimore, Md., the sum of $750; to the legal guardian of Howard Sweeney, a minor, of Baltimore, Md., the sum of $750; to William Hintz, of Baltimore, Md., the sum of $1,675; and to Martha Hintz, of Baltimore, Md., the sum of $1,500; in all, $4,675, in full settlement of their claims against the United States for personal injuries and property damage."

Page 2, line 6, strike out the word "Hentz" and insert the word "Hintz."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read as follows: "A bill for the relief of Charlotte Sweeney, a minor, Howard Sweeney, a minor, William Hintz, and Martha Hintz."

JOHN P. RYAN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5158, for the relief of John P. Ryan.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and in full settlement against the Government, the sum of $10,643 to John P. Ryan as compensation for personal injuries, and medical attention therefor, received through being struck by a United States Navy automobile which was negligently driven by an enlisted man of the United States Navy.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John P. Ryan, of Worcester, Mass., the sum of $2,115, in full settlement of his claim against the United States for personal injuries sustained when he was struck by a United States Navy truck, on August 12, 1931, at the intersection of Ninth Avenue and Pike Street, Seattle, Wash.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THOMAS H. M'LAIN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5703, for the relief of Thomas H. McLain.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to Thomas H. McLain, who, on November 27, 1924, at Philadelphia, Pa., sustained personal injuries when struck by a motor vehicle then under the control and operation of the United States Post Office Department.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Thomas H. McLain, of Philadelphia, Pa., the sum of $2,000, in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for personal injuries sustained when he was struck by a United States mail truck near the intersection of Thirty-sixth and Market Streets, Philadelphia, Pa., on November 27, 1924: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The Committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MILDRED MOORE

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 114, for the relief of Mildred Moore.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mildred Moore, of Chicago, Ill., the sum of $750 in full satisfaction of her claim against the United States for compensation for bodily injuries suffered by her when the automobile in which she was riding was struck by a United States Army automobile driven by R. H. Pearson at the intersection of Fifty-seventh Street and Drexel Avenue in Chicago, Ill., on February 2, 1934: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$750" and insert "$1,250."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

G. L. TARLTON

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1143, for the relief of G. L. Tarlton.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to G. L. Tarlton, the sum of $22,007.34 in full settlement of his claim for increased cost of labor and material incurred in complying on and after August 10, 1933, with the President's Reemployment Agreement and/or the applicable approved code in the performance of his contract with the War Department dated February 15, 1933, for the construction of a lock at lock and dam no. 1, Barren River, Ky., and other work connected therewith: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "Tarlton", insert "of St. Louis, Mo."; and in line 7, after the word "claim", insert "against the United States."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FRAZIER-DAVIS CONSTRUCTION CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1144, for the relief of the Frazier-Davis Construction Co.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Frazier-Davis Construction Co. the sum of $25,144.76 in full settlement of the claim of said company for increased cost of labor and material incurred in complying on and after August 10, 1933, with the President's Reemployment Agreement and/or the applicable approved code in the performance of its contract with the War Department dated January 19, 1933, for the construction of lock and dam no. 5, Green River, Ky.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "Company", insert "of St. Louis, Mo."; and in line 7, after the word "Company", insert "against the United States."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

J. E. SAMMONS

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1188) for the relief of J. E. Sammons.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to J. E. Sammons, of Macon, Ga., the sum of $161.98 in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States, such sum representing the additional amount due the claimant under a contract for the sale of certain lands to the United States, which contract and the sequent deed of conveyance were based on an erroneous survey of such lands by Government engineers: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 7, after the words "United States", strike out the remainder of the line and all of lines 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12, and insert "for the value of 35.99 acres of land in Putnam County, Ga., at $4.50 per acre, which he conveyed by deed to the Government, represented by the Resettlement Administration, and for which he was not paid because of an erroneous survey of the tract by the General Land Office in February 1935, describing it as 230.72 acres, whereas it in fact contained 266.72 acres by subsequent survey of June 14, 1935."

The committee amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

JAMES LINCOLN HARTLEY

The Clerk called the bill, S. 557, authorizing the naturalization of James Lincoln Hartley, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the immigration laws James Lincoln Hartley, a native-born citizen of the United States who involuntarily lost his citizenship at the age of 7 years by reason of the naturalization of his father as a citizen of Canada, shall be held and considered to have been legally admitted to the United States for permanent residence.

SEC. 2. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, said James Lincoln Hartley may be naturalized as a citizen of the United States by filing a declaration of intention and taking the oath of allegiance in the manner prescribed in the naturalization laws before any court having jurisdiction of the naturalization of aliens.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

JOHN GRINWOOD TAYLOR

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6468) to authorize the cancelation of deportation proceedings in the case of John Grinwood Taylor.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Labor is hereby authorized and directed to cancel the outstanding order and warrant of deportation issued pursuant to section 14 of the Immigration Act of 1924 (43 Stat. 153, sec. 214) in the case of John Grinwood Taylor, any provision of existing law to the contrary notwithstanding. From and after the date of the approval of this act, John Grinwood Taylor shall not again be subject to deportation by reason of the same fact upon which the outstanding proceedings rest.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

CLYDE J. NESSER

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1474) to provide for the advancement on the retired list of the Navy of Clyde J. Nesser, a lieutenant (junior grade), United States Navy, retired.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the date of enactment of this act, Clyde J. Nesser, lieutenant (junior grade), United States Navy, retired, shall have the rank of a lieutenant on the retired list of the United States Navy.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

EMORY M. M'COOL

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6402) for the relief of Emory M. McCool, United States Navy, retired.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of section 2 of the act approved May 23, 1930 (46 Stat. 375; U. S. C., title 34, sec. 790), Emory M. McCool, chief machinist's mate, United States Navy, retired, shall be held and considered to have completed 30 years' service, including naval service, time in the Fleet Naval Reserve, and Army service, including double time for service in the Philippines from November 26, 1899, to May 18, 1901, for the purpose of transfer to the retired list of the United States Navy, on May 19, 1929, and the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the said Emory M. McCool the sum of $636.30, which sum represents allowances at $15.75 per month, covering the period from May 19, 1929, to and including September 30, 1932, authorized by existing law (U. S. C., title 34, sec. 431) to be paid to enlisted men upon transfer to the retired list of the Navy upon completion of 30 years' service.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 4, strike out "$636.30" and insert "$636."

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. COSTELLO to the committee amendment: Strike out "$636" and insert "$630."

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

FRED P. HALBERT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 827) for the relief of Fred P. Halbert.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue a patent conveying all the right, title, and interest of the United States to lot 5, section 16, township 23 north, range 9 west of the Willamette meridian, containing 30.90 acres, more or less, according to the Government survey thereof, in Grays Harbor (formerly Chehalis) County, Wash., to Fred P. Halbert.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER resumed the chair.

FLORIDA O. M'LAIN

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 2229) for the relief of Florida O. McLain, widow of Calvin E. McLain, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 2229, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland, Mr. COFFEE of Washington, and Mr. CASE of South Dakota.

AMERICAN CONSULAR COURTS, EGYPT

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a copy of an order issued on March 1, 1937, by the Minister of the United States to Egypt, with the assent of the several American consular officers in Egypt, prescribing the fees to be paid in probate cases in the American consular courts in Egypt.

This order has been issued by virtue of authority contained in section 5 of the act of Congress of June 22, 1860 (R. S. 4117, 4118; U. S. C., title 22, secs. 147, 148), and is transmitted to the Congress in compliance with the provisions of section 6 of the said act (R. S. 4119; U. S. C., title 22, sec. 148).

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 6, 1937.

[Enclosure: Order.]

UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION SESQUICENTENNIAL COMMISSION

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 258.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 258

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 363, a joint resolution to authorize an additional appropriation to further the work of the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the joint resolution and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Library, the joint resolution shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the joint resolution for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCLEAN].

Mr. Speaker, this is a rule for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 363, reported out of the Committee on the Library, to authorize the appropriation of more funds for the continuance of the so-called Constitutional celebration, the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the formation of the Constitution. On the presentation of the matter to the Rules Committee, we felt justified in bringing out this rule, because when the bill was on the Consent Calendar it was objected to.

In the last Congress the Committee on the Library reported out a bill authorizing an appropriation of $350,000 for this 2-year celebration of this event. When that bill came on the floor it was suggested that we should not make appropriations in advance, but just sufficient money should be appropriated to carry the matter through the current year. With that in mind and following that suggestion, the amount of $350,000 was reduced to $200,000, which was intended to and did take care of the matter up to the 30th of June of this year. This celebration is in the future still, and this joint resolution would authorize the appropriation of an additional $150,000, as originally intended, to carry this celebration through to its conclusion.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman says the celebration is really in the future. Has the gentleman any definite information so that he can state to the House that this is the concluding appropriation for this celebration?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Of course, I would not want to take that responsibility. I understand that is the intention, and the Rules Committee was so advised.

Mr. SNELL. I appreciate that, but I think it should be definitely stated by somebody that we are going to close down when we appropriate this $150,000.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. The gentleman has had a long and distinguished career in public life.

Mr. SNELL. I thank the gentleman for that courtesy.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I wonder if he ever has experienced the "finale"?

Mr. SNELL. I have experienced finale in some things as far as appropriations are concerned, and some others that I will not mention. [Laughter.] But I do feel it ought to be definitely understood, if we appropriate this other $150,000, that that is all Congress is going to appropriate for this celebration.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I understand this celebration will run at least up through next June. Of course, I agree that when people interested in legislation say "this is all we want", they ought to abide by it.

Mr. SNELL. I think that statement should be made here today, and the House ought to understand it, because if we appropriate $350,000, it is a fairly liberal amount to celebrate something that is diminishing at the present time. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Whatever the "something" is, to which the constitutional statesman refers, I shall now "diminish" my time and opportunity for retort, by yielding to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McLEAN].

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I was in the House when this bill was considered on May 4, 1936. I have been here when many of these celebrations were considered. One thing that I admire about the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] is that he is honest. He does not attempt to deceive. Of course, I do not remember this occurrence when the bill was considered a year ago, just as the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] remembers it. My recollection is that the bill was reported for $350,000; that unanimous consent was asked to get the bill through the House and there was objection made. Shortly afterward and on the same day, the Speaker recognized the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] to pass the bill under suspension of the rules. I have just had called to my attention a little colloquy that occurred at that time, in which the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] and I were engaged:

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. This bill was before the House earlier in the afternoon?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. The bill had the considered attention of the committee reporting it before it was reported?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. The bill as originally introduced provided for an appropriation of $350,000?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman tried to get the bill enacted by unanimous consent of the House for $350,000, with the understanding that that was the absolute minimum amount necessary to do what the gentleman contemplates doing. The House will not agree to that. The gentleman now has reduced the amount by $150,000, in an hour, and says he can get through with the $200,000.

Mr. BLOOM. Just correct that in regard to that "get through." I did not say that we could get through with $200,000.

Mr. MICHENER. That is what I am getting at.

Mr. BLOOM. Please do not say that I said it.

Mr. MICHENER. Then the gentleman does not contemplate that this is to be the last appropriation. Because he could not get $350,000 he is coming in now under suspension of the rules and asking for $200,000, to get the nose of the camel under the tent, and later he will be back asking Congress for the remainder, $150,000 or possibly $350,000 more. Is that correct?

Mr. BLOOM. If the gentleman wants me to publish all the material in the same way that he asked us for during the Bicentennial celebration—and I believe I convinced the gentleman on the floor at that time when he asked a similar question, that you will only get what you pay for. That is all you are going to get. If you want $200,000 worth of celebration that is what you will get. If you want a $350,000 celebration you will get that, and if you do not want to appropriate and you want no celebration, that is what you will get.

That is what happened. It is the old story. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] is doing good work, if we can afford it now. I harken back to the President's recent message in which he asked the Democratic Congress not to make any authorization for appropriations unless the means of raising the money were provided. Here today we are appropriating $150,000 additional money to carry on a celebration at a time when we have been quarrelling about cutting relief. I ask you in all candor: Should we cut relief, or should we cut celebrations? Is it more important that we celebrate the adoption of the Constitution, that today we are disregarding in so many particulars, rather than that we give to those people who are supposed to live under the Constitution relief, bread, subsistence?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Oh, the gentleman is going to ask: Where are you going to get the money? I answer that I do not know.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. RICH. No; I am not going to ask: Where are you going to get the money? I have asked that many times. I am going to say that if ever there was a time in the history of the Nation when we ought to celebrate the adoption of the Constitution of the United States that day is now. We ought to celebrate, we ought to do something to keep it alive, for if things go on as they have been going for another 3 or 4 years we will not have any Constitution, any country, or anything. [Laughter.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield further. In order to make the gentleman's speech natural, I will ask: "Where are you going to get the money?"

There is going on at this good hour in another body a debate that will be of monumental importance, a debate affecting the Constitution. It seems to me that we can ill afford at this particular time to waste the time of this House in determining whether or not we are going to borrow—listen to this—whether or not the United States Government is going to issue its bonds, its notes, its obligations for $150,000 to continue or elaborate this celebration.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I cannot yield; I am sorry.

We all believe in celebrating the adoption of the Constitution, but likewise we believe in doing it in a practical way. What good is this lip service? What good are these pamphlets? What good are these meetings held throughout the country telling us about the Constitution unless we pay some little respect to the Constitution?

So far as the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] is concerned, he generally gets $1.50 on every dollar he invests. I notice that the bill made in order by the rule carries a provision entirely new in the Congress: That we are setting up here a revolving fund; we have created another commission and are giving them $150,000 more as a revolving fund. The gentleman is going to dicker, he is going to try to make a little money out of celebrating the adoption of the Constitution of the United States. So far as I am concerned, I take advantage of the pamphlets he gets out. They are good. One of these little 10-cent arrangements about the Constitution is a splendid thing. Many things are splendid, but can we afford this now? Should we listen to the President? Are we attempting to balance the Budget? Oh, it is the little drops of water and the little grains of sand that count.

You say it is only $150,000, but it is $150,000 added to the debt which we already have and on which we must pay interest. Remember, if you pass this bill you are not appropriating any money out of the Treasury; you are authorizing the administration to go out into the market and borrow $150,000 more and pay interest on it to carry on a celebration. The American people do not want that kind of celebration at this time. Thinking people everywhere would prefer to celebrate an honest effort on the part of Congress to balance the Budget.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

THE BOY SCOUT JAMBOREE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the argument of the gentleman from Michigan, and I agree with him that we do not need to celebrate the Constitution so much as we do to have its principles engraved on the hearts of the American people.

I should like to have seen some of this money spent on the celebration that is being held in Washington this week. We are honored by having a convention here that, in my opinion, is the most orderly, the most respectable, and the most inspiring I have witnessed since I have been a Member of the House, and that is the jamboree of the Boy Scouts of America. [Applause.]

They have none of that boisterousness that we see in a convention of the lords of finance; they manifest none of that ruthless destruction of property which we so often observe in the members of other organizations. They are all sober; there is none of that rowdyism that so often disgraces conventions of their elders.

They have none of that disregard for the rights of other people which we sometimes witness on the part of some of our college "round-ups." You do not have to hide the furniture to keep it from being destroyed. They are orderly little gentlemen, and are setting examples that both men and women would do well to follow. They are an inspiration to us all.

They have none of that idolatrous reverence for brass buttons that we sometimes witness in connection with certain organizations which gather here to celebrate the deeds of their ancestors or to tell Congress what to do. They show none of that selfishness which we see permeate other gatherings.

Their jamboree is about the most inspiring spectacle I have ever witnessed. It is refreshing, it is inspiring to see these boys, these young men, the hope of the Nation, the pick and flower of the coming manhood of America, gather here in Washington and give us examples in rectitude of conduct that are bound to thrill the hearts of all right-thinking men. When I look upon them I am reminded of the golden words of Ella Wheeler Wilcox when she said:

> Weep not for vanished ages,
> With their great heroic men
> Who live on history's pages or dwell
> In the poet's pen;
> For the grandest times are before us,
> And the world is yet to see
> The noblest worth of this old earth
> In the men that are to be.

[Applause.]

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY].

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. Speaker, I shall utilize my remarks by interrogating the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM]. I have the greatest interest in the work of this Commission and share with all Members of the House a keen faith in, and love and reverence for the Constitution. But we are appropriating altogether $350,000 of the taxpayers money and it would seem to me that the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] should give us a first-hand dissertation on the A, B, C's of his Commission, how they are functioning, and how they propose spending this $350,000. I think he can give this information concisely and I will yield him the balance of my time. In his reply I ask that he confirm that no private interest is making a cent out of this project, but that the net income over and above the cost goes into the Federal Treasury.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I may answer the gentleman's statement by saying if the gentleman had taken the time to visit the Commission's headquarters he could have learned just exactly what the Commission was doing.

I may say this celebration is an educational one. We are trying to teach the people of this country, the young folks as well as the adults, the history of the Constitution. It is surprising the ignorance of the people who speak about the Constitution that they know nothing about the history of it. They are only speaking politically and practically from their own interest and when they do not know anything about it they ridicule. I have heard speeches on this floor and if I wanted to come right back directly to the individual person I could tell them that they were using words that are not to be found in the Constitution.

As far as making money is concerned, if the gentleman will read all or any of the literature, or if the gentleman has bought any of the literature of the Commission he would note that all checks are made payable to the Treasurer of the United States and the money goes into the Treasury of the United States. That is why, as the gentleman from Michigan stated, we must have a revolving fund. We are printing the literature and paying for it. You are asking us to print more literature, but the money goes into the Treasury for that literature which we sell, and unless we can get money to use again in order to print more literature and information about the Constitution we cannot proceed. We cannot touch the money that goes into the Treasury of the United States unless this is made a revolving fund.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DOWELL. According to section 9, page 2, of the bill, the amount collected and to be expended is unlimited. Is the amount that the gentleman's Commission may spend dependent on the amount that is taken in by the sale of all literature?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Or will it all be spent, or may it all be spent by the gentleman's Commission for further publications?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes. The idea is this: The gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD], for instance, bought a thousand books. He made his check for $100 payable to the Treasurer of the United States. That money goes into the Treasury of the United States. If we want to print more books or more literature and the Congress has not appropriated the money for that purpose, of course, we cannot print any more. The money that has been used in the past and the money we are getting, the $200,000 and the additional $150,000, will be used for reproductions of things pertaining to the history of the Constitution and the Constitution itself. I doubt if there are a thousand people in the United States who could have told me 1 year ago how many pages there were to the Constitution. I would suggest that the Members try to think for themselves.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. DOWELL. What I am getting at is that under this authorization there is no limitation to the expenditures to be made by this Commission.

Mr. BLOOM. Oh, yes; there is.

Mr. DOWELL. Except what may be disposed of.

Mr. BLOOM. Let me explain it this way: Up to now we have received $200,000. If we get the additional $150,000, we can expend up to $350,000. That is all we get.

If there is $200,000 in the Treasury, we can expend that $200,000, but not exceeding $350,000. We can expend the $200,000 for more literature.

Mr. DOWELL. In other words, if this bill is passed, when you reach the amount of $350,000, the money taken in from the sale of these articles will go into the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. BLOOM. Certainly. It conforms to all the other rules and regulations. It goes through the General Accounting Office.

Mr. DOWELL. Then, the revolving fund applies only to the extent of the $200,000 or the $350,000, as it may be?

Mr. BLOOM. Right. There is no question about it. The gentleman is absolutely right.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOBEY. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does the 10 cents which is paid for these books cover the cost?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes and no.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Well, yes or no?

Mr. BLOOM. The gentleman is asking me a question I cannot answer in that way. The publication of the 10-cent book itself costs us about 11 cents.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Then why do you not charge 11 cents for it?

Mr. BLOOM. The gentleman from New York thinks he is too good a businessman to charge 11 cents for something——

Mr. HOFFMAN. That costs 10?

Mr. BLOOM. You would charge either 10 or 15. What we are looking for is circulation. We are trying to get as many of these 10-cent books into the hands of the people of this country as possible, so they will understand what is the real history of the Constitution. I have received letters such as this, "Thank God, I can get a book that will tell me something about the Constitution without spending $3, $4, or $5 for it."

Mr. HOFFMAN. Sure, I think the book is a good book.

Mr. BLOOM. Are we going to be so small and picayunish as to sell a book for 11 cents because it costs us 11 cents, instead of selling it for 10 cents and letting it have a good circulation and letting the people have it and read it? I think the Government can well afford to spend the 1 cent, when it has been spending all kinds of money for other things without getting anything at all in return.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I have to agree with the gentleman; but is it true that your campaign of education has had something to do with the change of attitude and opinion of Mme. Perkins, as recently expressed?

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOBEY. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. MAAS. Will the gentleman tell us about what the expected revenues from the sale of these pamphlets will be?

Mr. BLOOM. I cannot answer that.

Mr. MAAS. You have had experience in the past year. What was realized during that time?

Mr. BLOOM. The Government is not commercial. We are not trying to make any money.

Mr. MAAS. I understand that.

Mr. BLOOM. We are trying to publish these different kinds of publications, the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States. The Constitution has never been published before in the history of this country. There never was published a correct text of the Constitution before the publication by this Commission. You have never had an analytical discussion of the Constitution outside of the publication of this Commission. We are not trying to make money but are trying to publish the book at a price at which everyone can afford to buy it.

Mr. TOBEY. I may say in conclusion I still have not had an observation from the gentleman with reference to how he is spending the $350,000, except the gentleman states it is for publishing reports and data about the Constitution. The net result of my question and the gentleman's answer is that he is spending a third of a million dollars to compile in printed form information about the Constitution and dispense it throughout the country.

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. TOBEY. The gentleman on May 4, 1936, speaking in the House in favor of House Joint Resolution 525, empowering the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission and authorizing an initial appropriation of $200,000 therefor, made this statement in the RECORD:

> I want to impress upon the Members that ultimately this is not going to cost the Government of the United States one cent.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from New Hampshire.

Mr. TOBEY. I continue to read:

> After all the expenditures have been made there will be a profit in the Treasury of the United States of from $1,500,000 to $2,000,000.

Does the gentleman still believe that?

Mr. BLOOM. It is absolutely true.

Mr. TOBEY. Is the gentleman willing to guarantee that?

Mr. BLOOM. Absolutely; and I will do more than that. I will pay all the expenses if you will give me half the profits.

Mr. TOBEY. I will go with the gentleman on the first part of the sentence. We will claim that promise later on.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN].

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to clear up a point in connection with the gentleman from New York. In one breath the gentleman says we are not going to be picayunish but are going to sell 11-cent books for 10 cents, and in the next breath he says we are going to make $1,500,000.

Mr. BLOOM. I did not say that.

Mr. TOBEY. Oh, yes; the gentleman confirmed it in his own words.

Mr. BLOOM. The gentleman is talking about $1,500,000?

Mr. TOBEY. Yes.

Mr. BLOOM. Where does $1,500,000 come in?

Mr. TOBEY. The gentleman's own words in the RECORD of May 4.

Mr. BLOOM. Let me see that. Oh, no. Evidently the gentleman has the bicentennial mixed up with the Constitution.

Mr. TOBEY. I read the gentleman his own words spoken on May 4 when this matter was under debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina has the floor.

Mr. BARDEN. I yield to the gentleman from New Hampshire.

Mr. TOBEY (reading):

> I want to impress upon the Members that ultimately this is not going to cost the Government of the United States one cent. After all the expenditures have been made there will be a profit in the Treasury of the United States of from $1,500,000 to $2,000,000.

SOL BLOOM's statement.

Mr. BLOOM. I did not say that.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from North Carolina 3 additional minutes.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I want to make this statement: As for me, I certainly would not like to go on record as approving the setting up of any commission or any committee out of this Congress that would make one penny of profit in any financial transaction with the people of the United States. If this is a worthy cause, and I think the Commission is doing a fine work, then the people of the country are entitled to the very best service we can give them at cost, or less; and, for one, I do not approve of a million and a half dollars being put in the Treasury made in this way.

Mr. BLOOM. That language is not mine, and I do not know how that got in there.

Mr. TOBEY. Does the gentleman repudiate his own words?

Mr. BLOOM. Just a moment. Let me tell the gentleman that it could not be one million and a half dollars, because there was only $350,000 spoken of. The million and a half dollars got in there with respect to the bicentennial because that was the amount that was made.

Mr. TOBEY. The question under debate was the Constitution.

Mr. BLOOM. I did not read that.

Mr. TOBEY. Did the gentleman correct that speech?

Mr. BLOOM. No; I do not correct speeches of that kind, as I am too busy to try to read everything of that sort; but I will state that if the gentleman wishes to give me all the money necessary in order to give this information free, the same as we did in connection with the bicentennial, I would be very happy.

When you figure costs there are many factors to be considered, and if you figure the cost of overhead, that book cost 11 cents to print, and it is necessary to add a year or more of time to get all the information, but de do not figure that in the cost of production. If we are given a sufficient amount of money, we can do as we did in connection with the bicentennial when we gave things of this sort away.

There are Members here who are looking for a thousand or more copies of this book. They cannot afford to pay for them, but they want to give them out. If you will give me the money, I will spend all the money you give me; but if you are going to hold me down to a few dollars and then expect me to give 130,000,000 people in this country a history of the Constitution, or anything else pertaining to the history of our country, it simply cannot be done. If you will appropriate the money, I will do the work.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from North Carolina 2 additional minutes.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, in reply to that statement of the gentleman from New York, I would not like for the gentleman to become confused about my attitude toward the work of the Commission. So far as I am concerned, I do not feel that $350,000 is a small amount of money to carry on an undertaking of this kind, and in view of the fact that the fund is a revolving fund under the bill, I think that is all the more reason this House or any committee set up by this House should certainly be extremely careful that the people get the most possible out of as small an appropriation as may be possible. This is the thought I have had in mind, and I am not criticizing the gentleman's movement at all. However, when these expressions appeared, I could not sit here and keep quiet when there was an admission that there was any such profiteering as this going on with respect to the American public. I think the fund ample and I cannot approve increasing it. May I state further that the people of the United States are entitled to the best possible service this Congress or any subcommittee or commission can render, with full assurance that there is not one penny of profit being made for the United States Treasury or any revolving fund that might be set up. I think this is a sound and honest policy to pursue.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DORSEY].

Mr. DORSEY. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that since this appropriation is made for the celebration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the formation of the Constitution of the United States, the amount of $350,000 is rather meager when we consider the fact that one State alone, the State of Pennsylvania, has appropriated $100,000 for this purpose.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON].

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] a question or two.

How much space does the gentleman's Commission occupy in the old House Office Building?

Mr. BLOOM. About 10 offices on the fifth floor.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. How many people are employed?

Mr. BLOOM. About 40 or 45.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Who selects those people?

Mr. BLOOM. I do. I am responsible for the work. Has the gentleman any objection to any of them?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 363) to authorize an additional appropriation to further the work of the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 363, with Mr. MARTIN of Colorado in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the joint resolution was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER] for 30 minutes.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman, the ranking minority member of the committee is temporarily absent, and he asked me to serve in his stead.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey for 30 minutes.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM].

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I really do not like to come on the floor of this House and try to explain what we are doing. At the outset I may say that this kind of work with me is a labor of love. Ever since I was a little boy I have delved into history. I like to read it, and I like to write it; and when I started on the history of the United States and discovered the tremendous amount of errors and misrepresentations that were in the history books of the country, I realized that something should be done by the Government itself to correct those mistakes. I have been working on these different celebrations, two, at least, since 1924, when we first passed legislation to celebrate the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of George Washington, and I think that the books gotten out by the Bicentennial Commission will live forever as the correct history of this country. There is nothing political about this. No Member on either side has had occasion to say that he was being discriminated against on account of politics or anything else, and from the first day up to the present time our only purpose and object has been to give service to the Members of this House and the Senate and to the people of this country. When I started on the Constitution to write the history of it, I just could not believe that there was so much misinformation on the Constitution of the United States. It took about a year to write that 10-cent book, to get it right, and before we did put it into final print we sent 100 press copies out to different people throughout the country and asked them to examine it and find out if there were any mistakes in it. No Member of Congress from either branch has written or showed us one mistake in that book. I am giving up all of my time, my spare time, Sundays and nights and holidays and everything else to do this right.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman, at this point I wish the gentleman would insert the names of the Commission in the RECORD.

Mr. BLOOM. They are already in the RECORD.

Mr. McLEAN. I am cooperating with the gentleman and I think the Members would like to be informed.

Mr. BLOOM. They are already in the RECORD. The President of the United States is the chairman of the Commission. Then the members are the Vice President, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and five members appointed by the President of the Senate and five members appointed by the Speaker of the House, together with five members appointed by the President of the United States. At the very first meeting of this Commission at the White House, at which the President presided, it was agreed by all members—Republicans and Democrats and everyone—that I was to have $350,000 to complete the celebration of the formation of the Constitution. Therefore when I was asked at the time this bill was before the House how much money I needed for that fiscal year and was requested to cut the amount from $350,000 to $200,000, because that was all that was necessary, naturally I acquiesced in that amount, expecting that I could come back and get the additional $150,000. Had I thought there was going to be so much talk about this, had I thought there was to be so much debate, I certainly would not have gone ahead with it; I would have stopped then and there.

Mr. Chairman, we are in contact with over 30,000,000 school children of the United States, we are in contact with over 275,000 schools in the country, we are in contact with over 250,000 churches in the country. There is not a patriotic organization, there is not any kind of an organization throughout the United States that we are not trying to get in contact with so as to give them the information on the history of the Constitution of the United States.

Why does it require this sum? On September 17 will occur the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the signing of the Constitution—not the adoption of the Constitution as is so oftentimes said, for the Constitution was never adopted, and the word "adopted" does not belong to the Constitution or any part of the history of the Constitution. The Constitution was signed on September 17, 1787, and that is the beginning of our celebration. Then we go on through the ratification by the different States, starting with Delaware on its anniversary, December 7, 1937. Then we celebrate the anniversary of all of the ratification dates up to June 21, when New Hampshire was the ninth State to ratify the Constitution, and on that date, according to article VII of the Constitution, which closes the original Constitution itself, the Constitution became a living thing; it became established. So we take in from September 17, of this year, and go through all of the ratification anniversary dates, showing you how the Congress was organized, how the Confederate Congress went out of existence, how the first President of the United States was elected, and up to the inauguration of Washington on April 30, 1789, when he was inaugurated in New York City as the first President of the United States of America.

The proclamation that was issued by the President of the United States on July 4, the day before yesterday, is as follows, and I hope I shall have sufficient time to read this:

By the President of the United States

A PROCLAMATION

Whereas the Constitution of the United States was signed on September 17, 1787, and had by June 21, 1788, been ratified by the necessary number of States; and

Whereas George Washington was inaugurated as the first President of the United States on April 30, 1789.

Now, therefore, I, Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States of America, hereby designate the period from September 17, 1937, to April 30, 1939, as one of commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the signing and the ratification of the Constitution and of the inauguration of the first President under that Constitution.

In commemorating this period, we shall affirm our debt to those who ordained and established the Constitution, "in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defence, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of Liberty, to ourselves and our posterity."

We shall recognize that the Constitution is an enduring instrument fit for the governing of a far-flung population of more than 130,000,000 engaged in diverse and varied pursuits, even as it was fit for the governing of a small agrarian nation of less than 4,000,000.

It is, therefore, appropriate that in the period herein set apart we shall think afresh of the founding of our Government under the Constitution, how it has served us in the past and how in the days to come its principles will guide the Nation ever forward.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States of America to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this 4th day of July, in the year of our Lord, 1937, and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and sixty-second.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

By the President:
[SEAL]

CORDELL HULL,
Secretary of State.

Mr. Chairman, that is all this Commission is trying to do. I do not feel so very happy over the fact that some people want me to do this and some people want me to do that. I am trying to do the best I can and so is every member of the Commission. This is a difficult task and you must remember I have 434 bosses on this side and I have 96 bosses on the other side, and I want to tell you it is a difficult task to try to please everyone. But I will say if any Member wishes to find out what the Commission is really doing, what the Commission is really accomplishing, I wish they would come over to Room No. 524 in the House Office Building and we will be glad to take you through. If you can tell me any city, town, or village in any district that we do not have a complete record of, that we are not in direct contact with and sending information to them free of charge, aside from the big things, I would like to know about it, but please come over and we will be glad to explain everything to you we possibly can.

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield.

Mr. LAMBETH. Will the gentleman tell the committee how many copies of the book The Story of the Constitution have been sold?

Mr. BLOOM. Does the gentleman mean sold?

Mr. LAMBETH. Well, ordered or printed, or what the output of this book is?

Mr. BLOOM. I cannot say exactly how many have been sold. For example, we printed 25,000 of those books. We are giving to every Boy Scout a copy of this book free. Do not think we are out to make money on this thing. We are giving away a lot of stuff. Anybody who is entitled to anything from this Commission is going to get it. I think up to this time with our appropriation we are able to print about 250,000 copies of these books.

Mr. LAMBETH. As I understand, the chief purpose of the additional appropriation involved in this resolution is to finance a very large circulation of this book, is it not? That is the purpose of the revolving fund?

Mr. BLOOM. That and other things.

Mr. LAMBETH. But that is the principal item, is it not?

Mr. BLOOM. That is one of them; yes.

Mr. LAMBETH. If I understood correctly, the gentleman previously stated that the present contract price for printing these books is about 11 cents per copy?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes, sir.

Mr. LAMBETH. And the gentleman contemplates that the circulation of this book will run into the millions of copies, does it not?

Mr. BLOOM. I hope and pray it does. I would like to see that book in the hands of every person in the United States.

Mr. LAMBETH. And the selling price is 10 cents each?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I will be pleased to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MAPES. Following the question by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. LAMBETH], and especially in view of the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] a year ago that the Government would make a million and a half dollars out of this——

Mr. BLOOM. Now, I do not know how that got into the RECORD. I never said that. It is a mistake.

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman will admit that it is in the RECORD under his name, will he not?

Mr. BLOOM. It is a mistake. Did the gentleman ever hear of a mistake in the RECORD before?

Mr. MAPES. I usually look over the RECORD and try to correct any glaring mistake of that kind——

Mr. BLOOM. I am too busy. I have too much to do to look up those things.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MAPES. Waiving the question of whether the gentleman actually made the statement or not, although he is credited in the RECORD as having made it, I should like to ask the gentleman in view of the further fact that the gentleman has just stated these books would be sold at 10 cents each, I am wondering what the gentleman's estimate is of the amount of this revolving fund which, if this resolution passes, the gentleman will have the use of during the next year?

Mr. BLOOM. We will use from the revolving fund whatever is necessary. After these books and other documents have been paid for, if we want to get additional books and documents, then we shall have to go to the revolving fund.

Mr. MAPES. And how much does the gentleman think the revolving fund will be?

Mr. BLOOM. I do not know.

Mr. MAPES. Has he any idea?

Mr. BLOOM. I have no idea about it whatever.

Mr. MAPES. Does the gentleman think that we ought to pass a resolution giving the gentleman's Commission an unlimited amount?

Mr. BLOOM. You could not go over $350,000 if you wanted to. The appropriation calls for $350,000. Now, if I spend that $350,000 and then want more books that will cost $50,000 or $100,000, I will go to the revolving fund and get the money.

Mr. MAPES. Or $350,000.

Mr. BLOOM. Or $350,000, yes; but I cannot give the gentleman any definite sum.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. As I understand the bill from reading it—and that is all I know about it—it sets up a revolving fund for this Commission as follows:

> Sums heretofore or hereafter received from the sale of publications and other material of such Commission are hereby authorized to be appropriated as a revolving fund for the further acquisition of such publications and material.

So there is no limit or control in the bill over the fund.

Mr. BLOOM. Oh, yes.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman could use the money in the revolving fund for any purpose for which the commission may legally function. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. BLOOM. No; that is not correct.

Mr. MICHENER. That is what it says:

> For the further acquisition of such publications and material.

Mr. BLOOM. Exactly. If I want some more books and have not got the money from this $350,000 directly appropriated, I can then go to the revolving fund and use whatever is necessary; but it must go through the regular channels of the Treasury and be approved. Is not that right?

Mr. MICHENER. As I take it, it seems that the gentleman will have whatever money comes in to use in the legitimate functions of his commission.

Mr. BLOOM. Yes; up to $350,000.

Mr. MICHENER. Well, whatever comes in, there is no limit, even though it were $1,500,000.

Mr. BLOOM. All right; if it will satisfy the gentleman, I shall be very glad to agree to an amendment limiting it to $350,000.

Mr. MICHENER. I am not quarrelling about the amount.

Mr. BLOOM. I am glad that is understood. I really do not see that there is any argument about that at all.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield.

Mr. KRAMER. The gentleman from New York just stated that it was his desire to give 25,000 copies to the Boy Scouts visiting Washington.

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. KRAMER. I have about 110 boys visiting here this morning from Los Angeles, Eagle Rock, and Huntington Park, in my district. I would like to know where I can get 110 copies of this pamphlet for these boys.

Mr. BLOOM. The gentleman cannot get them, I am sorry to say, even if you had the money.

Mr. KRAMER. How are we going to give them to these boys?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman, we are making such excellent progress and the gentleman from New York has been so generous in yielding time that I take great pleasure in yielding him 10 additional minutes of my time.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I shall be pleased to.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman stated awhile ago that the $350,000 provided in this bill would print substantially 250,000 books.

Mr. BLOOM. No, I did not; oh, no. I never said anything like it. I made no statement of how many books I could print at any time for any amount of money. I said that the books cost about 11 cents to print. That is the printing cost. That does not include the cost of preparation or anything else.

Mr. DOWELL. The preparation has already been made, has it not?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. The expense of preparation has already been paid.

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. All that is necessary now to put the book on the market or in the hands of those who desire it and want to pay for it is the actual printing of it.

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Then the revolving fund will not be used for materials, but will be used for something else, will it not?

Mr. BLOOM. Oh, no. The idea is this——

Mr. DOWELL. How will the gentleman use the money from materials when the preparation of the book has already been finished?

Mr. BLOOM. Let me give the gentleman an example: Suppose an order comes in from Woodward & Lothrop for 10,000 books. They send in a check for $1,000 made payable to the Treasury of the United States. That goes into the revolving fund. Suppose we sell 100,000 books, or a million books; all of that money goes into the revolving fund. If I want money to print more books and have none left in the direct appropriation, then I go to the revolving fund.

Mr. DOWELL. That is true, but the gentleman is taking it out of the revolving fund.

Mr. BLOOM. That is what I want to do.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman said he would be willing to have an amendment put on so that he would not be able to spend over $350,000.

Mr. BLOOM. That is perfectly all right.

Mr. DOWELL. If the amendment is agreed to, the gentleman will be limited to $350,000 worth of books. He will not be able to sell any books beyond that number.

Mr. BLOOM. I was trying to satisfy my friend from Michigan.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman ought to satisfy the situation instead of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BLOOM. The gentleman is right.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman should not destroy the opportunity to sell these books to anyone who wants to buy them.

Mr. BLOOM. If it was not for the fact I have my heart and soul in this work I would not stand for some of these questions that have been asked me for 2 minutes. I say the work of this Commission is one of the greatest pieces of work this Congress has done during the present session or any other session. We are teaching patriotism today that has not been taught before, and $350,000 is not one-tenth of what ought to be spent for this work. The gentleman from Iowa is absolutely right.

Mr. DOWELL. The question I am raising is that the gentleman will spend more than $350,000 because he will be able to spend what is taken in under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. BLOOM. But rather than have any argument, I will permit the gentleman from Michigan to put in any kind of amendment he wants to offer.

Mr. DOWELL. I do not know why the gentleman wants to cut off the possibilities.

Mr. BLOOM. Because the gentleman from Michigan started this thing.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. A while ago I asked the gentleman what these books cost and whether they cost more than 10 cents. The gentleman stated they cost about 11 cents. A moment ago he stated they cost 10 cents to print them. Now, what do they cost?

Mr. BLOOM. About 11 cents.

Mr. HOFFMAN. What does it cost to get the book out, including printing, binding, and all the rest of it?

Mr. BLOOM. About 11 cents.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is the total cost?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The whole business?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Referring to the index you have here, the gentleman had the same card index under the bicentennial?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes; that is the same thing right straight through.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. The gentleman has not closed up the bicentennial yet, although it is now 5 years afterward.

Mr. BLOOM. My part of it is closed.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Is it?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes. The only thing that is left over is something I had nothing to do with. That had to do with the definitive writings of George Washington. They were supposed to be covered by 25 volumes, but when we got up to the twenty-fifth it was found 8 or 10 more volumes would be required, and as far as I was concerned I stated I would not have anything more to do with it.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Who is responsible for that?

Mr. BLOOM. The original commission that was appointed in 1924, of which I was the director later, but I had nothing to do with the preparation of the writings of George Washington. My work is finished.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Who was director general of that part of it after the gentleman quit?

Mr. BLOOM. I am still functioning, but I would have to come to this Congress to complete that work and ask for $75,000 more. Can the gentleman imagine my getting it?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes. The gentleman has got everything he has asked for so far.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. When is the gentleman going to close up the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the Constitution?

Mr. BLOOM. The last day would be April 30, 1939. It will be about 6 months later. You see, we had 25 different volumes. We spent $250,000 or $300,000 on the 25 volumes. If we do not spend the additional sum of money to print the additional books, the 25 volumes that we have already printed would be worthless, but I am afraid to come here with a bill asking for more money.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. There is a feeling in the minds of some people that the gentleman does not close these things up. The bicentennial ought to be closed and this one hundred and fiftieth anniversary ought to be closed short of 3 years after it is all over.

Mr. BLOOM. Oh, no; 6 months after.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. The gentleman said April 1.

Mr. BLOOM. No. April 30, 1939, is the last day. That is the one hundred fiftieth anniversary.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. That is nearly 2 years afterward.

Mr. BLOOM. No. Nineteen hundred and thirty-nine.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. This is 1937, and the one hundred fiftieth anniversary is this year.

Mr. BLOOM. No.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. The Constitution was written in 1787, was it not?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. This is the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary.

Mr. BLOOM. May I explain this matter. This is the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the formation of the Constitution. Everything is included in that.

We start on September 17 of this year, which is the anniversary of the day the Constitution was signed. Then we go to the different States for the ratification. On each ratification day we have a different ceremony. June 21 of next year is the anniversary of the day New Hampshire, which was the ninth State to do so, ratified the Constitution and, in accordance with article VII, the Constitution became effective, so the anniversary will be next year, 1938. Then we go through the other proceedings of the formation up to the meeting of the First Congress, and this anniversary will be March 4, 1939. Then follows the anniversary of the inauguration of Washington, which is April 30. April 30, 1939, is the day this celebration closes.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. What do you call this anniversary?

Mr. BLOOM. The one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the formation of the Constitution.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. This year is the anniversary of the beginning of the formation?

Mr. BLOOM. No; this year is the anniversary of the signing.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. The Constitution will never end, because we are changing it, you know.

Mr. BLOOM. That I do not know. The gentleman is talking politics now, and I am not interested.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. TOBEY. I hold in my hand the book, The Story of the Constitution, published by the Commission at Government expense. I notice it appears that SOL BLOOM is the author, and on the binding appears "The Story of the Constitution—BLOOM."

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. TOBEY. This is the gentleman's work?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. TOBEY. Not the work of the Commission?

Mr. BLOOM. I wish the gentleman would please ask a question I can answer.

Mr. TOBEY. I shall ask it in a different form now.

Mr. BLOOM. Wait, I am going to try to answer the gentleman. I am really surprised the gentleman, who knows so much, would ask a question of this kind.

Mr. TOBEY. I am not through yet. The gentleman has not heard the worst yet. The worst is yet to come.

Mr. BLOOM. Is that so?

Mr. TOBEY. Yes.

Mr. BLOOM. I am ready for the gentleman. The gentleman will not be the first one for whom I have been ready on this floor.

I may say to the gentleman it is necessary at all times to have a name of some kind on a book. Many books are published bearing the title, "The Story of the Constitution." If the gentleman were to write to any publisher for a book entitled "The Story of the Constitution", the publisher would not know which one the gentleman wanted. The mere fact I put "SOL BLOOM" on there does not mean I was looking for the glory, although I have put the work into the book. I was not looking for the glory. I put a name on there so people would know what to ask for.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM].

Mr. BLOOM. The gentleman will notice it does not say "SOL BLOOM"; it says "Bloom", so any other Bloom in the country could get the credit for it, not I.

Mr. TOBEY. I would be the last man to take the Bloom off that book, but, may I ask, is it customary to copyright Government publications?

Mr. BLOOM. I believe this is the question the gentleman reserved when he said the worst was yet to come?

Mr. TOBEY. Possibly.

Mr. BLOOM. I may say that is not the worst.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. Just a minute. This is a lovely question, and I want to be sure the gentleman gets it right. The reason the book was copyrighted by SOL BLOOM is that the Government is not permitted to copyright anything. If the gentleman will kindly read further, he will find that the introduction states:

Upon application, permission will be granted for the reprint or use of any portion of this book, provided that no change be made and that full credit be given to the Commission.

Not to SOL BLOOM, but to the Commission. Let me tell the gentleman why. I did not want any cheap life-insurance companies or toilet-soap companies to take this book and use it for advertising purposes. This was done to protect the Government of the United States. I know enough about copyrights and publications to know how to do it.

Now, what is the gentleman's next question?

Mr. TOBEY. How much of the $200,000 has been so far expended?

Mr. BLOOM. I do not know.

Mr. TOBEY. What would the gentleman think? The gentleman has some idea, has he not?

Mr. BLOOM. I am not thinking today. If the gentleman wants to find out, if he will come over——

Mr. TOBEY. Is this not a fair question to ask the chairman of the Commission?

Mr. BLOOM. No; it is not a fair question, because I do not carry all the figures in my head. I may say to the gentleman I have stayed on this floor today and answered question after question, trying to give the right kind of an answer.

Mr. TOBEY. I think that is true——

Mr. BLOOM. Excuse me; I am speaking now. I have tried to give the truth. The gentleman expects me to answer him with reference to how much of the $200,000 has been expended, and to give the amount, and then expects to spring another $1,500,000 proposition on me, but I am not fool enough to do that.

Mr. TOBEY. Will the gentleman please listen just a minute?

Mr. BLOOM. I refuse to yield further, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. FORD of California. In order to clear the record as to the name "SOL BLOOM", you will notice it does not say "By SOL BLOOM", but merely uses his name. The name is put there for the purpose of identification and for the protection of the copyright.

Mr. BLOOM. Anyone who knows anything about publication or has ever read a book knows that is so.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I understand this book was printed to teach patriotism?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The wider the circulation the better?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Why have it copyrighted? Why not let anyone distribute it who wants to?

Mr. BLOOM. For this reason——

Mr. HOFFMAN. I know, you spoke about the advertisement.

Mr. BLOOM. I do not want to have anyone take the material in this book and use it without giving full credit to the Commission, and reprinting it exactly the way it is in this book. I do not want the gentleman or anyone else to take something out of the book and change it around, and then have people think we did it.

You can use anything or everything in that book, provided you print it the way it is and the reason we insist upon that is because we know if it is printed that way it will be absolutely right.

Mr. HOFFMAN. But you have it copyrighted and if I want to take that book and reprint it, I cannot do it, can I?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. In spite of the fact it is copyrighted?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes; read the statement there again.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Then what is the use of having it copyrighted?

Mr. BLOOM. I helped write the copyright law a few years ago and I know something about it.

The language I refer to is:

Upon application, permission will be granted for the reprint or use of any portion of this book, provided that no change be made and that full credit be given to the Commission.

The limitation is that no change be made and that full credit be given to the Commission, and if that is complied with you can reprint the entire book.

Mr. HOFFMAN. But if I understood the gentleman a moment ago, he stated that you cannot print parts of the book.

Mr. BLOOM. You can print any part of it. You can do anything you want with it, provided you do not make a change in it, and, as I have said, I do not want to have it used for advertising purposes or anything of that kind.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Then the sole purpose of the copyright is to give credit to the Commission?

Mr. BLOOM. It is for the protection of the Commission.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. Is such permission given automatically, or must they apply to the Commission?

Mr. BLOOM. They must get permission in writing.

Mr. BOILEAU. In each instance?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. When the Commission goes out of existence, then what?

Mr. BLOOM. Then it is turned back to the Government.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Then to whom do we make application?

Mr. BLOOM. I do not know. I shall not be there any more.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, I am in full accord with the pending resolution because I believe it is perfectly proper for the Government of the United States to undertake this work. I believe it is a perfectly proper function of government to encourage the distribution of an unbiased record of its fundamental law.

This is particularly desirable at this time when the Constitution is being so widely discussed by the people of the country, many of whom are asserting that the President's plan for the revitalizing of the Supreme Court is unconstitutional. Most of these assertions come from lawyers, many of whom are said to be great constitutional lawyers. As a matter of fact, a better description of this type of lawyer would be a great corporation lawyer.

I also believe it is better that the Government should disseminate unbiased information about the Constitution than to have private interests undertake to do so, because I happen to know that there is an institution in this country that for a number of years has given an annual prize for the best essay or the best speech on the Constitution. The contest is confined to colleges and high schools, and I happen to know that when these young people brought in their manuscripts unless their manuscripts conformed to a certain interpretation of the Constitution, regardless of how brilliantly they may have dealt with the subject, they were not acceptable. If this is not biased information on the Constitution, then I do not know what would be considered biased information.

For this reason I think it is meet at this time, on the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the formation of the Government, that the Congress should authorize a wide dissemination of an unbiased story of the formation of the Constitution. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

I simply wish to call the attention of this body to the fact that we have gone into this matter, and we believe we ought not to stop halfway. We have learned more about the Constitution of the United States during the present few months, and I hope we shall learn more during the coming months, than we have ever known before in our lives. This applies to all of us—lawyers, laymen, and everyone else—and we ought to know something about it. The wider distribution we can have of the story of the Constitution and of the Constitution itself, the better it will be for the people of this country, because we have all got to be educated in the matter of the Constitution.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the joint resolution for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 8 of the public resolution entitled "Joint resolution to enable the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission to carry out and give effect to certain approved plans, and for other purposes", approved June 1, 1936 (49 Stat. 1392), is hereby amended by striking out the sum "$200,000" and inserting in lieu thereof the sum "$350,000."

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KRAMER: Page 1, line 8, strike out "$350,000" and insert "$475,000."

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, my purpose in increasing this amount is to enable the Commission to print a sufficient number of copies, as will be set out in a subsequent amendment I am going to offer, so that Members of the House and Senate may distribute this worthy and patriotic publication.

I have had repeated calls for copies from teachers who have given this publication a great deal of study and attach a great deal of importance to it. One of a few write me as follows:

After reading this booklet, one of our Los Angeles high-school teachers made the following comments:

"It's the finest thing we have. A high-school student will read a book like this from cover to cover. The big volumes are not even lifted from the shelf. I value especially the indexed analysis. I only wish we had enough for an entire class."

I am surprised that any Member of Congress would have cause to make objection to this very small appropriation that is being asked to put this patriotic publication of our Constitution in the hands of millions of people who perhaps will never have an opportunity to come to Washington to learn of the Constitution and its history in any other way than just by reading this booklet and its abbreviations.

I believe the Members of the House should give a great deal of attention to the explanation which the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] is making with respect to the work of this Commission and the publication of this booklet on the Constitution.

It is a very appropriate time to send these booklets to the child in school, and many adults would be glad to have them.

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I had hoped that the gentleman in charge of the bill, or at least the author of the resolution, would oppose the amendment to increase the appropriation. Since they have not seen fit to do so, I feel that it is my responsibility. I am opposing it for the reason that a resolution of similar purport was introduced by the gentleman from California [Mr. KRAMER] and referred to the Committee on Printing, of which I happen to be the chairman. The committee, after hearing the gentleman from California, and also the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM], and other interested persons, unanimously decided not to report the resolution favorably to the House.

The purpose of this amendment, as I understand it, is to provide sufficient funds to purchase 1,250,000 copies of this book to be given to Members of Congress for free distribution. The policy of your Committee on Printing, in view of the mounting Government expenditures, has been not only to resist all efforts to expand and extend but to curtail the practice of free distribution of public documents. I do not know whether the Members realize how rapidly the volume and cost of public printing has risen during the past 10 years. If I had had a little warning that this matter was coming up today, I would have had the figures here to present to the House, but I can say that the total cost of public printing has now passed well beyond the $20,000,000 mark, and your committee has been doing all it could to stop further excursions of this kind and also to curtail extravagance in this line not only in the congressional branch of the Government, but in the various executive departments as well.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBETH. Yes.

Mr. KRAMER. Did the gentleman from North Carolina realize that just a few weeks ago an appropriation was given to North Carolina of $2,500,000,000, an appropriation far beyond the amount asked here.

Mr. LAMBETH. The gentleman refers to the parkway to cost about $2,500,000. The cost was $2,500,000 instead of $2,500,000,000, as the gentleman said.

Mr. KRAMER. At least it was far more than this insignificant amount.

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Chairman, I refuse to yield further. That has no more reference to this than a matter in Siam or China. The gentleman seeks to draw a red herring across the trail of his amendment.

Mr. KRAMER. But the gentleman is talking about money being spent.

Mr. LAMBETH. I am discussing the gentleman's amendment, and the cost of public printing, and particularly am I discussing the principle involved in this, which is more important than the amount of money. We had at the close of the recent fiscal year a deficit of $2,811,318,310.60, the excess of ordinary expenditures over ordinary receipts, the seventh successive annual deficit. I ask the House, How long can we trifle with this serious problem? In spite of that the House of Representatives is asked today to authorize the borrowing of more money at the expense of the taxpayers to give to Members of Congress free books to send out to their constituents. I have no objection to this book or to the distribution of it at the present nominal cost. Anyone in this country who is not interested sufficiently in the Constitution to pay 10 cents for a copy of this book, I do not believe would read the book if you gave it to him free. My experience is that when you give people things at no cost and no effort on their part, they do not appreciate it. I am here simply to say to the House that our committee had a similar proposal under consideration and rejected it, not because of the individual merits of the publication, but because it is in line with the policy which this committee has been following to try to reduce the cost of public printing and the free distribution of Government documents.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, in order to say just a word or two with regard to this proposition. I feel I have, on other grounds, a right to say it other than being a member of this body or of this committee. Let me indicate the nature of my interest in the matter.

When this book first appeared it attracted my attention. Not supposing for a moment that there would be any for free distribution, I purchased more than 1,000 copies. Five hundred copies I sent at once to school teachers in the State of Arizona, and I supplied several hundred copies to ministers of the gospel, to commanders of the American Legion posts and to the presidents of women's clubs and other organizations.

I did that partly because of the fact that I felt it was an educational feature. For the past 12 years I have been furnishing textbooks to the schools of Arizona and I am not sure but that some of the Boy Scouts from Arizona, of whom there are more than a hundred in town, and several in the gallery just now, have studied books that I have prepared for boys and girls in the grades. I have furnished a book like this on the Constitution of the State of Arizona which cost the State of Arizona 80 cents per copy. It is not very much larger than this and not nearly so well done as this scholarly piece of work. I am in favor of this amendment which is made that the Members of Congress be furnished a certain number of copies for free distribution. Although I, at my own expense, have supplied a good many, I could supply more.

It is not more than 3 or 4 days since I received a letter from a former president of the Federated Women's Clubs of Arizona asking for a copy of this book.

I sent her one with a better binding than this, and I said to her, "I think I have about a dozen copies left on my shelves. Let me know anybody else who needs these, and they will be sent at once."

I know in my State these are highly desired. I have had lawyers write me for them. I have furnished a great many to school teachers, and school people are still writing for them.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. In just a moment.

Mr. Chairman, in ancient Rome the law was written on 12 tablets of bronze, put up in the Forum. The great Roman orator and senator, Cicero, tells us that learning these was the basis of his education. Well, it may be the basis of the education of any great statesman to read, memorize, and know the law of Rome. Learning thoroughly a few great laws is truly the groundwork of a legal education.

I am told that Daniel Webster at one time, as a small boy, persuaded his father to buy him a piece of cloth displayed in a store window, which cloth was a sort of a cross between a table cover and a handkerchief, on which something was printed in small type. Young Dan got that for a present and took it home. It had on it a copy of the Constitution of the United States. I am informed that Daniel Webster, as a small boy, memorized that great document.

I am not saying that that fact made him the greatest constitutional lawyer in American history, but I do know that when Daniel Webster handled a case in the highest Court of this Nation, when he appeared before John Marshall, he did not have to fumble around to get a book to refer to when he wanted to make a quotation from the Constitution. He had it.

I think I am not stretching the point when I say if you put these in the hands of the boys and girls of this country and let them know the Constitution of the United States, it will probably have some such effect on a few of them that memorizing the laws of Rome had upon Cicero and memorizing the Constitution of the Unitedl States itself had upon Daniel Webster.

I am in favor of this proposal, and I think it would be money well spent.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, when I was questioning the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] I was shut off so that I did not have an opportunity to elucidate the matter as much as I wanted to. I regret that the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] took umbrage at the questions passed to him by different Members of the House, because I believe in any matter where the taxpayers' money is being spent we ought to let in all the light possible and answer any questions pertinent to the subject.

I asked the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] one question, referring to the fact that he had originally $200,000 of the taxpayers' money. I asked him how much he had spent of the $200,000. He said he could not tell. It seemed to me germane that a man who has been spending $200,000 should know how much of that sum was spent up to date, before he asked for $150,000 more.

I want to read this into the RECORD. I have here his book, "The Story of the Constitution; BLOOM, author." On the fly-page "The Story of the Constitution, by SOL BLOOM." Below that it says "United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission, House Office Building, Washington, D. C."; but in small print, "Copyrighted 1937, by SOL BLOOM." Therefore, the copyright runs not to the commission but to SOL BLOOM, the gentleman from New York. I ask the gentleman from New York and the House as well, suppose the gentleman who now owns this copyright should pass on, by act of God, tonight, or tomorrow, or next year, that copyright becomes an asset of his estate. I believe this bill should be amended so that when this commission ceases its activities the copyright and all rights thereunder would be vested in the Commission and not the estate of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM]. I think that matter is germane today. I submit my case on that, and I asked the gentleman if he would not be willing to have the bill amended, whereby his rights under the copyright would revert to the United States Commission.

In his answer to the question he did raise this point: He said it was copyrighted so that those who might want to use it, insurance companies, and so forth, would have to come back to the Commission and get their consent to use it. Under the very verbiage of this copyright they would not have to come to the Commission, but they would have to come to one SOL BLOOM and not to the Commission itself. I would like to see this matter more impersonal; less of BLOOM and more of the Commission.

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOBEY. I yield.

Mr. LAMBETH. While the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. KRAMER] calls for an increase in this appropriation of $125,000, the amount of cost to the Government in the form of the franking involved will run into a considerable sum. I do not know what that amount will be, but it will be a considerable sum in addition to the $125,000.

Mr. TOBEY. Of course.

Mr. LAMBETH. In that connection, I have just located the figures on the cost of franking for the past 4 years.

May I state that the cost of free mailing by the departments of the Government has increased from $10,701,912 in 1932 to $33,713,305 in 1936. It is fair to state also that there has been no increase in the cost of the franking privilege by Members of Congress during this same period of time.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOBEY. I yield.

Mr. KRAMER. I would like to answer the statement of the gentleman from North Carolina. He realizes, of course, that numerous new agencies of government have been created in the last 6 years which accounts for the increase in their use of the franking privilege. During that same time, however, the number of Members of Congress has remained stationary and their use of the franking privilege has not increased materially.

Mr. LAMBETH. There has, of course, been an increase in the activities of the Government, but I think the amount of propaganda and free literature that has been mailed out under the franking privilege is beyond justification. It has increased threefold.

Mr. KRAMER. I will admit that it has been roundly abused.

Mr. LAMBETH. I stated that there had been no increase in the cost of the franking privilege by Members of Congress.

Mr. KRAMER. I do not think it has ever been abused by any Member of Congress, and I do not think there has been or will be any abuse of it in this instance to send out these pamphlets.

Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOBEY. I yield.

Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania. I may add, for the information of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. LAMBETH] that there is a difference between the franking privilege used by Members of Congress and the penalty envelope or the penalty privilege that is used by the agencies of the Government. This is a point that should be brought out at this particular time.

Mr. TOBEY. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New Hampshire asked a question, but I was not given the opportunity of answering it.

Mr. TOBEY. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I owe the gentleman an apology.

Mr. BLOOM. It is perfectly all right. Mr. Chairman, the thing that strikes me at this time is the great concern of the gentlemen opposed to this resolution and their interest in the ownership of the copyright of this book. Certainly there are no royalties being paid, there is no money being made. No one could ever think of printing this book and selling it for 10 cents unless they wanted to lose a lot of money. Now, as far as I am concerned in the pride of the ownership of a copyright, if it is the wish of this Committee or of the House that I should throw this entire copyright into the public domain I should be very pleased to do it.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield.

Mr. McLEAN. I would like to interrogate the gentleman on another point. I am entirely satisfied as to the matter of the copyright, and I am sure everybody else is.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I must refuse to yield until I finish with the matter of the copyright. The only reason that we have this copyright is for protection. It is for the protection of the Commission. Protecting the Commission is protecting the Government. Now, as far as I am concerned personally with reference to the copyright, I certainly would object for the reason that it might be considered as a slap at me, and I am not going to allow it for one minute. The copyright was taken out by me as a protection. As Director General of the Commission, I am responsible, and up to now I doubt if there is any person in the last 13 years that I have been operating these commissions who could, in good faith, in bad faith, or any faith, say that I have ever done anything but what is absolutely right.

Now, I shall be pleased to yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman, I was going to ask the gentleman from New York if he would not urge the gentleman from California to withdraw his amendment at this time. This matter has been passed upon by the Committee on the Library; it has been passed upon by the Committee on Rules; it comes as the result of a conference with the President of the United States; and the Commission's program is complete. Does not the gentleman think it would provide for sufficient distribution?

Mr. BLOOM. I think the amendment is a good amendment, but I talked with the gentleman from California before he introduced it and told him that personally I would prefer not to have it come up at this time. I think we have had too much talk. I do not think it looks well to the country that we should sit here for nearly 2 hours debating whether we are going to spend $150,000 more celebrating the formulation of the Constitution of the United States. Either let us celebrate it or not celebrate it. There is no use in fighting over this thing. Either we are going to get the money to carry on or we cannot carry on in the distribution of these things that we feel is necessary to distribute to teach the children and the adults of this country the real history of the Constitution. In case anyone thinks he does not need it, let him come to me and I will ask him 10 questions.

There will not be a thousand people in the United States who can answer those 10 questions, and I include judges, lawyers, or anybody else. I know the history of the Constitution because I have studied it. May I say it is a shame and an outrage that we should dicker here for a few dollars. You would imagine it is the most terrible thing in the world to expend $150,000 to teach the people of this country that which they are ridiculing every day. The only way you can destroy the Constitution of the United States is by ridicule, not by education, and I am for education.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLEAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. McLEAN. It seems that the patriotic assembly here this afternoon is almost in accord on the resolution as now pending. To increase this appropriation without consideration by a committee or without ample time to think it over puts an entirely different phase on the situation. If the gentleman from California will withdraw his amendment, in view of the fact he has a bill pending before the Committee on Printing and there is ample opportunity to take up that important phase of this situation on its own merits, I think we can complete the argument in a very short time.

Mr. BLOOM. The gentleman states we are in accord. I would like to have the gentleman understand it is not very pleasant for the gentleman from New York to stand here and be criticized or questioned about his name being put on a book that he spent years to bring out and about a copyright on the book that he secured for the protection of his country. It is not pleasant, and I can assure the gentleman I do not like it.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman, may I say I have always had the greatest respect and esteem, and I have grown to love the gentleman from New York. I think if his mental processes will return to a few moments ago, he will appreciate I was trying to relieve the situation and indicate to his mind I thought there was no need for further discussion of the matter that was being brought before us.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words.

Mr. Chairman, this is one of the best books in my opinion that has ever been published on this subject. Every Member of this House, as well as the people of the Nation, owe our friend and colleague the gentleman from New York, SOL BLOOM, a debt of gratitude for the time and effort put forth in the preparation of this great book. He is not going to profit one penny by this book. He has already rendered a great public service by preparing and causing it to be distributed. [Applause.]

I have purchased hundreds of copies of this book to send to different people in the congressional district I have the honor to represent. The lawyers like this book because they know it possibly is the first exact copy of the Constitution they have ever seen, and I repeat "the first exact copy." This book should be in the hands of not only all the lawyers and judges but of people who serve on juries. It should be in every school, every library, and placed in the hands of the Boy Scouts and with all people who want to know more about our country.

We are facing a fight in this world. Many people realize that. Will it be fascism, communism, or democracy? We want our people to remain as they are, in favor of a democracy. The best way to keep them sold on our form of government is to let them know what our form of government is, and there is no better way of doing that than to place in their hands a copy of this book. [Applause.]

We talk about the $125,000 cost and compare it with the postal deficit. What is $125,000 in comparison to the amount lost on the mails? I appreciate the gentleman from North Carolina is always watching these bills, and I commend him for his attitude. I follow him most of the time, but I cannot follow him this time. We lose $100,000,000 a year on the mails. Who gets it? Who is benefited? I can name dozens of newspapers that receive or their subscribers or readers receive a benefit of more than $125,000 a year. I can name magazines that receive a bonus or a subsidy, whatever you want to call it, equal to almost a million dollars a year. The mail order houses of this country are benefited more than any other class or group. They receive a benefit of approximately $17,000,000 a year.

How much do the Members of Congress cost the Government on the franking privilege? Less than $1,000,000 a year. To be exact, $750,000. Who benefits by that? The people the Members of Congress represent benefit by it if the privilege is properly used and if it is abused it should be stopped. You cannot help your people more, you cannot vote for a bill that will be more helpful to the people of this Nation and your congressional district especially, than to vote for this Kramer amendment providing for 2,500 copies for each Member of the House to distribute. I sent out over a thousand of them. I purchased them myself. I could send out two or three thousand more, and whether we pass this amendment or not, I expect to do that, because this book is not worth only $1, it is worth $5 in the hands of any good American citizen.

I want to commend my good, unselfish, and generous friend, the gentleman from New York, SOL BLOOM, for the efforts put forth and the time he has spent in the compilation and preparation of this book which I think is the greatest record ever published of the formation and establishment of this great country of ours. [Applause.]

I insert the following under leave to revise and extend my remarks:

CONTENTS OF BOOK

The book, The Story of the Constitution, was prepared before the present Supreme Court controversy arose. I considered the book so valuable that I purchased additional copies from the Treasurer of the United States, and furnished a copy to a number of friends in my district who I believed would appreciate it. I am purchasing more from time to time as I get requests for them, since it is my belief that it is one of the most valuable books this Government has ever caused to be published. Many of the replies I have received from those to whom this book was sent stated that they considered it worth $5 a copy. Many said it was the best book of its kind that has ever been published. In the preparation of this book, the Constitution and other important documents were read several hundred times to make sure that the book contains an exact copy. It is claimed that it is the only exact copy of the Constitution that has ever been reproduced. The book's contents include the following:

Diagram of origin of United States Government.

The story of the Constitution, including origin, formation, and operation; also development under it, with maps.

Portraits and sketches of the signers of the Constitution and Chief Justices of the Supreme Court.

Literal text of the constitutional amendments, Declaration of Independence, and Washington's Farewell Address.

Alphabetical analysis of the Constitution.

Questions and answers pertaining to the Constitution.

History of the Great Seal.

On yesterday, July 4, 1937, we celebrated the one hundred and sixty-first anniversary of the Declaration of Independence of this great country of ours—the greatest country in all the world. It will be helpful to our people to know more about their Government. Thomas Jefferson once said that if the people get the truth, the country will be safe. Today in the world we hear much about different forms of government.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S TRIP TO SOUTH AMERICA

There seems to be a great contest on to determine whether or not in the principal countries of the world we will have fascism, communism, or a democracy. I believe that the American people desire a democracy. President Roosevelt accomplished much on his South American tour during the past year, but if he did not accomplish anything more than to let the other countries of the world know that democracy is going to accept their challenge if an effort is made to force communism or fascism upon us, his trip was worth while, and should meet with the plaudits of the American people. This book The Story of the Constitution will do more toward enlightening, educating, and instructing the citizens of this country on what they should know about our Government than any book that is published. It is written in understandable language, and contains just the information that every American citizen should be encouraged to know. Every time I get an opportunity to get the truth to the people about this great Democratic Government of ours I expect to lend a hand in that direction. The cost is insignificant compared to the great good that will be accomplished.

We can save enough on documents that are printed and not used by the Government Printing Office or that are not useful in 1 year's time to pay the $125,000 necessary to send more than a million of these books into more than a million schools, libraries, and communities in this Nation.

COST OF TRANSPORTING THROUGH MAILS

The gentleman from North Carolina, my good friend Mr. LAMBETH, has mentioned about the Post Office deficit, and about how much it would cost for Members to send these books through the mails. These books are not given to the Members of Congress; they are given to the people. The Member of Congress is used as a vehicle to convey them to the people and libraries where they will be appreciated the most and used to the greatest advantage. It will cost practically nothing to deliver these books. The Post Office Department contracts with the railroad companies to use so much space, these books will be transported when the entire space is not used, and in that way it will not cost the Government a penny to transport them over the railroads. There will be no extra cost for delivery and the little trouble caused to the carriers, postmasters, clerks, and others will be rendered generously and unselfishly by these faithful employees because of their knowledge that they are making a contribution to a very worthy cause.

POSTAL DEFICIT

I do not know what the figures disclose at this time, as I have not examined them, but the figures for 1932 in the Annual Report of the Post Office Department, disclosed that the Government is losing more than $36,000,000 a year on certain newspapers and magazines; over $11,000,000 on other kinds of newspapers, and a loss of about $8,580,000 because weekly newspapers are circulated free in the county in which they are published; about $16,900,000 was lost on parcel post. These losses, although they are paid by the Government, the people get the benefit of them in many ways. For instance, by reason of the low cost of transportation through the mail, all newspapers and magazines, newspapers especially, are very cheap. That is one reason that a weekly paper can be published for such a low price because of this free in-county service given by the Government. The people get the benefit of it. Local delivery on fourth-class made a profit during the year 1932, but zones 1 and 2 used principally by mail-order houses, caused a loss of more than $25,000,000 during that year. If we want to save some money on the mails, and we should save every penny we can, would it not be better to save a little on ocean-mail or parcel-post rates or in some other way? Members of Congress are charged with only about $750,000 a year on the postal deficit. At the same time, Members of Congress cause lots of letters to be written upon which postage is paid, and these letters to Members of Congress are written not necessarily to help the Members of Congress but to help the people they have the honor to represent. I know Members of Congress who spend from $200 to $500 a month during a session for extra clerk hire to serve their constituents, and oftentimes during a session of Congress pay $200 to $300 a month to the Government Printing Office and stationery room for extra printing, stationery, documents, and supplies. Members of Congress pass benefits such as distribution of these books on to their constituents in the same way that a county newspaper passes the benefit of the free in-county service through the mails on to its subscribers.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. KRAMER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LAMBETH and Mr. MCLEAN) there were—ayes 60, noes 18.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. Such public resolution is hereby further amended by adding a new section thereto, as follows:

"SEC. 9. Sums heretofore or hereafter received from the sale of publications and other material of such Commission are hereby authorized to be appropriated as a revolving fund for the further acquisition of such publications and material."

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KRAMER: Page 2, line 4, insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 10. That the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission is authorized and directed to procure sufficient copies of the book entitled 'The Story of the Constitution', published by the Commission, to provide a distribution quota of 2,500 copies for each Senator, Representative, and Deleegate from a Territory. Enclosures for mailing such booklets shall also be provided by the Commission. The quantities of such booklets and enclosures required for Senators shall be delivered to the folding room of the Senate and placed subject to the order of the respective Senators and the quantities required for Representatives and Delegates shall be delivered to the folding room of the House of Representatives and placed subject to the order of the respective Representatives and Delegates."

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, this further amendment merely provides the number of copies which would be distributed to the Members of the House and of the Senate, and the manner of their distribution, through the folding room in the same manner as other publications of this kind are distributed.

Mr. McLEAN. What is the additional amount of money that will be spent?

Mr. KRAMER. One hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars. I base this estimate on the figures which have been submitted by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] on various occasions, to the effect that this is what it would cost to distribute that number of books and distribute them equally among the Members of the House and the Senate. It may be a few dollars, perhaps $10, more or less, I do not know, but this is the approximate amount.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, we have had demonstrated within the last few minutes one of the things with which the country is confronted. We have got so in the habit of spending that it matters not what comes up, the Congress apparently does not have the courage to resist. It does not make any difference how laudable the purpose, it is just the question that if you are going to give some more books to Members of Congress to send out free, then are you ready to borrow the money with which to buy them? I was wonderfully surprised to see some of the leaders of the administration stand up here—when they know there is no money in the Treasury, when they know this Government is borrowing money today to feed the hungry—and yet they vote to borrow $125,000 more to send out free books to our constituents, which might possibly help us from a patronage standpoint. If these books were to be sent out by any other agency there would not be a chance of this amendment passing.

I was here when we had the free garden seeds to distribute. I know what a fight we had to get rid of the distribution of Government seeds. Our splendid Speaker was here then. We know what seeds meant. There were seed statesmen. There were statesmen who would buy extra seeds because they thought seeds made votes. There were statesmen who attributed their election to the fact they sent out so many packages of free garden seeds. The Congress appropriated $300,000 a year for this purpose down through the years, until the people began to understand, and then they saw to it that we stopped. It would appear from this amendment that instead of "seed statesmen" that we have some "document statesmen."

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. LAMBETH. The effect of these two amendments is to give each Member of Congress $275 worth of books free.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes. There it is. We are voting now to give each Member of the House $275 of the taxpayers' money in order to send free books into his district. Pressure groups are preventing us from economizing. However, today it is not a pressure group; it is our own innate desire to get something for nothing, something which we can send out to our districts and make our people believe we are doing something for them and giving them something. If I voted today—notwithstanding the condition of the country—to send the people of my district $275 worth of free publications, they would resent it, and they would have a right to resent it. I feel like saying, "Shame on you." I would not say, "A plague o' both your houses", or anything like that, but simply, "Shame on you", who have no consideration for people's pocketbooks.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. KRAMER. Will the gentleman refuse his share of the books in the event this amendment is carried, or will the gentleman send the books out to his district?

Mr. MICHENER. I will send them out.

Mr. KRAMER. The gentleman would send them out. Of course, he would.

Mr. MICHENER. What a childish question.

Mr. KRAMER. We are talking about $275 worth of books to send out.

Mr. MICHENER. I will not yield further.

If I cannot prevent it, and if this money is appropriated and I have $275 worth of the taxpayers' money invested in books which are presumed to belong to my district, and I cannot stop your spending the money to buy the books, then someone has the asininity to ask me whether I am going to leave them here after they have been purchased, or whether I am going to send them out to the folks back home. I am going to send them out, and I should say to those people: "This is an example of the way the majority of the Congress functions today. I am sending you $275 worth of books, for which you must pay. We have borrowed the money to pay for the books, and are paying interest on this money." What will your constituents say about such a present?

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. HOUSTON. May I ask the gentleman if he is going to send his speech out before the books?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; I shall see to it that my constituents know that I did not vote for this measure. It seems to me preposterous. In 1936 the Congress appropriated $200,000 in order that this Commission might celebrate the signing of the Federal Constitution. The resolution brought before us today provides an additional $150,000, or a total of $350,000 authorized for this celebration since May 4, 1936. Now, the gentleman from California [Mr. KRAMER] offers an amendment, the effect of which is to add $125,000 more in order that each Member of Congress may send out $275 worth of free books to the taxpayers, who must pay for them. Talk about pork and patronage! It seems to me this is the limit. So far as the taxpayer is concerned, this is heaping insult upon injury. Undoubtedly Mr. BLOOM's book on the Constitution is a good book, but this is neither the time nor the place to be spending the people's money in this way. It might be well for the Congress to set a good example with reference to adhering to the Constitution. Possibly our constituents would learn more by way of example than by study of the document, which is so often disregarded in these latter days.

I in no way reflect upon the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM]. He is an enthusiast about this matter. At the same time he is a good businessman, and I am sure that if the United States Government were his own business today, if his credit were about exhausted, and if he were spending $2 for every dollar taken in, in order that his business might keep its head above water, he would not think of purchasing books to send to his friends, especially when many of those same friends were without the necessities of life. No; the gentleman from New York would use a little business sense, and if it were necessary for the Government to spend money for food and raiment he might continue to borrow.

I shall insist upon a roll call on this measure. I am sure that our several constituencies will be interested in knowing the attitude of mind of their hired men in Congress when it comes to spending the people's money.

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I have not risen at this time primarily to discuss the merits either of the pending bill or the amendment of the gentleman from California. The committee has already voted to increase the appropriation, and my purpose in taking this time is to give the House some information which has been compiled as a result of several months' work, which, although it is not yet in final or complete form, may be of interest to the House and to the country.

The large sheet which I have before me gives the cost of printing for the past 10 years by departments, and when we go back into the House it is my purpose to ask permission to extend my remarks by including these tables for your information.

I may state very briefly that the total cost of public printing in the Government Printing Office over the period of the past 10 years has increased from $12,505,000 in 1927 to $18,665,000 in 1936. The 1933 figure was $12,454,000, or an increase of 50 percent in the last 4 years. The tables which I shall insert in the RECORD will show the break-down by departments.

Many of us think the entire cost of public printing is represented in the reports of the Public Printer, but there has grown up in the departments of the Government the practice of setting up their own independent printing plants using the offset process of printing, involving such equipment as the multilith. Your committee has been laboring for several weeks to obtain information about the extent of this type of printing, which I choose to term "bootleg" printing, because I think the main purpose of it is to circumvent the appropriations by the Congress for public printing; that is to say, the departments exhaust their appropriation for printing by work done in the Government Printing Office and then through the use of these machines and their regular personnel they go far beyond the amount that Congress intended.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBETH. I am pleased to yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLLINS. Do they not have to go to the gentleman's committee to get permission to set up these machines?

Mr. LAMBETH. They have not been doing that.

Mr. COLLINS. Is not that the law?

Mr. LAMBETH. The question of whether multilith and multigraph reproduction is printing within the meaning of the act of March 1, 1918, has not been definitely determined. The decisions of the Comptroller General interpreting the law have not clearly defined the authority of the Joint Committee on Printing over this class of work. I may say to the gentleman I have had that matter up with the Director of the Budget and the Comptroller General, and we are in process of doing something that will stop the practice.

Mr. COLLINS. It ought to be the law, and, as I understand, it is the law at the present time.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMBETH. I do not like to trespass upon the time of the Committee, but this is a matter which I think is worthy of attention, and I wish to extend my remarks in the RECORD to give some more information on the subject because it is my definite conviction that this enormous increase in free mailing by the departments, which has doubled in the last 4 years, is due to this so-called "bootleg printing" which you get every morning by the basketful.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBETH. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Can the gentleman tell the Members the cost of the advertising of the P. W. A., W. P. A., Rural Resettlement, and the emergency agencies, including the Relief Administration?

Mr. LAMBETH. If the gentleman will get me the assistance of Solomon and Hercules, who cleansed the Augean stable, I may be able to answer the question.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Has the gentleman any idea of the cost?

Mr. LAMBETH. I cannot answer offhand. I was not fully prepared to bring this matter before the House, but I thought this was a suitable occasion to present it in part; and I may say further, in defense of the Congress, because we are constantly criticized in the press throughout the country about this matter of free mailing and public printing, that Congress is spending today, or spent in 1936, $3,400,000 for public printing, and in 1927 we spent $2,900,000, or an increase of 15 percent, and I have already given you the figures with reference to the franking privilege of Members of Congress, which shows that has not been increasing in the past 10 years. The tremendous increase in free mailing and in the printing of this Government lies at the door of the heads of the various departments of the Government and the Budget officers thereof, as well as at the office of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget. The Joint Committee on Printing, composed of Members of both Houses of the Congress, have been seeking through all this wilderness and labyrinth to get some facts and I am happy to tell you that we have assembled a great deal of information, and we are going to take such steps as the law will permit to curtail this enormous development. If existing law will not permit us, we are going to come here and ask you to give us a law that will. [Applause.]

Under leave to extend my remarks, I insert herewith a table which has been prepared from the Annual Reports of the Postmaster General.

TABLE A.—Estimated amounts which would have been collected at regular rates of postage, including registry fees and surcharges, on matter mailed free during the fiscal years from 1927 to 1936, inclusive

	1927	1928	1929	1930	1931	1932	1933	1934	1935	1936
Mailed under penalty privilege by departments and establishments of the Government exclusive of the Post Office Department	(1)	(1)	$8,169,170	$9,347,505	$9,886,456	$9,151,899	$14,315,414	$23,094,882	$31,281,600	$32,236,269
Mailed under franking privilege by Members of Congress	(1)	(1)	957,964	718,060	723,671	778,436	1,019,621	775,785	577,162	751,579
Mailed under franking privilege by others	(1)	(1)	154,545	128,970	6,289	3,904	215	180	246
Publications mailed free in county	(1)	(1)	747,115	753,263	704,579	631,647	538,221	545,227	575,597	615,645
Free matter for the blind	(1)	(1)	56,991	63,779	132,161	133,641	90,522	103,552	131,700	109,566
Total	[2]14,501,208	[2]$17,634,510	9,931,240	11,037,152	11,575,837	10,701,912	15,967,772	24,519,661	32,566,239	33,713,305

[1] Totals only furnished. [2] Estimated.

NOTE.—The decrease in the amount of matter mailed under the franking privilege by others than Members of Congress beginning in the fiscal year 1932 is due to the fact that matter previously mailed under the franking privilege by directors of agricultural experiment stations is being mailed under the penalty privilege.

I insert herewith a table showing the work done in the Government Printing Office for the various departments and agencies of the Government. The table shows (1) the dollar value and (2) the total number of pieces of printed matter.

TABLE B.—Charges for printing and binding and blank paper from fiscal year 1927–36, inclusive, with total number of copies of all kinds of printing and binding

Government departments and agencies	1927	1928	1929	1930	1931	1932	1933	1934	1935	1936
Congress, Government Printing Office, private orders and speeches, and Superintendent of Documents:
Total charges	$2,937,978.58	$3,161,263.45	$3,210,399.24	$3,320,054.73	$3,299,830.63	$3,792,067.26	$3,298,497.83	$3,390,078.85	$3,168,879.99	$3,404,302.03
Total copies	107,862,320	117,330,940	111,136,163	108,163,557	127,962,915	114,994,215	108,763,823	107,306,613	189,678,533	164,478,071
Library of Congress:
Total charges	$320,996.47	$343,853.76	$334,502.33	$384,841.42	$387,912.12	$399,226.98	$372,565.11	$383,077.12	$403,409.18	$437,413.55
Total copies	23,009,647	23,812,673	27,662,908	28,496,293	32,285,285	29,811,432	30,560,157	32,114,431	29,132,379	33,767,828
Department of Agriculture:
Total charges	$997,337.83	$884,886.23	$803,828.88	$1,014,610.10	$1,080,021.83	$1,082,768.05	$786,531.71	$715,855.72	$927,393.86	$1,227,889.95
Total copies	109,033,488	101,627,507	99,407,670	155,835,313	185,599,085	142,683,367	98,373,475	132,372,362	112,596,258	181,132,711
Department of Commerce:
Total charges	$803,091.46	$792,465.21	$796,857.81	$1,381,368.92	$1,747,232.57	$1,169,386.55	$1,357,038.62	$571,831.48	$934,797.95	$814,064.80
Total copies	51,844,835	46,838,790	53,089,361	153,841,876	61,276,539	51,505,321	39,679,449	86,048,609	62,399,745	109,333,828
Interior Department:
Total charges	$330,103.67	$331,188.75	$328,906.02	$395,805.57	$388,336.84	$366,484.10	$438,766.05	$334,238.59	$580,016.96	$657,573.14
Total copies	22,549,465	19,553,967	21,541,117	21,226,628	21,189,372	19,476,877	17,852,803	36,979,094	50,272,767	52,550,249
Department of Justice:
Total charges	$268,418.17	$186,214.48	$224,329.71	$264,647.18	$341,234.17	$343,362.11	$229,468.27	$166,187.18	$318,322.88	$351,021.37
Total copies	14,999,044	14,239,276	19,366,888	19,933,854	23,295,081	21,422,315	15,804,457	11,092,549	16,338,593	20,033,314
Department of Labor:
Total charges	$239,483.09	$206,912.50	$230,201.71	$279,013.84	$239,644.20	$285,004.63	$215,172.33	$282,411.30	$458,302.16	$499,525.77
Total copies	24,023,155	21,689,675	22,718,720	29,034,733	28,570,837	34,026,221	23,639,242	87,177,171	61,655,095	171,130,597
Navy Department:
Total charges	$585,019.21	$614,388.04	$675,065.11	$792,405.44	$747,348.71	$683,149.56	$685,165.59	$482,276.35	$592,887.72	$712,046.90
Total copies	68,552,179	75,493,018	90,120,409	81,007,251	67,353,539	73,556,581	85,643,266	64,630,163	79,378,449	86,326,418
Post Office Department:
Total charges	$2,431,370.52	$2,031,595.71	$2,113,061.95	$2,114,610.44	$1,895,680.02	$1,684,364.09	$1,607,460.80	$1,340,097.32	$1,838,936.67	$1,907,480.18
Total copies	2,880,843,255	2,465,173,248	2,479,776,964	2,819,114,427	2,267,014,667	2,322,594,414	2,183,919,009	2,467,861,084	2,979,992,337	2,774,159,268
Department of State:
Total charges	$186,710.55	$164,257.28	$248,482.92	$233,045.67	$250,559.39	$202,589.28	$182,931.49	$127,037.18	$182,261.99	$169,265.67
Total copies	16,341,516	14,033,517	21,802,179	21,651,431	20,953,600	19,219,512	14,335,813	8,417,786	12,309,421	15,437,403
Treasury Department:
Total charges	$927,861.17	$967,803.77	$929,992.81	$891,427.02	$941,489.95	$889,343.98	$983,458.00	$901,529.22	$1,224,739.49	$1,689,007.84
Total copies	216,183,619	209,251,622	228,353,509	208,422,650	210,665,629	179,375,656	160,423,523	298,603,403	324,132,222	507,186,554
War Department:
Total charges	$645,415.52	$654,509.55	$677,336.14	$634,224.53	$684,459.76	$690,968.45	$596,405.60	$508,480.76	$647,943.35	$868,436.90
Total copies	81,782,980	88,280,881	95,587,162	93,564,018	93,718,888	111,990,372	99,381,697	134,605,809	139,357,233	225,274,810
Board of Governors, Federal Reserve System:
Total charges	$51,716.03	$53,988.58	$54,543.63	$39,621.31	$46,637.63	$39,672.96	$40,508.02	$42,721.89	$50,755.83	$58,455.06
Total copies	1,506,664	1,147,055	1,211,992	1,273,331	1,579,762	1,304,346	1,293,556	1,890,875	1,941,676	1,022,709
Board of Tax Appeals:
Total charges	(1)	$36,343.24	$50,133.72	$40,667.06	$42,397.47	$33,111.08	$29,223.70	$28,240.05	$24,154.81	$24,308.98
Total copies	(1)	449,861	261,381	237,258	624,388	257,117	650,444	196,863	336,058	451,582
Bureau of the Budget:
Total changes	$25,575.84	$22,643.53	$25,751.51	$26,945.92	$34,144.48	$31,404.24	$33,061.89	$27,540.10	$30,575.97	$33,111.15
Total copies	144,044	116,894	86,091	150,024	124,496	159,664	78,012	33,040	14,993	34,012
Civil Service Commission:
Total charges	$60,869.47	$58,417.56	$56,949.00	$62,791.70	$60,787.16	$48,924.89	$21,971.96	$47,143.48	$85,246.04	$104,708.46
Total copies	12,856,516	12,945,367	11,886,398	14,121,966	15,110,127	10,946,707	3,381,016	11,433,762	16,210,000	26,803,059
Court of Claims:
Total charges	$32,127.53	$41,331.52	$39,072.89	$33,439.34	$38,499.58	$43,475.15	$21,498.68	$21,699.43	$24,810.92	$26,988.54
Total copies	152,278	169,575	146,427	161,548	175,469	198,277	137,114	130,659	126,610	151,178
District of Columbia Government:
Total charges	$14,819.47	$73,008.38	$75,949.31	$106,270.65	$117,816.53	$142,645.34	$99,308.34	$106,079.86	$164,817.65	$151,213.96
Total copies	88,844	10,209,299	10,492,779	28,400,508	44,610,132	68,730,231	26,000,200	32,768,084	41,747,572	15,008,720
Federal Trade Commission:
Total charges	$20,999.56	$20,266.79	$27,301.71	$29,729.42	$47,381.43	$35,614.36	$23,666.54	$42,723.49	$58,123.20	$43,345.69
Total copies	350,989	813,622	636,924	1,327,932	2,759,576	1,438,985	561,732	850,494	1,038,854	814,249
General Accounting Office:
Total charges	$40,603.63	$29,968.28	$29,850.57	$76,759.48	$78,396.18	$65,617.57	$56,709.94	$55,947.45	$80,680.05	$107,139.00
Total copies	4,473,216	4,528,250	4,775,612	5,541,129	34,101,434	62,116,392	59,157,007	61,178,455	70,304,970	76,213,349
Interstate Commerce Commission:
Total charges	$219,981.06	$207,450.36	$196,998.67	$230,571.10	$232,647.64	$196,520.97	$165,568.50	$130,370.35	$145,886.05	$182,428.54
Total copies	9,807,654	10,289,679	4,779,208	9,384,375	10,079,997	4,163,180	5,298,024	2,275,545	6,980,798	11,126,944
Pan American Union:
Total charges	$39,630.29	$38,282.20	$35,133.45	$36,738.09	$40,906.66	$33,258.37	$26,251.16	$25,459.82	$29,592.98	$31,357.30
Total copies	283,533	246,311	222,151	207,816	195,721	161,450	135,139	134,600	156,020	162,337
Panama Canal:
Total charges	$44,316.83	$53,684.34	$60,064.76	$51,048.59	$54,163.31	$50,839.61	$15,210.70	$11,777.24	$8,420.66	$9,167.76
Total copies	1,160,004	1,379,108	1,909,203	1,146,359	936,757	1,071,562	695,984	691,105	923,396	1,060,667
Patent Office:
Total charges	$1,046,296.86	$977,209.41	$1,047,902.85	$1,191,228.24	$1,147,444.86	$1,396,805.95	$1,311,097.69	$928,477.70	$882,097.98	$878,558.58
Total copies	9,421,945	8,304,345	8,714,974	13,025,427	9,596,906	10,006,101	10,169,065	10,311,874	11,403,162	10,816,825
Reconstruction Finance Corporation:
Total charges							$170,486.93	$113,236.30	$137,319.13	$131,465.25
Total copies							45,023,955	15,916,663	12,756,117	9,882,254

[Footnotes at end of table]

TABLE B.—Charges for printing and binding and blank paper from fiscal year 1927–36, inclusive, with total number of copies of all kinds of printing and binding—Continued

Government departments and agencies	1927	1928	1929	1930	1931	1932	1933	1934	1935	1936
Shipping Board:
Total charges	$90,689.30	$76,653.95	$55,727.23	$47,985.33	$42,262.18	$27,936.58	$18,870.60	(1)	(1)	(1)
Total copies	8,147,581	8,814,520	5,845,796	6,749,919	5,066,407	2,517,637	1,695,772	(1)	(1)	(1)
Smithsonian Institution:
Total charges	$76,305.67	$97,430.04	$126,072.48	$97,860.86	$93,721.81	$84,032.65	$97,673.63	$36,514.25	$10,456.67	$22,258.58
Total copies	856,891	449,733	747,706	572,839	688,278	542,583	327,322	245,060	254,193	287,374
Veterans' Administration:
Total charges	$157,600.05	$140,045.42	$143,440.31	$173,635.93	$253,217.98	$227,670.39	$156,375.02	$114,321.67	$151,927.43	$171,527.06
Total copies	76,061,558	76,802,329	72,863,733	72,952,251	130,974,292	104,122,689	79,654,518	59,945,691	75,581,287	122,475,145
Agricultural Adjustment Administration:
Total charges								$504,919.38	$925,986.59	$603,613.46
Total copies								179,988,613	314,594,989	187,960,766
Farm Credit Administration:
Total charges							$6,571.98	$206,632.10	$206,918.42	$129,890.48
Total copies							1,496,174	29,120,457	67,508,269	20,275,420
Civil Works:
Total charges								$272,470.92
Total copies								152,158,278
Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works:
Total charges							(1)	$46,013.32	$127,496.31	$262,990.36
Total copies							(1)	10,369,169	35,292,877	56,428,745
Federal Emergency Relief Administration:
Total charges							(1)	(1)	$228,593.87	$217,879.07
Total copies							(1)	(1)	84,219,779	96,406,53
Federal Housing Administration:
Total charges									$637,197.00	$468,776.64
Total copies									94,204,116	87,582,571
Home Owners' Loan Corporation:
Total charges							(1)	$110,373.94	$172,247.88	$67,932.76
Total copies							(1)	48,276,373	13,225,237	1,381,235
National Emergency Council:
Total charges								(1)	$70,416.04	$85,808.55
Total copies								(1)	6,960,846	3,419,855
National Recovery Administration:
Total charges							(1)	$472,329.46	$458,972.17	$52,679.59
Total copies							(1)	125,795,369	29,791,152	2,734,091
Resettlement Administration:
Total charges									(1)	$808,991.72
Total copies									(1)	216,145,674
Social Security Board:
Total charges										$15,711.10
Total copies										1,238,396
Works Progress Administration:
Total charges										$771,341.56
Total copies										418,882,892
Miscellaneous agencies: [2]
Total charges	$96,996.66	$104,084.30	$117,474.08	$145,192.37	$212,265.66	$287,140.20	$193,578.47	$401,658.74	$474,541.12	$556,593.64
Total copies	6,262,621	7,703,241	7,832,316	8,387,464	12,937,871	15,216,232	7,440,672	84,559,808	70,322,628	96,638,669
Grand total of all charges	$12,602,314.92	$12,370,146.63	$12,715,330.80	$14,096,520.25	$14,546,440.75	$14,333,380.35	$12,941,095.24	$12,949,752.01	$16,465,026.97	$18,756,268.94

[1] Miscellaneous.

[2] In Commerce.

[3] Those now abolished or those with minor charges and copies.

In addition to the total charges for work done in the Government Printing Office for the fiscal year 1936, amounting to $18,665,855.88, there was also printing done in field plants owned and operated by the various departments and agencies of the Government outside of the District of Columbia amounting to $1,708,273.57.

From the reports which have been received in response to a questionnaire sent out by the Joint Committee on Printing, it is apparent that the expenditures for offset printing in the mimeograph, multilith, and multigraph shops in the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1937 are not less than $2,500,000.

Further expenditures for printing done in commercial plants by contract for the departments and agencies of the Government outside of the District of Columbia amounted in 1937 to approximately $1,250,000.

Therefore, it may be conservatively stated that the total cost of all public printing is not less than $24,000,000 per year at the present time.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. We have four principal means of communication with the people. First, there are the newspapers and magazines—a few people have too much control over them; second, the radio—a few people have too much power over them; third, the news reels—the most effective of them all and controlled by a comparatively few people; fourth, public speakers—a difficult way to reach many of the people. Those are the four principal means of communicating with the people. There is another way, a partial way, of communicating with the people, and that is through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It is the one publication that does not have an editor, it is the one publication that is not censored, it is the one publication where an advertising manager cannot dictate as to what goes in and what does not go in the publication, and it is the one publication in which the American people can fairly get both sides of any public question. Instead of restricting the amount that is being expended by reason of the publication of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I personally would be willing to increase the amount for the reason that we must disseminate knowledge and information such as is contained in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and such as is contained in this book under consideration, which is a story of the Constitution; and I venture to say that when my good friend the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] sends his constituents copies of this book, he will receive more words of praise than he has ever received before during his long term of service here in Congress. They will say that at last the Government of the United States has given them something they want; something which enables them to know more about our country, about the Declaration of Independence, and the formation of the Constitution. It is one book that will not go to the wastebasket. It will be preserved. The questions and answers in the book are enlightening to even Members of Congress.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. Does the gentleman think that my constituents will say that and feel that way when they know that we have had to go out and borrow money, thus increasing the national debt, in order to make them this present?

Mr. PATMAN. Oh, the national debt will be paid all right. This will affect the national debt in a very small way.

Mr. MICHENER. I am very glad to have that assurance from the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. At one time Woodrow Wilson had a law passed that would have captured the profits of war and paid the cost of the war, but when the gentleman's party came into power they commenced to repeal the tax laws passed under the direction of President Wilson, and had it not been for the changes and the amendments thus enacted the national debt would have been paid, including the cost of the war, by June 30, 1927.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. PATMAN. This $125,000 is nothing compared with the billions and billions and billions of dollars that were given to the war profiteers after the war, that should have gone to pay the cost of the war. One hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars for a book like this to go into a million libraries, schools, and homes is a comparatively small amount. This book is a valuable book, and will cause the people to love their country as they should and they will love their country more by knowing more about their country. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman has referred to the Republican Party repealing the taxes. I remind the gentleman that it is true the Republican Party paid off the national debt from $26,000,000,000 down to $16,000,000,000 up to 1930 and reduced taxes five times, and the Democratic Party in the House, every time we voted on an amendment to reduce taxes, voted for a larger reduction.

Mr. PATMAN. The Republican Party did not pass a single tax law. The Congress under Woodrow Wilson passed those tax laws, and those tax laws were for the purpose of causing the profiteers of the war to pay the cost of war, and the Republican Party when they came into power caused those laws to be repealed and changed to help draft dodgers, tax evaders, and the war profiteers who benefited so much because of this country's misery and misfortune.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MCLEAN) there were—ayes 58, noes 36.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLOOM: Page 1, line 10, strike out the article "a" and add the letter "s" to the word "section."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee will rise.

The Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MARTIN of Colorado, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration House Joint Resolution 363, and in accordance with House Resolution No. 258 he reported the joint resolution back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the first Kramer amendment.

The SPEAKER. There are three amendments. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 8, strike "$350,000" and insert "$475,000."

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOILEAU. Is it possible to have a vote on the two Kramer amendments together?

The SPEAKER. It would probably conserve time; yes.

Mr. MICHENER. In view of that, Mr. Speaker, I request that the two be voted on together.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that all three of the amendments relate to the same subject and they might all three be voted on en bloc.

Mr. MICHENER. Very well, Mr. Speaker, I ask that a separate vote be had on the three amendments en bloc.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan demands a vote on the three amendments adopted in Committee of the Whole, the vote to be taken upon the amendments en bloc.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MICHENER) there were ayes 70 and noes 37.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Obviously there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 149, nays 142, not voting 140, as follows:

[Roll No. 101]

YEAS—149

Aleshire	Eckert	Kennedy, Md.	Palmisano
Allen, Del.	Evans	Kennedy, N. Y.	Parsons
Ashbrook	Farley	Kenney	Patman
Atkinson	Fitzpatrick	Keogh	Patton
Beam	Flannagan	Kerr	Peterson, Fla.
Beiter	Fleger	Kirwan	Pfeifer
Bell	Fletcher	Kniffin	Poage
Bloom	Forand	Kramer	Ramsay
Boehne	Ford, Calif.	Lea	Ramspeck
Boland, Pa.	Frey, Pa.	Leavy	Randolph
Boren	Fries, Ill.	Lewis, Md.	Reilly
Boyer	Garrett	McCormack	Rigney
Bulwinkle	Gildea	McFarlane	Robinson, Utah
Burdick	Gray, Ind.	McGranery	Robsion, Ky.
Byrne	Gray, Pa.	McGrath	Sabath
Caldwell	Green	McKeough	Sacks
Cartwright	Greever	McLaughlin	Sanders
Casey, Mass.	Griffith	Magnuson	Schaefer, Ill.
Celler	Griswold	Martin, Colo.	Secrest
Chandler	Guyer	Mason	Shanley
Citron	Harlan	Massingale	Smith, Va.
Coffee, Wash.	Harrington	Maverick	Snyder, Pa.
Collins	Hart	Meeks	Stack
Cox	Harter	Mills	Sutphin
Crosby	Hendricks	Mitchell, Ill.	Swope
Cullen	Hill, Wash.	Moser, Pa.	Thomas, Tex.
Cummings	Hook	Mosier, Ohio	Thompson, Ill.
Curley	Houston	Mouton	Tolan
Daly	Hunter	Murdock, Ariz.	Towey
Delaney	Imhoff	Nelson	Vinson, Ga.
DeMuth	Izac	Norton	Wallgren
Dingell	Jarman	O'Connell, R. I.	Walter
Dorsey	Jenckes, Ind.	O'Connor, Mont.	Welch
Drew, Pa.	Johnson, Lyndon	O'Connor, N. Y.	Whittington
Drewry, Va.	Johnson, W. Va.	O'Day	Wilcox
Driver	Jones	O'Leary
Dunn	Kee	O'Neill, N. J.
Eberharter	Keller	O'Toole

NAYS—142

Allen, Ill.	Doxey	Larrabee	Seger
Amlie	Duncan	Lewis, Colo.	Short
Anderson, Mo.	Eicher	Lord	Simpson
Andresen, Minn.	Elliott	Lucas	Smith, Conn.
Andrews	Engel	Luckey, Nebr.	Smith, Maine
Barden	Englebright	Ludlow	Smith, Wash.
Bates	Fitzgerald	McLean	Snell
Biermann	Ford, Miss.	McReynolds	South
Binderup	Fuller	McSweeney	Sparkman
Bland	Gambrill	Maas	Spence
Boileau	Gearhart	Mahon, Tex.	Starnes
Brown	Gehrmann	Maloney	Stefan
Buck	Gilchrist	Mapes	Tarver
Buckler, Minn.	Gingery	May	Taylor, S. C.
Cannon, Mo.	Goldsborough	Michener	Taylor, Tenn.
Case, S. Dak.	Gregory	Millard	Terry
Chapman	Gwynne	Mott	Thomas, N. J.
Church	Haines	O'Brien, Mich.	Thomason, Tex.
Clark, N. C.	Hartley	O'Connell, Mont.	Thurston
Clason	Havenner	Pearson	Tobey
Cochran	Hill, Ala.	Peterson, Ga.	Treadway
Coffee, Nebr.	Hill, Okla.	Pettengill	Umstead
Colden	Hoffman	Phillips	Vincent, B. M.
Colmer	Holmes	Plumley	Vinson, Fred M.
Cooper	Honeyman	Polk	Voorhis
Costello	Hope	Powers	Warren
Cravens	Jenks, N. H.	Rankin	Wearin
Crosser	Johnson, Luther A.	Reece, Tenn.	Whelchel
Deen	Kinzer	Reed, Ill.	Wolcott
DeRouen	Kitchens	Reed, N. Y.	Wolfenden
Dies	Kleberg	Rees, Kans.	Wolverton
Ditter	Kocialkowski	Robertson	Woodruff
Dixon	Lambertson	Rogers, Mass.	Woodrum
Dondero	Lambeth	Sauthoff	Zimmerman
Doughton	Lamneck	Schneider, Wis.
Dowell	Lanham	Scott

NOT VOTING—140

Allen, La.	Burch	Crowther	Fish
Allen, Pa.	Cannon, Wis.	Culkin	Flannery
Arends	Carlson	Dempsey	Fulmer
Arnold	Carter	Dickstein	Gasque
Bacon	Champion	Dirksen	Gavagan
Barry	Clark, Idaho	Disney	Gifford
Bernard	Claypool	Dockweiler	Greenwood
Bigelow	Cluett	Douglas	Halleck
Boykin	Cole, Md.	Eaton	Hamilton
Boylan, N. Y.	Cole, N. Y.	Edmiston	Hancock, N. Y.
Bradley	Cooley	Ellenbogen	Hancock, N. C.
Brewster	Crawford	Faddis	Healey
Brooks	Creal	Ferguson	Hennings
Buckley, N. Y.	Crowe	Fernandez	Higgins
Hildebrandt	McClellan	Peyser	Steagall
Hobbs	McGehee	Pierce	Sullivan
Hull	McGroarty	Quinn	Sumners, Tex.
Jacobsen	McMillan	Rabaut	Sweeney
Jarrett	Mahon, S. C.	Rayburn	Taber
Jenkins, Ohio	Mansfield	Rich	Taylor, Colo.
Johnson, Minn.	Martin, Mass.	Richards	Teigan
Johnson, Okla.	Mead	Rogers, Okla.	Thom
Kelly, Ill.	Merritt	Romjue	Tinkham
Kelly, N. Y.	Miller	Rutherford	Transue
Kloeb	Mitchell, Tenn.	Ryan	Turner
Knutson	Murdock, Utah	Sadowski	Wadsworth
Kopplemann	Nichols	Schuetz	Weaver
Kvale	O'Brien, Ill.	Schulte	Wene
Lanzetta	O'Malley	Scrugham	West
Lemke	O'Neal, Ky.	Shafer, Mich.	White, Idaho
Lesinski	Oliver	Shannon	White, Ohio
Long	Owen	Sheppard	Wigglesworth
Luce	Pace	Sirovich	Williams
Luecke, Mich.	Patrick	Smith, W. Va.	Withrow
McAndrews	Patterson	Somers, N. Y.	Wood

So the amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Mr. Rayburn with Mr. Luce.
Mr. Steagall with Mr. Wadsworth.
Mr. McAndrews with Mr. Martin of Massachusetts.
Mr. Sullivan with Mr. Eaton.
Mr. Mansfield with Mr. Crowther.
Mr. Weaver with Mr. Arends.
Mr. Cooley with Mr. Bacon.
Mr. Burch with Mr. Carlson.
Mr. Mitchell of Tennessee with Mr. Knutson.
Mr. Gavagan with Mr. Taber.
Mr. Fulmer with Mr. Crawford.
Mr. Greenwood with Mr. Rich.
Mr. Cole of Maryland with Mr. Cluett.
Mr. Boykin with Mr. Gifford.
Mr. Hancock of North Carolina with Mr. Tinkham.
Mr. Kelly of Illinois with Mr. Halleck.
Mr. Hobbs with Mr. Brewster.
Mr. Sumners of Texas with Mr. Wigglesworth.
Mr. Boylan with Mr. Rutherford.
Mr. McMillan with Mr. Fish.
Mr. Turner with Mr. White of Ohio.
Mr. Miller with Mr. Carter.
Mr. Owen with Mr. Dirksen.
Mr. Gasque with Mr. Jarrett.
Mr. Disney with Mr. Hancock of New York.
Mr. Arnold with Mr. Shafer of Michigan.
Mr. Johnson of Oklahoma with Mr. Douglas.
Mr. Richards with Mr. Oliver.
Mr. Schuetz with Mr. Culkin.
Mr. Taylor of Colorado with Mr. Hull.
Mr. McClellan with Mr. Cole of New York.
Mr. Romjue with Mr. Jenkins of Ohio.
Mr. Thom with Mr. Kvale.
Mr. Chapman with Mr. Withrow.
Mr. Schulte with Mr. Johnson of Minnesota.
Mr. Creal with Mr. Lemke.
Mr. Fernandez with Mr. Bernard.
Mr. West with Mr. Kloeb.
Mr. Allen of Louisiana with Mr. Wene.
Mr. Edmiston with Mr. Ryan.
Mr. Hennings with Mr. Barry.
Mr. O'Malley with Mr. Sweeney.
Mr. Williams with Mr. Allen of Pennsylvania.
Mr. Pierce with Mr. Claypool.
Mr. Sirovich with Mr. Faddis.
Mr. Nichols with Mr. White of Idaho.
Mr. Patterson with Mr. Bigelow.
Mr. Teigan with Mr. Dockweiler.
Mr. Bradley with Mr. Quinn.
Mr. Transue with Mr. Crowe.
Mr. Wood with Mr. Hamilton.
Mr. Mead with Mr. Long.
Mr. Higgins with Mr. McGehee.
Mr. Hildebrandt with Mr. Brooks.
Mr. Scrugham with Mr. Pace.
Mr. Dempsey with Mr. Smith of West Virginia.
Mr. Luecke of Michigan with Mr. Somers of New York.
Mr. Healey with Mr. Clark of Idaho.
Mr. Jacobsen with Mr. Lanzetta.
Mr. Kelly of New York with Mr. Rabaut.
Mr. Mahon of South Carolina with Mr. O'Brien of Illinois.
Mr. Merritt with Mr. Patrick.
Mr. Murdock of Utah with Mr. O'Neal of Kentucky.
Mr. Sheppard with Mr. Ellenbogen.
Mr. Peyser with Mr. Sadowski.

Mr. IMHOFF changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia changed his vote from "aye" to "no."

Mr. DEROUEN changed his vote from "aye" to "no."

Mr. MAGNUSON changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

Mr. SMITH of Virginia changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the House joint resolution.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the joint resolution.

The House joint resolution was passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FARM-TENANCY BILL

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request made earlier in the day to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7562) to encourage and promote the ownership of farm homes and to make the possession of such homes more secure, to provide for the general welfare of the United States, to provide additional credit facilities for agricultural development, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I wish to make a statement in recapitulation of the debate this morning and my remarks therein.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] now renews his request, and I shall not object because of the very fair way in which he has approached the matter. He has given us assurance, which is as good as any gold bond, that when in conference the issue of land purchase and sale by the Government develops, before he will concede the point to the Senate he will come back to the House and submit the matter to the House and ask for instructions and will give us an hour's time equally divided on both sides. After conferring with my colleagues on the committee on both sides of the aisle, I feel that this is a fair way of doing things toward our objective of bringing the issue involved before the House for enlightenment, and I agree with him and ask support of his request.

Mr. JONES. That understanding applies to title I.

Mr. TOBEY. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Mr. JONES, Mr. DOXEY, and Mr. HOPE.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, after the reading of the Journal, disposition of business on the Speaker's desk and at the conclusion of the legislative program, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that immediately following the remarks of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNELL] on Thursday next, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER] may have 15 minutes in which to address the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to speak for 15 minutes on Thursday next following the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD a speech made by myself and our colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK], on the subject of Nazi activities in the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made today.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise the remarks I made in the Committee of the Whole and to include certain tables showing expenditures by departments for public printing and also the use of the franking and free-mail privilege by departments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article by Howard V. O'Brien.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at noon on Thursday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG] asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Thursday next. Is there objection?

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know whether or not the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] has knowledge of this request, because he has been very anxious to preserve the rights of his committee to Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. KLEBERG. I am sure I do not know.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Answering the gentleman from Wisconsin, I may say that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] asked me if I thought that Calendar Wednesday might be passed over and I told him I did not think it would be.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

NATIONAL EDITORIAL ASSOCIATION

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no cbjection.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, we all fully appreciate the power and usefulness of the press of our Nation. The editorial writers of our Nation are messengers of enlightenment and molders of public opinion. Through their power and influence the destiny of our Nation is largely guided.

One of the most useful organizations in the country is the National Editorial Association. Of particular interest now to the members of this association is where they will meet for their 1938 spring convention or assembly. An invitation to this association will be presented upon the behalf of Florida through Hons. Bob Sites and Charles Helfenstein, of Florida. Both are eminent writers and Florida newspapermen of achievement. The invitation will be offered in Detroit at the meeting of the association on the 21st of this month.

No more appropriate place for the meeting can be found than Florida. No other State in the Union has better facilities for transportation, both to the State and within the State. With its approximately 1,400 miles of seacoast, every coastal city in Florida can be easily reached by water transportation. Rapid air transit reaches it from all parts of the country. The best railroad transportation facilities in our country are offered by the lines leading into Florida. We have many highways entering our State. Throughout Florida we have a network of the finest paved highways in the world. Railroad facilities are offered to practically every community in Florida.

Florida has the finest beaches in the world and its citrus fruits and vegetables are unexcelled. The finest hotels are there, rates are reasonable, the climate is matchless, and hospitality abounds. It is hoped that the National Editorial Association will accept Florida's invitation to hold its meeting there next spring.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] is recognized for 1 hour.

WHAT IS WRONG WITH THE REVENUE?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, in presenting this rather complicated subject today, I am going to take advantage of a suggestion once made by a well-known professor. He said that if you have a public subject to discuss, its elucidation would be aided by presenting it as in answer to four questions: First, What is it? Second, Why is it? Third. What of it? Fourth. What are you going to do about it?

I. WHAT IS IT?

Well, sir, the subject concerns our lack of public revenues to meet what we conceive to be imperative expenditures. Why this lack in the most richly endowed country in the world? "Oh, it is the depression and its extraordinary expenditures." I do not consider this the right answer. Other countries, not so richly endowed, like England, have paid their way through this same depression. But the United States expended $6,605,000,000 during the years 1933, 1934, 1935 to relieve social distress. Well, Great Britain expended $10,815,000,000 during the same years, in terms of our population, for social relief. And the treasury of England is not in the "red." The British budget rides as securely above the waves of the depression as its men of war ride over the seas.

What, then, is the occasion for our continued deficits? I answer, it is the delinquent taxpayers of the United States. Here is a list:

Delinquent taxpayers' list

Repudiation income tax, 1894, 18 years	$1,500,000,000
Exemption public securities	2,000,000,000
Exemption employees, officers of counties, cities, States	1,000,000,000
Tax exemptions, community property, 8 years	200,000,000
Exemption income of companies from State-leased oil lands	3,000,000,000
Exemption income from stock dividends, 16 years	1,060,000,000
Evasion of surtaxes, 16 years	7,000,000,000
Total	15,760,000,000

Sir, the above list of delinquent tax payments represents a sum of about $16,000,000,000, or one-half the net national debt. Consider please, the implications of some of the items. Consider, first, the exemption of non-Federal public employees in the United States who number 2,500,000, who receive aggregate salaries reaching the tremendous total of $3,250,000,000 yearly, who are not now taxable on their salary income. Second, consider the forty-five billions of Federal and State bonds, the income from a large part of which is not taxed by the Federal Government, and a larger part exempt as against 28 States which have income-tax laws. The bonds exempt represent a sum more than twice enough to build the railways. And third, consider the income of stockholders, distributed to them in the form of stock, nine billions in the last 12 years, income not fully taxed under Federal or State income-tax laws. Sir, the income of public employees and public bonds which goes untaxed, represents the steadiest income throughout the years of the depression. These public bonds more than equal one-third of the outstanding bonds of the country, including public and private bonds.

Mr. Speaker, it is apparent that an immense proportion of the income resources of the United States is not now taxed and is escaping taxation.

II. WHY IS IT?

Mr. Speaker, why, indeed, this delinquent list of income resources not exempted in any other income-tax system of the world? How does it come? Is the Congress to blame? No, sir; not ours the guilt. These egregious delinquencies have their origin not here but in the courthouse.

I wish to begin with that most revolutionary decision holding the income-tax provisions of 1894 unconstitutional, the Pollock case (1). The income-tax principle represents the fairest form of taxation. This truth there is none to dispute. Unlike the sales tax, which taxes people according to their needs, the income-tax standard assesses them according to their ability to pay; that is, according as Providence and civilization shall have blessed them. We levied such a tax in our Civil War days, and it was upheld by the Supreme Court as constitutional in a series of cases (2). These Civil War acts, like the income tax of 1894, taxed all types of income—rental from real estate, products of personal property, and the very question of whether the income tax was a direct tax was then considered by the Court and was disposed of favorably to the Government. The Court then thought that the direct taxes contemplated by the framers of the Constitution were capitation taxes and taxes on lands and followed its early decision in the Hylton Carriage case (3), upholding a tax levied on carriages, without apportionment according to population. This also had been the view taken of the Hylton case by such writers and historians as Kent, Story, Cooley, Miller, Bancroft, Pomeroy, Hare, Burroughs, Ordoneaux, Black, Farrar, Flanders, Bateman, Patterson, and Von Holst.

Although, Mr. Speaker, the income tax of 1894 was identical with the Civil War acts, upheld formerly by the Court, yet the Court held the tax of 1894 invalid as a direct tax insofar as it taxed the income from real property. The Court also held that the Federal Government could not tax the salaries of county, city, or State employees, or income from public securities held by persons or corporations when issued by any city, county, or State and also announced the doctrine that the salaries of Federal judges could not be made subject to the income tax. On a rehearing of the Pollock case the Court by a 5-to-4 decision not only adhered to its former opinion but also held that the tax was invalid as a direct tax insofar as it taxed the income of personal property.

Sir, because of this nullifying decision, the United States alone among the great countries of the world was condemned to go without an income tax for 18 years. As a result the Government during this period, even under the small income tax levied by the act of 1894, lost in revenue at least $1,500,000,000. This loss of revenue cannot be laid to the door of Congress in passing the statute. Congress was legislating within its constitutional power to levy and collect taxes and following the Court in enacting the Income Tax Act of 1894. In pointing out the disastrous effect of outlawing the act, Mr. Justice White, dissenting, said:

> Thus, from the change of view by this Court, it happens that an act of Congress, passed for the purpose of raising revenue, in strict conformity with the practice of the Government from the earliest time and in accordance with the oft-repeated decisions of this Court, furnishes the occasion for creating a claim against the Government for hundreds of millions of dollars.

And in a dissenting opinion upon reargument he added:

> It is, I submit, greatly to be deplored that, after more than 100 years of our national existence, after the Government has withstood the strain of foreign wars and the dread ordeal of civil strife, and its people have become united and powerful, this Court should consider itself compelled to go back to a long-repudiated and rejected theory of the Constitution, by which the Government is deprived of an inherent attribute of its being, a necessary power of taxation.

Mr. Speaker, Members of the House, I ask you: Was this conservative judicial action? Was it liberal judicial action?

It was not judicial action at all. It was an act of bald usurpation only, through which a bare majority of the judges, repudiating the Court's former unanimous decisions, added the following prohibitions to the Constitution. To Congress they said:

(1) Thou shalt not oblige Federal judges to include their salaries as a part of their income in computing their income tax.

(2) Thou shalt not oblige the owner of any bonds issued by a county, municipality, or State to include in his income the interest he receives from any such security.

(3) Thou shalt not oblige the employee or officer of any county, municipality, or State to include in his income his salary, however great the salary.

And to the 48 States this 5-to-4 tribunal has issued the following enjoinder:

(4) Ye States shall not oblige any of your resident citizens to include his salary as an officer or employee of the Federal Government as a part of his income.

(5) Ye shall not oblige the owner of any bonds, issued by the Government to include as part of his income the interest he receives from any such bonds.

Sir, no king in history that I know of has ever had his revenues placed under such restrictions, however great the revolt against his rule.

REPUDIATION OF SIXTEENTH AMENDMENT

Yet, sir, the people bowed to this ruling; this 5-to-4 outlawry of a governmental power repudiating the Court's former decisions, and proceeded to secure the ratification of a constitutional amendment to overcome the ruling. It required 18 years. Their amendment read as follows:

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States.

The ratification of this, the sixteenth amendment, was a clear repudiation of the Pollock decision. It provided that Congress could tax income from whatever source derived without apportionment. It was to save the necessity of going back in any case and looking at the source from which such income was derived, thereby giving the Congress the power to tax all income, regardless of its source.

JUDGES EXEMPT THEIR SALARIES

Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, one of the first cases involving the amendment related to the taxation of the income of a Federal judge. In this case the judges themselves were financially interested, for a decision would also affect the taxability of the salaries of the Supreme Court judges. Yet they sat. They need not have done so, if they had followed precedent—I refer to the example of Justice Taney, who wrote a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury complaining about the income tax of the Civil War Acts, and stating that this was the only way in which the matter could be brought to the attention of the proper authorities, as the Court itself could not pass upon a question which directly affected the judges themselves. But subsequent members of the Court did not show the same delicacy, nor did five of them show any hesitancy in deciding the question in their own favor. This was in the Evans case (4). The Court held, in spite of the language of the sixteenth amendment giving the Congress the power to tax income "from whatever source derived", the amendment did not include Federal judges.

This was sheer nullification of the sixteenth amendment, and exempted them from paying, as citizens, their just tax on their income.

Mr. Justice Holmes, dissenting, disposed of their arguments. He stated:

I think that the clause protecting the compensation of judges has no reference to a case like this. The exemption of salaries from diminution is intended to secure the independence of the judges, on the ground, as it was put by Hamilton in the Federalist (No. 79) that "a power over a man's subsistence amounts to a power over his will." That is a very good reason for preventing attempts to deal with a judge's salary as such, but seems to me no reason for exonerating him from the ordinary duties of a citizen which he shares with all others. To require a man to pay the taxes that all other men have to pay cannot possibly be made an instrument to attack his independence as a judge. I see nothing in the purpose of this clause of the Constitution to indicate that the judges were to be a privileged class, free from bearing their share of the cost of the institutions upon which their well-being if not their life depends.

And, then, holding such a tax valid, he said:

I do not see how judges can claim an abatement of their income tax on the ground that an item in their gross income is salary, when the power is given expressly to tax incomes from whatever source derived.

Mr. Justice Brandeis concurred with Judge Holmes.

Sir, despite 18 years of sacrifice of just and necessary revenue and the labor the Nation and State have expended to amend the Constitution, the Court, in the Evans case, replied, in effect: "The sixteenth amendment to the Constitution in this Court henceforth shall read as follows: 'The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income from whatever source derived, except from the income of judges of the United States, which shall be exempt.'"

Ladies and gentlemen, we are held responsible, and justly so, for the acts of Congress; and that responsibility is determined by looking at the "aye and nay" votes. Who among the present members of the Court voted "aye" and who voted "nay" in the case of Evans against Gore.

McReynolds, "aye"; Brandeis, "nay."

EXEMPTION OF STATE OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

Mr. Speaker, again in spite of the express language of the sixteenth amendment, giving the Congress the power to tax incomes from whatever source derived, the Court has prevented the Congress from taxing the salaries of employees and officers of counties, cities, and States if such officers and employees are engaged in what the Court determines to be an essential governmental function. I cannot refrain at this point from again referring to the crushing logic of Justice Holmes in the Evans case:

To require a man to pay taxes that all other men have to pay cannot possibly be made an instrument to attack his independence as a judge.

By the same token, to require officers or employees of such counties, cities, or States to pay the same tax on their salaries applied to all other citizens cannot interfere with the functioning of a State.

The number of such employees is reported as 2,500,000, while the Federal list is given as 800,000, excluding soldiers and sailors. The loss of this immense revenue lies at the door of the Supreme Court in disregarding the express language of the sixteenth amendment. Conservative estimates place the loss at at least $1,000,000,000, computed from 1913, the date of the first income-tax act under the sixteenth amendment.

Actually, as Mr. Brabson says, the effect has been to create a favored class of people who in many cases contribute nothing to the support of the Government which directly or indirectly gives them their employment. He quotes from Mr. Pegler:

The Governor of New York, for example, heads a long list of high-salaried public officials who do not have to pay any tax on their public salary. The Governor gets $25,000 a year, a figure which would make a marked man of him if he were working for a private employer. The Lieutenant Governor at $10,000 a year enjoys the same immunity, and so do the judges of the court of appeals, the appellate division, the supreme court, the court of claims, the court of special sessions, and the surrogates.

These learned and public-spirited ornaments of the State government draw from $15,000 to $22,500 a year and keep it all, whereas a single-handed clerk or mechanic employed by a business firm at $150 a month is expected to shower down to both National and State Treasuries. The members of the New York Legislature receive $2,500 a year, or roughly twice as much for their part-time work as the taxpaying $100 a month, but they, too, are constitutional officers and therefore exempt.

Mr. Brabson continues:

Strangely enough, the widespread character of these exemptions and the extent of the loss in the Federal revenue is not generally appreciated. It is very doubtful if the average taxpayer in New York City, for example, has the least idea of how many of his fellow citizens with substantial incomes are exempted from contributing one cent directly to the support of the Federal Government.

Mr. Brabson presents a table—inserted in the appendixes—in which he calls attention to the serious fact that the percentage of taxable returns has fallen from 26 to the 1,000 of population in 1917, to 14 in the year 1935.

Interpreting the table, Mr. Brabson says:

If we examine the above figures carefully, we find that the ratio of nontaxable incomes to taxable incomes in the United States is appalling. For example, we have upon authority of the Bureau of Labor Statistics that in 1933 there were approximately 41,000,000 persons gainfully employed in the country. Add to that 10,000,000, the number, by conservative estimate, who are not employed but received income from various sources. The total is 51,000,000 subject to tax. Out of that total of potential taxpayers in 1933 we find that less than 2,000,000 actually paid any Federal income tax; that is, only 1.39 percent of our citizens are paying a direct tax in support of the Federal Government.

The question of what is an essential governmental function, according to the Court, cannot be stated in terms of universal application. For this reason the Law Reports are filled with decisions resulting in confusion and enormous administrative expense to the Treasury. The decisions of the Court itself are not consistent. In the Flint case (5) the Court held that the supplying of water by a city was not a governmental function. In the Brush case (6) the Court held that the supplying of water was a governmental function.

ORIGIN OF SOVEREIGNTY FICTION

Mr. Speaker, why this courthouse exemption of public salaries, despite the specific declaration of the sixteenth amendment; well, the courts still hark back to a century-old decision to exempt such officeholders and the income from public bonds. They unjustly attribute their conclusion to the authority of Judge Marshall.

"The power to tax is the power to destroy", said Judge Marshall. But when did he say it, and what was the subject before the Court? The judge said this in 1819, nearly a century before the adoption of the sixteenth amendment. And what kind of a tax was he considering? Was it a necessary tax laid impartially on all? Certainly not. It was a discriminating tax designed to obstruct the Treasury operations of the Government, and not to secure revenue.

Mr. Speaker, we are all familiar with the bitter struggle which attended the establishment of the first United States Bank, judged necessary to the functioning of the Government. In 1816 its charter was renewed. It was authorized to issue bank notes which should be legal tender in payment of Government debts, and to establish branches. It established such a branch in Baltimore. Now, sir, the old privilege enjoyed by private banks of issuing notes which functioned as a paper currency was a highly profitable privilege. Private bankers within the States opposed these Federal bank branches with their crowning advantage of issuing such legal-tender currency. To the State legislature these disappointed bankers went and secured the passage in 1818 of the following act:

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That if any bank has established, or shall without authority from the State first had and obtained, establish any branch, office of discount and deposit, or office of pay and receipt, in any part of this State, it shall not be lawful for the said branch office of discount and deposit, or office of pay and receipt, to issue notes in any manner, of any other denomination than $5, $10, $20, $50, $100, $500, and $1,000, and no note shall be issued except upon stamped paper of the following denominations; that is to say, every $5 note shall be upon a stamp of 10 cents; every $10 note upon a stamp of 20 cents; every $20 note upon a stamp of 30 cents; every $50 note upon a stamp of 50 cents; every $100 note upon a stamp of $1; every $500 note upon a stamp of $10; and every $1,000 note upon a stamp of $20, which paper shall be furnished by the treasurer of the western shore, under the direction of the Governor and council, to be paid for upon delivery: Provided always, That any institution of the above description may relieve itself from the operation of the provisions aforesaid by paying annually, in advance, to the treasurer of the western shore, for the use of the State, the sum of $15,000.

Sir, it is obvious that the act was intended to drive the United States branch bank out of Baltimore, and that the act was not intended to raise revenue for the State.

Said Daniel Webster, in discussing the act:

The sum called for is not assessed on property nor deducted from profits or income. It is a direct imposition on the power, privilege, or franchise of the corporation.

The act was not applied to banks generally, but only to banks not chartered by the State of Maryland. Its application to the United States bank and its branches in that day was just what its application would be today to the Federal Reserve banks, a direct assault on the operation of a Government function. What else could Marshall have done? The State banks were endeavoring, in 1818, to do to the United States banks just what the Government found it necessary to do later to issues of bank-note currency by the private State banks, with its 10-percent tax, namely, tax such currency to death.

EXEMPTION OF INCOMES—PUBLIC BONDS

I shall now discuss the losses of revenue resulting from the Court's exemption of income-tax payers from the inclusion in their taxable income of income they secure from interest on county, city, or State bonds. It is estimated that the loss of revenue from this source (1913–37) amounts to at least $2,000,000,000.

How comes this exemption? Well, sir, despite the sixteenth amendment the Court has held that the Federal Government has no authority "to lay and collect taxes upon income from whatever source derived", if the source was a county, city, or State.

Mr. Speaker, may I say that the present Chief Justice, whose great ability inspires the respect of his countrymen of all classes, had himself pronounced judgment on that subject. He was Governor of the State of New York when the income-tax amendment was submitted for ratification to the States. What did he say? Speaking specifically of the income from county, municipal, and State securities, Governor Hughes in his message of January 5, 1910, declared:

It is certainly significant that the words "from whatever source derived", have been introduced into the proposed amendment as if it were the intention to make it impossible for the claim to be urged that the income from any property, even though it consist of the bonds of the State or of a municipality organized by it, will be removed from the reach of the taxing power of the Federal Government.

The Court's latest pronouncement on this question was in the Ashton case May 25, 1936, in which the Court said (7):

Notwithstanding the broad grant of power "to levy and collect taxes, our opinions here plainly show that Congress could not levy a tax on the bonds issued by respondent or upon income derived therefrom."

This decision created a class of tax-exempt citizens and securities which runs into the billions. Here again, sir, the sixteenth amendment has been "altered" to read:

Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income from whatever source derived: Provided, however, That the salaries of employees or officers of city, county, or State shall not be included as a part of their income, nor shall the interest derived by any citizen or corporation from any bond of any county, city, or State be included in his income for the purpose of taxation.

Mr. Speaker, it is a favorite maxim of the courts that men must be held to intend the natural consequences of their acts. If this be so as to judges, as it is to us, who are the judges who pronounced this judgment vetoing in effect the higher brackets in the income-tax law as applied to the swollen incomes of the country. Let us read the yeas and nays of this Ashton case.

Yeas—McReynolds, Sutherland, Hughes, Butler, Roberts, Van Devanter.

Nays—Cardozo, Brandeis, Stone.

The facts force the statement that a majority behave as if they had entered the lists for the vendetta against the income-tax principle declared by Justice Field. Hear him in the Pollock case:

The income-tax law under consideration is marked by discriminating features which affect the whole law. It discriminates between those who receive an income of $4,000 and those who do not. * * * Where is the course of usurpation to end? The present assault upon capital is but the beginning. It will be but the stepping stone to others, larger and more sweeping, until our political contests will become a war of the poor against the rich; a war constantly growing in intensity and bitterness.

This defiance of the sixteenth amendment provides large incomes with an election to veto the higher tax rates when applicable to them. Would the public budget maker of any other country submit to such vetoes of his tax measures after approval by the legislative authority? How about the British Premier? Can the resident of England slip his investments into colonial bonds to escape the payment of income taxes? Will any British judge assume to stay the arm of the British collector for such a purpose? What should happen to the British budget if he did? Nay, rather, you ask, What would happen to the British judge? He knows too well that he would find himself the scorn of Democrats and Tories throughout the Empire, his office vacant, too, and his judicial robes torn from his back.

OKLAHOMA STATE LEASE CASES

Sir, a most important example of the misuse of the State sovereignty fiction is shown in the Coronado Oil and Gas Company case (8). In that case lands granted by the United States to the State of Oklahoma for the support of common schools and dedicated to that purpose by the State constitution were leased by the State to a private company for extraction of oil and gas, the State reserving a part of the gross production, the proceeds of which were paid into public-school fund, and the lessee taking the remainder. The Supreme Court held that under this lease the Coronado Oil & Gas Co. was an instrumentality of the State exercising a governmental function and that the Government had no right to tax the income derived through the lease. This was true, the Court concluded, although the income received by the private corporation did not inure to the benefit of the State but inured entirely to the benefit of the private corporation. It booted not that the corporation entered into this lease for its own profit in a purely private business undertaking. Mr. Justice Brandeis pointed out that vast private incomes were being given immunity from State and Federal taxation by this decision. Many of the large corporations of the country have been leasing State lands which contain minerals and have made enormous profits. It is certainly unnecessary and unjust to exempt, Justice Brandeis points out, this vast private income from taxation. The decision resulted in discrimination against competing corporations and it has been estimated has already cost the Government almost $3,000,000,000 in revenues. (C.)

COMMUNITY PROPERTY EVASIONS

Mr. Speaker, we are all familiar with a clause in our Constitution most fundamental to the existence of the Union. It is the clause granting supremacy to the Federal statute in case of a conflict with a State act or even a State constitution. It reads as follows:

> The Constitution and the laws of the United States * * * shall be the supreme law of the land; * * * anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding.

The Constitution also provides that all—

> Excises (income tax) shall be uniform throughout the United States.

Mr. Speaker, the Congress, in its income-tax law of 1926, provided a schedule of rates which was impartially uniform as to the incomes of its citizens. This statute came into conflict with contentions set up under State laws, and the Court in disregard of both the supremacy and uniformity requirement of the Constitution gave supremacy to the tax-evading contentions under the State law. I refer to decisions relating to "community-property" income.

A married Member of Congress with no dependents, from any one of 40 of the States, whose total net income consists of his salary, $10,000, would deduct an exemption of $2,500, and under the present law pay an income tax of $415. But in disregard of both the rule of supremacy and the rule of uniformity, the Court majority has held that if he comes from any one of eight States in the Union that have an inherited peculiar Spanish or French law applicable to married persons, he can split his return and attribute one-half of his salary to his wife, so that each will have an income of $5,000. When they both deduct their exemptions, each of them will pay $130, that is a total of $260, or $155 less than his colleague from Virginia. The eight States are as follows: Washington, New Mexico, California, Arizona, Texas, Idaho, Louisiana, and Nevada. What the Congressman may do with his salary in those eight States, may be done, because of these Court interferences, by any salaried married man in such States not merely as to his salary but to all his income, though it runs into the millions. And here, sir, are some further examples of the discrimination:

Business	Net income	Tax in the 40 States	Split tax return in the 8 States	Saving by splitting tax return
Physicians, lawyers, editors, authors	$10,500	$458	$278	$180
Railway presidents	52,500	9,664	6,028	3,616
Presidents, large corporations	102,000	33,944	19,288	14,656
Movie actors	202,500	96,944	67,888	29,056

Commenting generally on the abuse of splitting of income-tax returns by husband and wife in all the States the Secretary also stated:

> It is evident that this situation is the direct cause of numerous transfers, sales, assignments, and other arrangements between husbands and wives which have no real basis and are made because of a desire to avoid income taxes otherwise due. For example, property which has appreciated in value is transferred to the spouse who can sell it with the least tax liability. Again, property which has depreciated in value is transferred to the spouse with the larger income, in order that he may realize the greatest benefit from sale at a loss. Moreover, the present law encourages sales by one spouse directly to the other, and the courts are presented with the difficult and even impossible problem of determining whether such sales were bona fide or fraudulent. In the most notorious recent case, the jury acquitted the husband from a criminal charge in such a situation. The income taxes which the husband sought to avoid in this manner amounted to over $1,000,000.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the Government attempted in a series of cases to apply its tax uniformly as required by the Constitution and force the spouse earning the income or having the beneficial control of it to report it for tax purposes, and the matter was carried to the Supreme Court. In the Poe case and others (9) the Court ruled against the Government and gave supremacy to the State law for these tax evaders of the Federal Constitution and income-tax statute. The Court said that the Federal statute, which taxed the "net income of every person" taxed the income as determined by State law though the compensation was earned by the spouse the Government was trying to tax; though the Court admitted that under the State law he could deal with it practically as his own. In the Hopkins case the Court said in referring to the Texas laws:

> They provide, as is usual in States having the community system, that the husband shall have power of management and control such that he may deal with community property very much as if it were his own.

The income-tax law justly requires the spouse earning such income to return it as his own. In no other way could the income-tax liability of earners of income be made uniform throughout the United States. I feel that the Court's decisions violate both the statute and the Constitution. The Court rulings have already resulted in a loss of revenue of over $200,000,000.

EXEMPTION OF STOCK DIVIDENDS

Speaking of loopholes, Mr. Speaker, the loophole opened by the Eisner decision is a loophole big enough to swallow the Bank of England. It is, besides, the monstrous mother of all the great loopholes which your committees are now investigating, in an effort—and I hope not a vain effort—to save the just and essential revenues of the United States.

Ladies and gentlemen, suppose yourselves as members of the Ways and Means Committee and a case like this were presented: A lawyer has been working for a realty company for a year, which owes him, say, $2,500 for his services. At the end of the year the company's president persuades the lawyer to take payment of his fee by way of a deed for one of its lots for which it paid $2,500. Would you say that the value of the lot should not be counted as part of the attorney's income for that year?

Or suppose a case of another corporation which owed its attorney $5,000 for services and elected, with his consent, to make payment by assigning him 50 shares of its stock having the market value of $5,000. Would you not feel that the market value of this stock should be counted in the income of the attorney? There can be but one answer to this question. The Ways and Means Committee gave that answer when it provided that such payments of income by way of property transfer should be considered as part of the taxable income.

Now, let us suppose, as members of the committee, you found that sometimes in corporate financing the stockholders preferred to take their dividends in the form of paid-up stock leaving the cash itself in the company treasury for extension of the plant. What would be your disposition? You probably would not wish to deny the stockholders and the corporation this method of securing additional capital; but certainly you would not feel disposed to say that this method of paying the dividend should excuse the profiting stockholder from including this actual earned income as part of his income for taxation. You would say that the shareholder should be treated just as you had treated the lawyer in the above examples, just as the member of a partnership, as to undistributed profits; and that the value of the property received be entered as a part of his taxable income.

Well, Mr. Speaker, preposterous as it seems to common sense, the processes of courthouse ratiocination reached a different conclusion as to stock dividends. The Court held in the case of Eisner against Macomber that stock dividends representing distributable net income retained by the company should not be accounted as income as to the stockholder; that is, should not be subject to income taxes in his hands, unless and until the stocks were sold by the stockholder (10).

Following the decision (1920), as we need not be surprised, corporations in the United States in 1922 issued $3,348,050,000 in stock dividends (about the same as in cash dividends), nearly a billion of which sum represented dividend income of the Standard Oil Companies. In the years 1922–34 such stock dividends, amounting to $9,631,207,000 have been issued, on all of which the shareholders have escaped paying their surtaxes as individual members of society.

WHAT DO THE BRITISH DO IN SUCH CASES?

Mr. Speaker, in other countries like Great Britain the income or profit need not be distributed to the stockholder or be in coin of the realm. If earned for the shareholder, it is taxed as if earned by a partner in a partnership, and why not? The amendment does not provide that the income must be in cash. Congress properly—I should add wisely—provided the real income of the citizen should be considered. This income may take many and varied forms. One of the forms it has taken is the distribution of income by a corporation to its stockholders, of their profits, in the form of paid-up stock in place of the cash.

Well, sir, the Court in the Eisner case, by a 5-to-4 decision, held that dividends received in such paid-up stock were not income. This decision has cost the Government a loss of $1,060,000,000. I leave further comment to Justices Brandeis and Holmes. Mr. Justice Brandeis in his dissenting opinion said:

> If stock dividends representing profits are held exempt from taxation under the sixteenth amendment, the owners of the most successful businesses in America will, as the facts in this case illustrate, be able to escape taxation on a large part of what is actually their income. So far as their profits are represented by stock received as dividends, they will pay these taxes, not upon their income but only the income of their income. That such a result was intended by the people of the United States when adopting the sixteenth amendment is inconceivable. In terse, comprehensive language, befitting the Constitution, they empowered Congress "to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived." They intended to include thereby everything which by reasonable understanding can fairly be regarded as income. That stock dividends representing profits are so regarded, not only by the plain people but by investors and financiers, and by most of the courts of the country, is shown beyond peradventure by their acts and by their utterances.

And note the terse statement of Mr. Justice Holmes:

> The known purpose of this amendment was to get rid of nice questions as to what might be direct taxes, and I cannot doubt that most people not lawyers would suppose when they voted for it that they put a question like the present to rest. I am of opinion that the amendment justifies the tax.

But mark you, in order to reach its 5-to-4 conclusions the majority had to reverse a full Court judgment in the case of Collector v. Hubbard (12 Wall. 1) where the Court upheld the right of Congress, under the Civil War Income Tax Acts, to tax a stockholder's interest in the accumulated earnings of the corporation prior to the declaration of the dividend. The Court, reversing itself, now holds in the Eisner case that its decision in Collector against Hubbard must be regarded as being overruled by its decision in the Pollock case holding the income tax of 1894 unconstitutional. But the people expressly overruled the Pollock case by the adoption of the sixteenth amendment. Because of the Eisner case many of our wealthy individuals tie up their income in corporations and thus avoid the payment of the surtaxes due, or take their dividends in paid-up stock—that is, stock dividends—and thus avoid the higher brackets. By preventing us from taxing this income to the shareholder, when earned by the corporation, the Court has diminished the revenues of the Government by at least $7,000,000,000.

EVASION OF SURTAXES

Ladies and gentlemen, one of the most vicious forms of tax evasion has been the accumulation of surplus in corporations controlled by such taxpayers under the Eisner case in order to avoid the payment of their just shares of surtaxes. All this in virtue of the Eisner case. I quote from the President's message of March 3, 1936:

> The accumulation of surplus in corporations controlled by taxpayers with large incomes is encouraged by the present freedom of undistributed corporate income from surtaxes.
>
> This method of evading existing surtaxes constitutes a problem. Thus the Treasury estimates that during the calendar year 1936 over 4½ billion dollars of corporate income will be withheld from stockholders. In 1 year alone the Government will be deprived of revenues amounting to over $1,300,000,000 * * *.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if the Court would enforce our tax on these undistributed earnings of shareholders like we tax the partners on their undistributed shares of the profits of the partnership, we would not have this problem of tax avoidance. They do not have it in Great Britain, in France, and other countries. But neither do they have meddling courts to "run amuck" with the revenues. Is there anything in the Constitution that prevents the Congress from taxing undistributed dividends as it taxes undistributed profits of members of partnerships? There is not. In fact, under the same Constitution which we have today and had before the sixteenth amendment, the Supreme Court held in the Collector Case that this could be done.

Why does a man incorporate his yacht, putting his income, property, all his shares, and the like into the control of a yacht corporation? Why does he do it? Under the Eisner case such income will all be paid to the yacht corporation. The yacht corporation, of which he is president, and the rest of his family, the stockholders, will simply distribute back in salaries to the president and subofficials as much of his income to the family, during the year, as he finds desirable. Meanwhile the undistributed income escapes taxation under the higher brackets. Here is a circular, Forty-seven Ways to Save Taxes, issued by specialists in taxation, and most of those loopholes are loopholes traceable to the Court's decision in Eisner against Macomber (10).

GIFTS IN CONTEMPLATION OF DEATH AND IN AVOIDANCE OF ESTATE TAXES

You know we have such an institution as an estate tax. It is certainly a very liberal one in the lower brackets. Not until the estate reaches $50,000 is any tax whatever imposed. In order, however, to avoid the estate tax under the higher brackets, scheming individuals were engaged in the practice of making gifts to their families. Anticipating their deaths, they made gifts to their heirs and thus escaped the estate taxes.

Very well. Congress filled that loophole with an act providing that where the gift was made within 2 years of the death of the decedent there should be a presumption that it was made in contemplation of death and that the estate tax should apply. What had been the practice of other governments? Just the same as this of ours. Our administration found that with respect to those gifts made in actual contemplation of death, without the help of this 2-year presumption, the testimony as to the decedent's purpose, his condition, his prospects of life, was all locked up with his family and family doctor; and I am told that in those contests the Government never succeeds in winning more than about 5 percent of the controversies. The British lawmaker, facing the same problem that we have to face, met that situation by passing a law creating a presumption that any such gift, made within 3 years of the actual death of the decedent, should be treated as a gift made in contemplation of death; so that the estate taxes should become applicable. Did we have the same power to pass that act and for the same purpose, that the British House of Commons enjoys? Certainly. Our acts were perfectly constitutional. It is the decisions of the courts that are unconstitutional.

England requires all gifts made within 3 years prior to death to be subject to her estate duty. But the Supreme Court said our 2-year act violated the due-process clause of the fifth amendment. The argument was that to levy a tax upon an assumption of fact which the taxpayer was forbidden to controvert was arbitrary and unreasonable. Well, a man is presumed to know the law. Suppose he does not. Is he allowed to dispute the presumption? In fact, this provision was a necessary measure to prevent tax avoidance and is a reasonable exercise of the power to lay taxes. To prevent us from taking steps to overcome avoidance of our taxes is an arbitrary interference by the Court with the power granted to levy taxes. And, since tax experts have explained to their clients that this conclusive presumption has been nullified, our "contemplation of death" provision can be avoided with ease. This decision has cost us about $8,000,000 and will probably cost us considerable more in the future. The Court has thus denied the right of both Government and States to protect their estate-tax revenues by such provisions, claiming that they violate the due-process clause of the fourteenth amendment (11). Mark the entry of old "due process" again, the courthouse Sanson of nullification, whose versatile ax is always handy when privilege demands the head of an offending statute.

INJUNCTIONS AGAINST COLLECTION OF TAXES

Mr. Speaker, on top of all this destructive attack on our legislative functioning with respect to taxation, comes a flagrant attack on the executive functioning by misuse of injunctions against its collection of the taxes, and in defiance of a necessary statute, as was well stated by Mr. Justice Miller in the famous Cheatham case (12).

If there existed in the courts, State or National, any general power of impeding or controlling the collection of taxes or relieving the hardship incident to taxation, the very existence of government might be placed in the power of a hostile judiciary.

But, sir, no such anticipatory interference by the courts is necessary; the internal revenue laws give the taxpayer the right to sue for a recovery of a tax after payment, if he believes it not justly due.

Yet the courts still insist, in many cases in defiance of statute, in also giving him a suit to prevent collection of the tax, thereby creating an unfair situation as to taxpayers generally and also thwarting the collection of the Government revenues.

This injunctive interference is in violation of an act enacted in 1867 still on the books. It reads as follows:

REVISED STATUTES, SECTION 3224

No suit for the purpose of restraining the assessment or collection of any tax shall be maintained in any court.

The reason for this statute is that, as courts are without authority to equalize taxes or to make assessments, such suits would enable those liable for taxes in some amount to delay payment or possibly to escape their lawful burden, and so to thwart the collection of revenues.

Nevertheless this is what the Court is doing and inspiring the lower courts to do. In the Pollock case the Court permitted Pollock, a common-share holder of the Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., to maintain an action to restrain the Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. from paying the income tax assessed against it. Mr. Justice White pointed out that the Court should not permit the Federal statute to be thus evaded in a subterfuge suit between a corporation and a stockholder. Yet the Court did, and is even extending the practice to permitting preferred shareholders to maintain such an action (13). The collection of our first income tax, under the act of 1913, was hampered by the Court permitting a stockholder to bring such an action to challenge its validity (14). And having decided to disregard this Federal statute by indirection, the Court then proceeded to disregard it directly by even permitting certain taxpayers themselves to maintain such a suit. I refer to the Miller and Hill cases (15) sustaining the lower courts in injunctions preventing the collection of taxes. It was Mr. Justice Stone, in his dissenting opinion in the Oleomargarine case, who said:

In my opinion, R. S. 3224, which says that "No suit for the purpose of restraining the assessment or collection of any tax shall be maintained in any court", cannot rightly be construed as permitting the present suit, whose sole purpose is to enjoin the collection of a tax. Enacted in 1867, this statute, for more than 60 years, has been consistently applied as precluding relief, whatever the equities alleged.

How much more equitable it would have been if the Court had required all the processing taxes to have been paid into the Federal Treasury. We could then have avoided the windfall tax and allowed refunds to those justly entitled. This was the procedure the Court adopted in the child-labor cases. Most of the processors would have been glad to pay this money into the Treasury because of competitive conditions, retaining the goodwill of their customers. To a large extent, the present unfortunate situation has been created because of interference by injunctions issued by the courts in defiance of the above statute.

III. WHAT OF IT?

And now you ask, my colleagues, "What of it?"

Well, ladies and gentlemen, look at the chart and its $16,000,000,000 of delinquent revenue.

Loss in Federal revenue because of Supreme Court decisions

Repudiation of the income tax	$1,500,000,000
Exemption of State securities	2,000,000,000
Exemption of State officers and employees	1,000,000,000
Community property-tax exemption	200,000,000
State lease cases	3,000,000,000
Exemption of stock dividends	1,060,000,000
Evasion of surtaxes	7,000,000,000
Statute of limitation cases	11,000,000
Foreign tax credits to foreign political subdivisions	2,000,000
Exemption of real estate from Federal estate tax	5,000,000
Invalidating conclusive presumption as to gifts in contemplation of death (estate taxes)	8,000,000
Exempting from estate tax trusts in which grantor retained interest	25,000,000
Estate-tax decisions of 1935 exempting family trusts	25,000,000
Invalidation of Agricultural Adjustment Act	1,017,000,000
Total	16,853,000,000

The tax situation created by the attitude of the Judicial Department toward the Legislative and Executive Departments cannot be fully commented on in a single address—but one comment forces utterance: "Verily, verily, the income tax is an unloved stepchild in that Court." The hate of Judge Field, father of the "due process" interpolation, the Jeffreys of Social Justice, rests like a blight upon it. The majority judges seem ready to give it a beating for any litigant. The record, I submit, justifies the statement that with regard to the public revenue the Court cannot be regarded as a conservative institution.

SUPREMACY OF A CLASS

Mr. Speaker, the most significant fact disclosed by the discussion is that a single class—the courthouse barristers, have assumed complete supremacy over the statutes of State and Nation. They alone can speak unbidden in the courthouse. Is there anybody here who would give such supremacy to a single class? Is there any class wise enough, good enough? Would you give it to the lawyers alone? Why not humanize it with some doctors, and with clergymen, who will insist on talking duties as well as rights—and the engineers, the men who construct and who will count and measure to be sure the machine will work. And would you omit men of business, farmers, and the Nation's workers? Leave it to the lawyers alone—the lawyer "often in error, but never in doubt." Daniel Webster surely was a great lawyer and this is what he thought of his profession.

Accuracy and diligence are much more necessary to a lawyer than great comprehension of mind. * * * His business is to refine, define, split hairs, look into authorities, and compare cases. If he would be a great lawyer, he must first consent to become a great drudge."

If the lawyer a century ago must have been a case drudge, what now, since the cases reported have multiplied by more than 10?

Keep in mind, ladies and gentlemen, that this supremacy in Government has been taken over by the courthouse where only a single class may speak unbidden; only lawyers at the bar or on the bench, only they, may speak unbidden in that forum.

They style themselves "constitutional lawyers", and would make a great mystery, and have made a great mess of our beloved Constitution. It is impossible for me to have confidence in the good judgment even if I do force confidence in its honest intentions. "They cannot be bought", it is said. Certainly not. I do not believe these "sea-green incorruptibles" could be bought with a mountain of gold. But as Woodrow Wilson once said of another class: "They needn't be bought—they already stand bought by their system."

LEGAL FICTIONS—REVENUE

Mr. Speaker, when you submit a subject to a courthouse, you invite a wholly different mental reaction from that required of the lawmaker's mind. Let me say there is such a thing as lawyer sense that does not make common sense. In saying that, I intend no sneer at the legal profession. I am a lawyer myself. Assistant Attorney General Jackson, the other day, gave a good illustration of this. He said he was the head of some revenue bureau that desired to know at just what time a man's marriage changed his status for taxation purposes. The question was referred to a brilliant young lawyer in the Bureau. He reported shortly. You may know, we have two legal maxims that lawyers often resort to. One is that the law does not regard a fraction of a day. So the day of the marriage would be out. The second, in giving notice, the day of service is not counted. So the young attorney reported, on that legal reasoning, that the effective marriage of John and Mary did not occur until a day and a night after the wedding. The Attorney General said that he could find no fault with the legal reasoning, but he tore up the opinion.

One hundred years ago Judge Marshall, in Maryland against McCulloch, dropped the following gem: "The power to tax is the power to destroy." That sentence has since become one of our fictions of the law. Now, there is another fiction that each State is a sovereign; the swami of the courthouse accept both fictions literally.

Let me illustrate. The State of Maryland is a sovereign State, it is argued. There you have a beautiful legal fiction built on a half-truth. We all know, however, that no State now a member of the American Union is a sovereign. None of them except Texas has ever been a sovereign, has ever exercised the first attribute of sovereign power, the making of treaties, or the conducting of wars. What is the virtue of these fictions in a courthouse? A tax litigant comes in, the owner of a lot of municipal, county, or State bonds: "You must not count in my income any income I get from these bonds, Mr. Federal Government. If you start taxing my income from these Maryland bonds, maybe you will destroy the sovereign State of Maryland." Now, there is a good example of courthouse sense that is not common sense. To yield supremacy in the Nation to a tribunal made up exclusively of lawyers fills me with a feeling of dismay.

But I would not be misunderstood about lawyers. The lawyer acting as a pilot to steer his clients through the pitfalls of a greatly complicated system of jurisprudence I warmly respect. He is a worthy servant of society, but a lawyer hired to distort and defeat the social will, to plan escapes for marauding clients, I despise.

Are there such clients? Listen to our leading financier, J. P. Morgan, who is quoted as saying: "Taxation is a legal question pure and simple, and not a moral one." Apparently the right of society is to be nothing better than a struggle between the United States and the superlawyers of the wealthy.

MIDDLE CLASS VIRTUALLY EXEMPT FROM TAXATION

Mr. Speaker, if we may regard the married couple without dependents as entering the middle class when the net income reaches $4,000 a year and as emerging into opulency when the net income reaches $25,000, then so trivial are the income-tax rates imposed that it is fair to say that the middle class is virtually exempt from these taxes.

I am not one of those who is carried away by the illusion that we can rely on skyscraping rates on the skyscraping incomes or fortunes as a sufficient source of revenue. I have no patience with these Robin Hoods in taxation. Look, if you will, at the skyline of New York. See its skyscrapers jut out like dragons' teeth, 100 stories, 75 stories, 50 stories. That is the visual image you retain of New York; but New York is not a 100-story town, it is not a 50-story town, it is not a 20, not a 10-story town, and if its budget makers had to rely on even skyscraper rates on its skyscrapers for revenue, the schools would close, its firemen would drop their hose, and the police resign. A skyscraper budget will not suffice. We cannot rely on it alone. And why should we? The very rich are not the only debtors to society, even though they are its chief debtors, judged by their often unearned or disproportionate gains from social aid and protection. The middle classes are also debtors and grossly delinquent debtors, too. I know how the $5,000, the $10,000 man feels about it. I know he says to himself, unless he is a very thoughtful man, "I earned this $5,000, this $10,000 myself, earned it all by my foresight and persistency. It is mine—all mine." The trouble with him is he forgets his big, silent partner—civilization, to whose prodigious aid he truly owes it nearly all—without whose cooperation, if indeed he had survived at all in the forest struggle, instead of a $5,000 or a $10,000 income, he would go hungry for his breakfast until he had caught an unwilling fish or trapped a fearsome rabbit. It is not easy, indeed, to fully picture our dependence on civilization in nearly every minute of our lives. Only the rare man, an Edison, a Lincoln, a Woodrow Wilson can render service to pay the debt. A husband and wife without children realizing today an income of $5,000 a year are getting more out of life than George and Martha Washington did.

I do not say it for approval, but when I measure all the debts I pay, in no instance is the quid pro quo as great as the services I receive through Government and its great gift, civilization. If all my other payments were rewarded as largely as my payment of taxes, in these benefits of civilization, the millionaire would seem insignificant in comparison. [Applause.]

Not self-pity but a little sane counsel is what we need. Perhaps we will take it from Benjamin Franklin—

> The taxes are, indeed, very heavy, and if those laid by the Government were the only ones we had to pay, we might more easily discharge them; but we have many others, and much more grievous to some of us. We are taxed twice as much by our idleness, three times as much by our pride, and four times as much by our folly; and from these taxes the commissioners cannot ease or deliver us by allowing an abatement.

To what, sir, do we owe all this, we, ourselves, the $10,000, the $5,000, the $3,000 man? I answer, to social order. And whence, to what do we owe social order? To government which supplies it and sustains civilization as the sun supplies heat and light to its planets.

What is the explanation of the trivial middle-class brackets, when we face an insolvent Treasury? There is such a thing as unconscious class discrimination, and I fear that the human material which composes our Congress has not shown itself fully proof against its subtle temptations. I, myself, belong to the middle class, and wish only to belong to it. If I understand the class, I wish to say that it will not thank its representatives in the Government for favors in taxation secured by putting the Government in peril. Rather would they not repel us with disgust. They know that this is a world of duties as well as of rights, and that their first duty is to maintain the great Government in which we are partners. They know that skyscraper taxation will not suffice. A demagogue may cry "Rights! Rights!" but they know that it is duties valiantly accepted which insure them the benefits of government with the civilization it alone can advance and sustain.

Sir, the middle class must do its part with others. We have big board bills to pay to nature for the drafts we have been making on our natural gifts—a denuded soil; a timberland destroyed; a flooded country to reclaim; exhausted gas and oil domains largely due to the excessive incomes which these decisions of the Court excuse from proper and necessary taxation. How great this bill of debt is to nature which is now demanding payment under penalty of flood and perhaps famine one can hardly guess, but it is not likely to be less than the cost of our highways.

Nor do our obligations cease with such restorative work. There is the great program of social security—a program, I predict, not likely to fall below a half billion dollars annually. Can any payment be longer stayed? Our board bill to Nature has long been overdue. Our duties with reference to social security are pressing ever harder upon us because of industrial vicissitudes; nor is the Federal Government alone concerned. Some 28 States have found it necessary to enter the income-tax field, creating severe problems in double taxation. The slightest contact with this subject of double taxation discloses enormities of injustice against taxpayers in some instances, which no worthy government can permit to continue. In my own view, it has become necessary that taxpayers who do pay their taxes without evasion, should receive remedial consideration, and it is my purpose on a later occasion to bring to the attention of the House a proposal under which the income taxes of the Nation and the States and perhaps some other excise taxes shall be levied as one tax, the proceeds to be shared between the respective States and the Federal Government on some equitable principle.

Mr. Speaker, I challenge the authorities versed in public finance to say how a just and adequate budget can be formed in the United States under the destructive limitations of these decisions. Where is the private financier who would tolerate such interference with his business budget? I appeal to the private financiers of the United States, who have important budgets to form and balance, whether they should undertake their responsibilities if their work after its completion was to be made the subject of such ex post facto veto. Suppose that having formed their budgets based upon the necessary predicated prices of their various products, after the expense of production had been incurred and the products delivered to their beneficiaries, it should still lie in the hands of outside parties to determine whether such and such of their debtors should be exempted. What would become of United States Steel Corporation or the Bell Telephone Co. if at any time a junto of legalists had the power, on reasoning which wholly ignored the factors governing the making of their budgets, to thus nullify all duty of payment for large parts of the expenditures involved? Sir, what would become of institutions so irresponsible in other lands, even though they called themselves courts, which should thus destroy the sustenance indispensable to government and social order?

IV. WHAT ARE YOU GOING TO DO ABOUT IT?

I confess, sir, as one member of the Committee on Ways and Means, charged with the duty of initiating revenue measures, a feeling of complete discouragement. The Court's revenue decisions make it impossible for me to draft a revenue bill which does not grossly and unjustly discriminate in favor of large classes able to pay, at the expense of other citizens whom I must make pay taxes for both. The recent corporation income tax is an example, for it illustrates to what devices the public financier has been driven by the outlawry of our power to tax earned dividends to the shareholder.

Again, what are we going to do about it? The constitutional amendment cannot be made clearer by constitutional amendment; still it is suggested that we proceed by such a course. If we can get two-thirds here, two-thirds in the Senate, and then get three-quarters of the States, then, according to the suggested amendment, we should be authorized to reverse a decision of the Court declaring an act of Congress unconstitutional provided we could get a two-thirds vote in the House and Senate in favor of such reversal as well. Why not require that the vote be unanimous all around? Does anybody think that under party government, which seems now to be the rule for democracy, two-thirds government is possible in a legislative body? The curse of the country is not government by majorities, but by such one-third minorities—generally mere recalcitrants.

The next suggestion is one that Hamilton and Marshall both made—namely, that the Congress, like the British Parliament, might reverse a legislative pronouncement of the Court which rendered nugatory one of its statutes.

Sir, a third suggestion is one I now make. It is that the Congress establish courts of the exchequer to pass on all questions of law or fact relating to the internal revenue, with original, exclusive, and final jurisdiction under article III. This is a court well known to the common law, still functioning in England. Our legislative powers to tax are couched in general but in indeterminate phrases whose construction calls for legislative discretion. It is the American court alone that assumes to substitute its views on such general phrases for that of the Parliament. It thinks it is wiser than Congress. It is not wiser. But suppose you act under article III and the court sets your statute aside. Would it be acting with more violence than it has shown in expunging the welfare clause, adulterating the due-process clause, or in exempting themselves and others from payment of income taxes? Suppose it should set it aside; what then? You have at last been brought up exactly to the point which the President had to face—a sure constitutional solution of the problem which courts could not nullify, and that is by a revision of the number of judges. It is by that very method, history shows us, that the House of Lords has been controlled through the centuries, and parliamentary democracy saved in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Speaker, it is apparent that the life of the Government cannot be longer left subject to these destructive decisions. There is no escape from their reconsideration and reversal by the Court. It is the only reasonable course open. The Constitution cannot be made clearer by amendment than it has already been made by amendment. Then we must amend the Court statute. It will be better to amend the Court statute than to allow it to drive us to printing-press money, wreck the public credit, and perhaps wreck the Republic.

Ladies and gentlemen, we must face the issue:

If we would have public employees pay taxes on their income like others, we must reform the Court and reverse Brush Co. against Michigan.

If we would have income from public securities taxed like income from private securities, we must reform the Court and reverse National Life Insurance Co. against United States.

If we would have those exploiting our gas, oil, and mineral resources under State leases pay their taxes like others, we must reform the Court and reverse the Coronado Gas Co. case.

If we would put an end to the unjust discrimination between the income taxes payable by married couples, we must reform the Court and reverse Poe against Seaborn.

If the judges are to pay their taxes like others, we must reform the Court and reverse Evans against Gore.

If we would have the earned income of stockholders taxed like the earned income of partners and other individuals, we must reform the Court and reverse the 5-to-4 decision in Eisner against Macomber, that monstrous mother of loopholes whose depredations have already cost the Treasury more than all its expenditures to meet the depression.

Let that eminent Court reverse these 5-to-4 decisions. It need not be taken as humiliation on its part. Indeed, a spirit of humility is the surest sign of wisdom, as has been displayed often in the history of our own fortunate country. If, Mr. Speaker, they will cooperate with us, if they will reverse these death-dealing decisions on the public revenues, then a future of hope and splendor opens out for the judges, for ourselves, and our country. If they refuse, Mr. Speaker, if they deny to this Congress the powers it needs to exercise, if at a time when, like a half dozen industrialized nations, we are facing the most difficult problems the human family has ever had to face, if still they shall obstruct us in the necessary program now, as a preceding decision obstructed our fathers on the subject of slavery, then the outlook is dread indeed.

Spirit of Washington, save us from such a fate. [Applause.]

REFERENCES TO CASES CITED

(1) Pollock v. Farmers Loan (157 U. S. 429; 158 U. S. 601).
(2) Pacific Ins. Co. v. Soule (7 Wall. 433).
Springs v. U. S. (102 U. S. 586, 602).
(3) Hylton Carriage case (3 Dallas, 171).
(4) Evans v. Gore (253 U. S. 245).
(5) Flint v. Stone Tracy (220 U. S. 107).
(6) Brush v. Commissioner Int. Rev., March 15, 1937.
(7) Ashton v. Cameron Co. Water Imp., May 25, 1936.
(8) Coronado Oil & Gas Co. case (285 U. S. 393).
(9) Poe v. Seaborn (282 U. S. 122).
Goodell v. Koch (282 U. S. 118).
U. S. v. Malcolm (282 U. S. 792).
Bender v. Pfaff (282 U. S. 127).
Hopkins v. Bacon (282 U. S. 122).
(10) Eisner v. Macumber (252 U. S. 189).
(11) Schlesinger v. Wis. (270 U. S. 230).
(12) Cheatham case (92 U. S. 85).
(13) Ashwonder v. Tenn. (207 U. S. 288).
(14) Brushaber v. Union Pac. Ry. (240 U. S. 1).
(15) Miller v. Standard Nut, etc. (284 U. S. 509).
Hill v. Wallace (259 U. S. 386).

APPENDIXES

Double exemption from taxation.
Exemption of salaries, city, county, State, and Federal employees.
Public employees taxed under Civil War income acts.
Federal judges exemption.
Decline of income-tax returns since 1917.
Volume of tax-exempt securities, table.
Extent of Federal income-tax exemption.
Conflict of State laws with Federal taxation.
State leases, oil, gas, ore exempt.
Community property exemption.
Table showing rates for split income of husband.
Foreign tax credits.
Gift taxes.
Restriction on levying gift tax on donee.
Gifts as income to the recipient.
Gifts of property, grantor retaining income.
Gift taxes retroactive.
Estate taxes.
Estate taxes decisions of 1935.
State taxation—Federal court frustration of.
Losses on surtaxes caused by court's exemption of stock dividends.

APPENDIX A

DOUBLE EXEMPTIONS

So extreme and unreasonable has been the attitude of the Supreme Court in this matter, that it declared unconstitutional a provision enacted by the Congress in the Revenue Act of 1921 to prevent the income of tax-exempt securities from having a double effect in reducing income which was taxable even under the decisions of the Supreme Court. I refer to the decision of the National Life Insurance Co., decided June 4, 1928. To understand that case, it should be remembered that the system of taxing income of life-insurance companies was completely revised in 1921 by a plan based upon an agreement entered into between the Government and insurance companies and made applicable to the Revenue Act of 1921 and subsequent years. Under this plan life-insurance companies were not taxable upon all of their income, but only upon their income from interest, dividends, and rents. The principal concession made by the companies under this plan was in regard to the treatment of tax-exempt interest. To show how the plan works out I am presenting an actual case showing the computation both under the statute and under the Supreme Court decision.

Computation under Federal Income Tax Act of 1921

Income:
Tax-exempt interest	$1,000,000
Dividends, rents, and other income	2,000,000
Total income	3,000,000
Deductions:
Miscellaneous	100,000
Tax-exempt interest	1,000,000
Four percent of mean of reserve [1] in excess of tax-exempt interest ($2,400,000 less $1,000,000)	1,400,000
Total deductions	2,500,000
Taxable net income (income less deductions)	500,000

[1] Mean of reserve funds required by law, $60,000,000.

It will be seen that under this computation the taxpayer having secured one deduction for the tax-exempt interest is not entitled under the law as enacted by Congress to use such interest again in computing the deduction based upon 4 percent of the mean of the reserve. However, the Supreme Court has held that it is unconstitutional to deny the taxpayer this double deduction. Under the Supreme Court decision, the taxpayer would get the entire 4 percent of the mean of the reserve as a deduction, namely, $2,400,000, and, therefore, instead of having a taxable income of $500,000 would actually have a loss of $500,000. The effect of this decision is to allow the taxpayer to reduce his taxable income by the amount of this tax-exempt interest, something which the Congress strongly opposed and did its utmost to prevent. It is very difficult to follow the reasoning of the Court in this case, especially when the Court in any number of cases has pointed out that deductions from gross income are a matter of grace to be allowed entirely within the discretion of Congress.

In Helvering v. Independence Life Insurance Co. (292 U. S. 371), the Court said in regard to this matter: "Unquestionably Congress has power to condition, limit, and deny deductions from gross income in order to arrive at the net that it chooses to tax." Clearly there was nothing arbitrary in the provisions of the Revenue Act of 1921 already referred to which prevented a life-insurance company from getting a double deduction for tax-exempt interest, and which also prevented the interest from tax-exempt securities from reducing the taxable income of such companies. This decision of the Supreme Court resulted in a loss of revenue to the Government of practically $100,000,000.

APPENDIX B

EXEMPTION OF CITY, COUNTY, STATE EMPLOYEES' SALARIES

Judge Roberts continues:

"It seems to me that the reciprocal rights and immunities of the National and a State Government may be safeguarded by the observance of two limitations upon their respective powers of taxation. These are that the exactions of the one must not discriminate against the means and instrumentalities of the other and must not directly burden the operations of that other. To state these canons otherwise, an exaction by either Government which hits the means or instrumentalities of the other infringes the principle of immunity if it discriminates against them and in favor of private citizens or if the burden of the tax be palpable and direct rather than hypothetic and remote. Tested by these criteria, the imposition of the challenged tax in the instant case was lawful * * *."

"* * * In reason and logic it is difficult to differentiate the present case from that of a private citizen who furnishes goods, performs work, or renders service to a State or a municipality under a contract or an officer or employee of a corporation which does the same. Income tax on the compensation paid or the profit realized is a necessary cost incident to the performance of the contract, and as such must be taken into account in fixing the consideration demanded of the city government. In quite as real a sense, as in this case, the taxation of income of such persons and, as well, the taxation of the corporation itself lays a burden upon the funds of the State or its agency. Nevertheless, the courts have repeatedly declared that the doctrine of immunity will not serve to exempt such persons or corporations from the exaction.

"The importance of the case arises out of the fact that the claimed exemption may well extend to millions of persons (whose work nowise differs from that of their fellows in private enterprise) who are employed by municipal subdivisions and districts throughout the Nation, and that, on the other hand, the powers of the States to tax may be inhibited in the case of hundreds of thousands of similar employees of Federal agencies of one sort or another. Such exemptions from taxation ought to be strictly limited. They are essentially unfair. They are unsound because Federal or State business ought to bear its proportionate share of taxation in order that comparison may be made between the cost of conducting public and private business * * *."

Because of the Court's decisions the revenue acts have exempted interest upon State obligations.

Salaries of judges of United States courts were specifically made taxable under the Revenue Acts of 1918, 1921, 1924, and 1926. In the 1928 act the Congress omitted the provision specifically making such salaries taxable, on the ground that it was mere surplusage, because, insofar as such compensation may be taxed under the Constitution, it is already included within the general definition of income. The Revenue Act of 1932 and subsequent acts specifically subject to the income tax judges taking office after June 2, 1932.

Salaries of States' officers and employees: Beginning with the Revenue Act of 1918 and subsequent acts these salaries were made taxable. Subsequent acts also tax such salaries, but they have been exempted by Supreme Court decisions.

TAXATION OF STATE EMPLOYEES UNDER THE CIVIL WAR ACTS

In the Civil War acts Congress taxed the salaries of State officers and employees. But in a decision relating to the taxation of a State judge, decided in 1870, the Supreme Court held we could not do this. The Day case went back to the reasoning of the Dobbins case, decided in 1840, holding that a State had no right to assess the salary of a Federal officer. Under the Civil War acts there was an exemption of $600 allowed, and the statute (1864 act) provided that only one deduction of $600 shall be made from the aggregate incomes of all the members of any family composed of parents and minor children, or husband and wife, except in cases where such separate income shall be derived from the separate and individual estate, gains, or labor of the wife or child. The rates under this act were as follows:

	Percent
Income in excess of $600 and not in excess of $5,000	5
Income in excess of $5,000 and not in excess of $10,000	7½
Income in excess of $10,000	10

FEDERAL JUDGES' EXEMPTION

The decision of Evans v. Gore was the seed from which the nullification of the express language of the sixteenth amendment sprung. In fact, so insistent was the Court that the salaries of the judges should not be subject to the income tax that it even extended this exemption to judges of the Court of Claims, although the Court of Claims is not a constitutional court but a legislative court (Miles v. Graham, 268 U. S. 501). Subsequently the Supreme Court recognized its error and held that the constitutional prohibition against reducing the salaries of judges of constitutional courts had no application to judges of legislative courts (Booth v. United States, 291 U. S. 339). But we have not been able to secure the income tax on the salaries of these judges during the period prior to the time the Booth decision was rendered. From that time on the Court has continued to exempt income from State securities, salaries of State officers and employees, and salaries of Federal judges from their just burden of Federal taxation. Congress has tried to meet the situation as to Federal judges by fixing their salaries with respect to the income tax. This was done in the Revenue Act of 1932. However, it is doubtful if the Supreme Court will uphold that provision, and even if it does, it could only be made applicable to judges taking office after June 2, 1932, the date of the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1932.

FEDERAL INCOME-TAX RETURNS, DECLINE OF

Brabson, in Tax Magazine, February 1937, writes:

"In the accompanying table, which may contain information that is surprising to many taxing authorities as well as to taxpayers, an attempt has been made to show how the tax base for the collection of Federal revenues has been constantly and consistently curtailed since the enactment of the first income-tax act until it has been substantially cut in half. The significant thing is not the figures themselves but is in the trend. There has been a steady reduction in the tax base, resulting in a reduction of almost 50 percent since 1916 in the proportion of our citizens who contribute anything to the direct support of the Federal Government."

Federal income-tax returns compared with population

Year	United States population [1]	Returns filed	Taxable returns	Nontaxable returns	Percent returns to United States population	Percent taxable returns to population
1916	100,757,735	437,036	362,970	74,066	0.43	0.36
1917	102,172,845	3,472,890	2,707,234	765,656	3.39	2.65
1918	103,587,955	4,425,114	3,392,863	1,032,251	4.27	3.28
1919	106,021,431	5,532,760	4,231,181	1,101,579	5.03	3.99
1920	106,021,431	7,259,944	5,518,310	1,741,634	6.85	5.20
1921	106,021,431	6,662,176	3,589,985	3,072,191	6.28	3.39
1922	109,552,128	6,787,481	3,681,249	3,106,232	6.20	3.36
1923	110,996,153	7,698,321	4,270,121	3,428,200	6.94	3.85
1924	112,364,000	7,369,788	4,489,698	2,880,090	6.56	4.00
1925	115,725,000	4,171,051	2,501,166	1,669,885	3.60	2.16
1926	117,489,681	4,138,092	2,470,990	1,667,102	3.52	2.10
1927	118,988,000	4,101,547	2,440,941	1,660,606	3.45	2.05
1928	120,340,000	4,070,851	2,523,063	1,547,788	3.38	2.10
1929	123,202,660	4,044,327	2,458,049	1,586,278	3.28	2.00
1930	123,202,660	3,707,509	2,037,645	1,669,864	3.01	1.65
1931	123,202,660	3,225,924	1,525,546	1,700,378	2.59	1.24
1932	125,265,000	3,877,430	1,936,095	1,941,335	3.10	1.55
1933	126,130,000	3,723,558	1,747,740	1,975,818	3.00	1.39
1934	127,068,000	4,094,420	1,795,920	2,298,500	3.22	1.41
1935 [2]	127,521,000	4,300,691	1,836,165	2,464,526	3.42	1.43

[1] Population is nearest census figure of Bureau of Census estimate.
[2] All figures for 1935 tax returns preliminary.

THE VOLUME OF TAX-EXEMPT SECURITIES

In the following tabulation there is set forth in round millions the amount of tax-exempt securities outstanding as of June 30, 1935. There is also shown the estimated amount of such securities in the hands of the public to whom such securities would be subject to taxation if they were not exempt. It has been found impossible to arrive at a fair estimate of the amount of tax which would be paid upon the income from these securities if they were not exempt. That the amount of income so exempt, however, is undoubtedly a sum running into the hundreds of millions, seems obvious.

Estimated amount of tax-exempt securities in the hands of the public as of June 30, 1935

State, county, and municipal	$16,895,000,000
Federal	26,137,000,000
Territories and insular possessions	117,000,000
Federal Farm Loan System	2,544,000,000
R. F. C.	250,000,000
H. O. L. C.	2,476,000,000
Total net	48,419,000,000
Less Federal Reserve bank holdings	2,433,000,000
	45,986,000,000

THE EXTENT OF FEDERAL INCOME-TAX EXEMPTION

To ascertain the extent of the exemptions we need only turn to the records of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue on income taxation, which has been the largest source of Federal revenues. When our income-tax amendment to the Constitution became effective in 1913, ordinary citizens were under the impression that the revenue acts to be passed under that authority would be broad and inclusive and would levy a tax upon every individual and corporation that had an actual income during the year in question which could be measured in dollars and cents. But it was not so to be. When the first income-tax law finally emerged from the Halls of Congress it was found to contain various exemptions, some of which one suspects were dictated by means and motives that ranged from organized pressure groups to purely personal prejudices. There were in the law exceptions and provisions and jokers and outright immunities, the sum total of which was to reduce the tax basis to a fraction of its potential application.

BRITISH TAXES ON COLONIAL SECURITIES

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
JOINT COMMITTEE ON INTERNAL REVENUE TAXATION,
Washington, May 10, 1937.

Hon. DAVID J. LEWIS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. LEWIS: In regard to your inquiry as to whether the British income-tax law exempts income from the securities of the colonies, when the income is acquired therefrom by a citizen of the United Kingdom it appears that such interest is taxable where the securities are owned by a person who is a resident of Great Britain. Therefore a citizen of the United Kingdom owning securities of the colonies would be subject to the British income tax on the income from such securities if a resident of Great Britain.

Of course, the question as to whether or not the colonies themselves subject the income from such securities to taxation is a matter for their own determination. Canada, for instance, exempts the income from securities issued by the Dominion in case the specific act authorizing the issue of such securities provides for their exemption from the Canadian income tax.

Very respectfully,

COLIN F. STAN, Counsel.

APPENDIX C

CONFLICTS OF STATE LAWS WITH FEDERAL TAXATION

One of the most troublesome features of Federal income taxation is to determine when to apply and when not to apply the various State laws in arriving at the tax liability of the Federal taxpayers. The Supreme Court has not been consistent in its decisions on this point. The Court has held, for instance, that an organization which, under the law of the State, was deemed a partnership could be treated as a corporation for Federal income-tax purposes (Burk-Waggoner Oil Association v. Hopkins, 269 U. S. 110). In another case (Burnet v. Harmel, 287 U. S. 103) the Court also disregarded the State law in holding that royalties received in payment of an oil and gas lease could be taxed for Federal income-tax purposes, not as capital gains but as ordinary income. But in other cases involving community-property income and the taxability of income from oil and gas leases the Supreme Court has applied the State law, thereby causing the Federal tax burden to fall inequitably upon Federal taxpayers and also resulting in a severe loss in revenue to the Federal Government. The Constitution provides, in article VI, that:

"This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the Constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding."

This provision of the Constitution makes it clear that Federal laws in pursuance thereof override all State constitutions or State laws in conflict therewith. Now, so far as Federal taxes are concerned, the Constitution requires that they shall be uniform throughout the United States. In interpreting this provision of the Constitution the Court (Florida v. Mellon, 273 U. S. 12) has stated that it means that "the rule of liability shall be alike in all parts of the United States." But how can the rule of liability be alike for Federal tax purposes in all parts of the United States if the Court requires the Federal tax to depend upon the conflicting or dissimilar laws of the various States? In recognizing the State laws in the community property tax cases and in the Oklahoma oil and gas cases, I believe that the Court has violated the constitutional mandate prescribing uniformity of taxation throughout the United States. These decisions which are next discussed have resulted in tax exemption to a favored few at the expense of the great mass of Federal taxpayers.

STATE LEASES, OIL, GAS, ORE

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
JOINT COMMITTEE ON INTERNAL REVENUE TAXATION,
Washington, May 10, 1937.

Hon. DAVID J. LEWIS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. LEWIS: In regard to your request for information relating to the decision of the Supreme Court in the Coronado Oil & Gas Co. case, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 20, 1930, shows that this question was involved in connection with refunds to the United States Steel Corporation for the years 1917, 1918, 1919, and 1920, which were made as a basis for the settlement. The total refunds involved in this case, not including interest, amounted to $36,000,000.

While the RECORD shows that the United States Steel Corporation waived its claim to exemption in the case of iron-ore leases which it operated in Minnesota, this claim undoubtedly had some influence on the final settlement of the case. In this connection I am quoting from page 5749 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 20, 1930, setting forth the issues upon which the United States Steel Corporation and its subsidiaries based its claims for these refunds:

"PROFITS FROM STATE LEASES—VARIOUS SUBSIDIARIES

"The issue is common to the years 1919 and 1920, as well as 1917 and 1918. In the petition to the Court of Claims for 1918, and in the brief for that year, objection was raised to the Bureau's action in including in consolidated net income a large sum described as the net income of six subsidiaries realized in 1918 from operation of iron-ore leases granted by the State of Minnesota or a political subdivision thereof. The objection, of course, is based upon the claim that the income is exempt from tax because arising not from a private business enterprise but from employment by a State of instrumentalities in the performance of strictly governmental functions, i. e., obtaining revenues for the support of the State's public schools. Reliance is had by the taxpayer upon the following decisions:

"Collector v. Day (11 Wall. 113), where the United States Supreme Court refused to sanction a tax imposed by the Federal Government upon the salary of a State executive officer.

"Pollock v. Farmers Loan & Trust Co. (157 U. S. 429), where it was said that: 'As the States cannot tax the powers, the operations, or the property of the United States, nor the means which they employ to carry their powers into execution, so it has been held that the United States have no power under the Constitution to tax either the instrumentalities or the property of a State.' On rehearing, the Court said, inter alia, that 'it follows that if the revenue derived from municipal bonds cannot be taxed (by the United States), because the source cannot be, the same rule applies to revenue from any other source not subject to the tax', etc.

"Ambrosini v. United States (187 U. S. 1), where it was held that the Federal Government lacked power to impose a stamp tax on surety bonds given a State under requirement of one of its laws.

"Indian Territory Illuminating Oil Co. v. Oklahoma (240 U. S. 522), where the State attempted to tax a lease on tax-exempt Osage Indian lands, but the Court held the property leased to be under the protection of the Federal Government, and that the leases 'have the immunity of such protection.' The tax assessment by the State was held invalid, saying, in part: 'A tax upon the leases is a tax upon the power to make them, and could be used to destroy the power to make them. If they cannot be taxed as entities they cannot be taxed vicariously * * *.'

"Gillespie v. Oklahoma (257 U. S. 501), where the Court held invalid an attempt by Oklahoma to tax the net income of a lessee of tax-exempt Indian lands, saying: 'The same considerations that invalidate a tax upon the leases invalidate a tax upon the profits of the leases, and stopping short of theoretical possibilities, a tax upon such profits is a direct hamper upon the effort of the United States to make the best terms that it can for its wards.'

"Daugherty, Tax Collector, v. Thompson (9 S. W. 99), in which the Texas Supreme Court held that school lands, when leased to raise an available school fund, are exclusively devoted to the use and benefit of the public as though covered by schoolhouses, and a tax on such leased lands diminishes the rental value thereof.

"In Metcalf & Eddy v. Mitchell (269 U. S. 514), which involved the Federal income tax for 1917, applied by the Bureau to income paid a consulting engineer by a State, the Court held that the fact of whether or not the tax constituted an interference by the Federal Government with the State governmental functions was one for determination under the facts of each case.

"Frey v. Woodworth, Collector (2 Fed. (2d) 725), where the rule was recognized and applied, to the effect that State instrumentalities used in the performance of governmental functions are exempt from taxation by the Federal Government. The case involved the Federal income tax for 1921 sought to be applied to wages of employees of a street railway owned by a municipality.

"Panhandle Oil Co. v. Mississippi (277 U. S. 218), in which the Court held unconstitutional a State sales tax on gasoline purchased by the Federal Coast Guard and veterans' hospital.

"As opposed to the above decisions exempting from Federal taxation State agencies and the income or revenue therefrom, in the case of Coronado Oil & Gas Co. (14 B. T. A. 1214), acquiesced in. It was there held that income of a lessee of oil- and gas-bearing school lands of the State of Oklahoma from the sale of oil and gas produced from such leased lands was not exempt from the Federal income tax, upon the ground that the facts proven did not establish the taxpayer as an instrumentality of the State in its performance of a governmental function, so that a tax upon its income would constitute an interference with the exercise by the State of a governmental or sovereign power. Numerous relevant decisions by the courts were cited by the board. See also H. Oliver Thompson (17 B. T. A. 987) as to land leased to a city for a school site, and Bear Canon Coal Co. (14 B. T. A. 1240).

"The Coronado Oil & Gas Co. has prosecuted a petition to the circuit court of appeals for review of the board's decision upon the issue of its claimed exemption from Federal income tax on income from its State school-land leases. In the case of Bunn v. Willcutts (35 Fed. (2d) 29) the circuit court of appeals affirmed the district court decision (29 Fed. (2d) 132) in holding exempt from Federal tax the gain on sale of municipal bonds. Notwithstanding the possibility of a decision by the courts in sustaining the claimed exemption, the United States Steel Corporation has waived its claim to exemption. The disposition of the item accords with the action heretofore taken in disposing of the tax for the year 1917."

It will be noted that when this settlement was agreed upon, the Coronado Oil & Gas Co. case had not been passed upon by the Supreme Court, and the company was faced with an unfavorable decision on that case by the Board of Tax Appeals (14 B. T. A. 1214). However, as subsequently developed, the Supreme Court upheld the taxpayer and reversed the Government in the Coronado Oil & Gas Co. case.

Very respectfully,

COLIN F. STAM, Counsel.

The Supreme Court does not apply this rule to all State leases. In the case of a lease executed in the State of Texas the Court has applied the State law and held that such a lease, although it may be identical in terms with a lease executed in the State of Oklahoma, amounts to a sale of the minerals in place (group no. 1, Ore Corporation v. Bass, 283 U. S. 279). Therefore, corporations leasing mineral lands in Texas are subject to a tax on the profits from the operation of such leases, while corporations leasing State lands in Oklahoma are exempt from profits derived from the operation of such leases. Yet in both cases the corporations get the same benefit and enjoyment out of the income.

COMMUNITY PROPERTY—SPLIT INCOMES

There is nothing in the Federal income-tax law which exempts the earner of income from paying the income tax on his entire salary. And the Court has already held that the Government in levying an income tax is not bound by the traditional classification of interests or estates. It stated in a case involving the income taxation of a revocable trust:

"Liability may rest upon the enjoyment by the taxpayer of privileges and benefits so substantial and important as to make it reasonable and just to deal with him as if he were the owner and to tax him on that basis" (Wells case, 289 U. S. 670).

And, as already pointed out, the Court has said that under these community property laws, the husband may deal with community property very much as if it were his own.

The statute before the Court taxed the "net income of every person" and defined income as including income from salaries, wages, and compensation, embracing income derived from any source whatever. Except in the case of the community-property States, the Court has held this language to be broad enough to require that the income was taxable to the spouse earning it, even though he might have assigned it prior to actual receipt to his wife (Lucas v. Earl, 281 U. S. 111; Burnet v. Lenninger, 285 U. S. 136); and in construing this language in a case involving the taxation of trust income paid by the United States to its Indian wards, the Court said:

"The intent of Congress was to levy the tax with respect to all residents of the United States and upon all sorts of income. The act does not expressly exempt the sort of income here involved, nor a person having petitioner's status respecting such income, and we are not referred to any other statute which does. * * * The intent to exclude must be definitely expressed, where, as here, the language of the act laying the tax is broad enough to include the subject matter (Superintendent v. Commissioner, 295 U. S. 418)."

Schedule showing difference in Federal income-tax liability in community property State as contrasted with noncommunity property State [1]

	Tax liability in noncommunity property State	Tax liability in community property State	Difference in tax liability in community property and noncommunity property State
Net income:
$10,500	$458	$278	$180
$20,500	1,664	1,118	546
$52,500	9,644	6,028	3,616
$76,500	19,484	11,708	7,776
$102,500	33,944	19,288	14,656
$202,500	96,944	67,888	29,056
$302,500	163,944	129,888	34,056
$402,500	233,944	193,888	40,056
$502,500	305,944	259,888	46,056
$752,500	490,944	432,888	58,056
$1,002,500	680,944	611,883	69,056

[1] Tax computed on basis of $2,500 exemption for married persons and maximum earned income credit.

NOTE.—The differences in taxation of citizens of the several States due to the division of income under community property laws will not be affected by the source of the income, be it dividends, interest, rents, salary, payment for professional services, or profits on the sale of capital assets.

Thus the taxpayer in a community property State, paying less Federal incometax than the taxpayer with identical income in a noncommunity property State, might be an individual earning a salary behind a department-store glove counter, a locomotive throttle, or the movie cameras. He might, on the other hand, be a corporation executive, a physician, lawyer, accountant, or the owner of a small bake shop. He may be an oil and gas lease operator, an author of best-sellers, a manufacturer of tin trays, or an inventor. Thus the list of occupations and sources of income might be extended indefinitely to include all the means of livelihood and income sources in the community property and noncommunity property States.

FOREIGN TAX CREDITS

Under our Federal Income Tax Act we allow a credit against the Federal income tax for taxes paid by American citizens or American corporations to foreign countries. Since American citizens and domestic corporations are taxable on their income from all sources, this credit was allowed to prevent double taxation of the same income by two national governments. However, the Supreme Court in Burnet v. Chicago Portrait Co. (285 U. S. 1) has so distorted the law that credit is now given not only for income taxes paid to foreign governments but also to political subdivisions of such foreign governments. The Court held that the only test to be applied under the statute was whether the income tax was paid to a foreign power competent to lay it, regardless of the international status of such foreign power. Thus income taxes paid to New South Wales and the city of Hamburg are now allowed as credits against our Federal income taxes. That this construction is absurd becomes apparent when it is realized that the Federal Government does not allow any credit against the Federal income tax for taxes paid to the States. Certainly, there is nothing in the statute as written to justify the inference that foreign states which do not have an international status should be treated differently in this respect than our own domestic States. Income taxes paid to our States are only allowed as deductions from gross income in computing the Federal income tax and not as credits against the tax itself. Income taxes paid to foreign states which do not have an international status should not be treated better than our own States in this respect, and I see nothing in the statute to show that Congress ever intended such a result as the Supreme Court has outlined. This decision of the Supreme Court has cost us up to date about $2,000,000.

APPENDIX D

GIFT TAXES—RESTRICTION ON LEVYING A GIFT TAX ON DONEE

The Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of the gift-tax provisions of the Revenue Act of 1924, levying a tax on the donor, insofar as it applied to gifts made after the date of the enactment of that act. However, the reasoning of the Court was such as to cast serious doubt upon the power of Congress to levy a gift tax upon the donee. The Court upheld the tax on the theory that it was not a direct tax, because it was levied only upon one of those powers incident to ownership, the power to give the property owned to another. It was stated that "under this statute all the other rights and powers which collectively constitute property or ownership may be fully enjoyed free of tax." But under this reasoning the Court would probably hold that a gift tax on the donee is a direct tax and unconstitutional because not apportioned according to population. This is because the Court has repeatedly taken the position in the Pollock and other cases that a tax upon the receipt of property is a tax upon the ownership of the property itself. A tax on inheritances has been sustained on an entirely different basis, as in the case of inheritances the tax is laid upon the privilege granted by the State of permitting a person to dispose of his property at death. If it were not for this privilege, which has its inception in the common law, all property would escheat to the State on the death of the owner. But it cannot be said that the State is granting a privilege when the owner of property exercises his inalienable right of disposing of it during his lifetime. Therefore there are good grounds for believing that the Supreme Court will not permit us to levy a gift tax on the donee. It was Mr. Justice Holmes who said that "a page of history is worth a volume of logic." The Court could well have applied this common-sense rule and ascertained that at the time the Constitution was adopted a tax on gifts was not recognized as a direct tax, and therefore had to fall within the class of excises. For there is no magic to the word "excise" in its historical setting.

GIFTS AS INCOME TO THE RECIPIENT

So far as gifts are concerned under our concept of income, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue interpreted income under the act of 1864 to include the receipt of gifts, and the act of 1894 specifically taxed the receipt of personal property by gift as income. This last act was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court in the Pollock case. Beginning with the Revenue Act of 1913, Congress has specifically exempted the receipt of gifts from the income tax. My understanding is that this was done because of doubt in the minds of framers of the Revenue Act of 1913 as to whether the Court would regard gifts as income. They were exempted to give the Court no kind of argument to invalidate the income tax again.

GIFTS OF PROPERTY WHERE GRANTOR RETAINS ENJOYMENT OF INCOME THEREFROM

The Supreme Court has held that the following types of transfers are not subject to the estate tax imposed by the Revenue Act of 1926:

"1. A places property in trust by a deed which provides that the income shall be paid to B for his life, then to A for her life, and then that the trust shall terminate upon the death of A, at which time the property shall be distributed among the children of A (May v. Heiner, decided Apr. 14, 1930, 281 U. S. 238).

"2. A places property in trust by a deed which provides that the income therefrom shall be paid to A for her life, and upon her death that the trust shall be terminated and that the property shall be distributed among her children (Burnet v. Northern Trust Co., decided Mar. 2, 1931, 51 S. Ct. 342).

"3. A places property in trust by a deed which provides that A shall have the right to call upon the income therefrom to supplement her income from other property if it falls below a given sum; reserves the right to dispose of the remainder of the income by ordering its payment to others and which further provides that the trust shall terminate upon the death of the last of her three children, at which time if A is surviving the property will be paid over to her, and if not will then be paid to the issue of her children (McCormick v. Burnet, decided Mar. 2, 1931, 51 S. Ct. 343)." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Mar. 3, 1931, p. 7198.)

The Government as well as the States thought that these types of trusts were included in the language of the statute taxing "transfers intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after death." In fact, for many years both Federal and State courts had held that these types of transfer were covered by such language, and both Federal and State legislators had drafted their death-duty statutes on such a basis. Now, in 1930 and 1931 the Supreme Court held for the first time that this language did not cover this type of transfers. We amended our Federal law to take care of this situation in the future, but due to the decisions of the Supreme Court there is not much chance that we will be able to reach back and tax those trusts which were created before our amendment was enacted, which was in 1931. The Government has attempted to subject these trusts to the estate tax in the case of decedents dying after the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1932, but has been unsuccessful in sustaining this position in the courts because of these Supreme Court decisions. It has been estimated that up to the present these decisions will cost us about $25,000,000. And the decisions have also cost the States a great deal of money.

It is certainly unfair to permit all these taxpayers who set up trusts prior to 1931 to escape their fair burden of the Federal estate tax. Indeed, we even considered taxing these trusts by levying a tax upon the receipt by the beneficiaries of the trust property when the trusts were terminated and the beneficiaries came into possession and enjoyment. But the Supreme Court has now held that to impose a tax upon the coming into possession and enjoyment of property—the right to which was fully vested prior to the enactment of taxing statute is in violation of the due-process clause (Coolidge v. Long, 282 U. S. 582). And this conclusion was reached in spite of the fact that the Court had upheld such a tax under the Civil War Acts (Clapp v. Mason, 94 U. S. 589; Wright v. Blakeslee, 101 U. S. 174). This was also true in the case of Cahn v. Brewster (203 U. S. 543), involving a Louisiana inheritance tax. Sir, had we not the same Constitution then as we have today? There is nothing in the Constitution which prevents us from reaching out and subjecting these trusts to their proper share of taxation. This decision only confirms the opinion that it is not the Constitution but the Court that needs mending.

GIFT TAXES

The Supreme Court denied the power of Congress to make the gift-tax provisions of the Revenue Act of 1924 retroactive. Under the act of 1924 we taxed all gifts made during the calendar year 1924, although the act was not passed until June 2, 1924. This short retroactive period was thought necessary to forestall tax evaders who should hurry their gifts to beat the enactment date of the bill. This, sir, is usual practice by the British Parliament to prevent tax evasion. Certainly there is no prohibition of retroactive legislation in the Constitution.

In the first case involving this question the gift was made in January 1924 (Blodgett v. Holden, 275 U. S. 142). In the second case (Untermeyer v. Anderson, 276 U. S. 440) the gift was made in May 1924, when the revenue bill of 1924 had passed both Houses and was before the conferees to iron out the differences between the two Houses. By these decisions holding it was unconstitutional to tax gifts made before the passage of the act the Court played into the hands of the tax dodgers, who, in anticipation of a gift tax, made gifts before the bill of 1924 was enacted into law. As a result of these decisions, whenever the Government wants to impose an excise tax for the first time it cannot apply it to transactions made prior to the date the bill becomes law. This is directly contrary to decisions of the Supreme Court in the past, which, as pointed out by Mr. Justice Brandeis in his dissenting opinion, have frequently sustained retroactive excises. And these decisions caused the Government to lose three and one-half million dollars in revenue and will undoubtedly cause a further loss of revenue in the future.

APPENDIX E

ESTATE TAXES

In the estate-tax field the Supreme Court has carried its policy of favoring the form rather than the substance to the utmost extreme. Its unwillingness to consider the practical result of tax transactions has cost the Government millions of dollars.

(a) Exemption of real estate from Federal estate tax.

The first case I wish to discuss under the estate tax is that of Crooks v. Harrelson (282 U. S. 55), in which the Supreme Court held that unless real estate was subject to the expenses of administration of a decedent's estate it was not includible in the gross estate for Federal estate-tax purposes. This conclusion was based upon the Court's interpretation of the Revenue Act of 1918, which subjected to the Federal estate tax property of a decedent which was subject "to the payment of the charges against his estate and the expenses of its administration." The Court held that if by State law an interest in real estate is not subject to the expenses of administration (although it is subject to charges against the estate), it forms no part of the gross estate for purposes of the Federal estate tax. This result was reached by construing the word "and" in the Federal act in the conjunctive, thereby holding that the property to be taxable must be subject both to (1) expenses of administration and (2) charges against the estate. As under the common-law rule, which is still in effect in many States, real estate cannot be sold to pay expenses of administration, this decision had the effect of setting up some exceptional common law to exempt many wealthy estates of any Federal estate tax at all on their real property. And there was no sound basis for such a technical construction of the word "and." It led to absurd results, which could not have been imputed to the Congress. Moreover, the word "and" has frequently been construed in the disjunctive by the courts when a contrary conclusion would lead to absurd results. In construing a statute prohibiting the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract to perform labor in the United States the Supreme Court did not hesitate to ignore the express language of the statute and hold that it did not apply to the employment by a church of a rector or minister, because legislative history clearly showed that the statute was not intended to reach a case of this kind (Holy Trinity Church v. United States, 143 U. S. 457). We have revised our estate-tax statute to meet the hair-splitting interpretation of the Supreme Court in the Revenue Act of 1926, but this decision cost the Federal taxpayers at least $5,000,000, and would have cost a great deal more, if it had not been for the running of the statute of limitations.

APPENDIX F

ESTATE-TAX DECISIONS OF 1935

A series of cases decided on November 1, 1935, demonstrates further what an impractical mind the majority of the Court has in dealing with taxation, which is an eminently practical matter.

First, let us consider the case of White v. Poor (296 U. S. 98). We have a provision in the estate-tax law requiring the inclusion in the gross estate of a decedent, property transferred in trust, if the enjoyment of such property was subject at the date of the decedent's death to any change through the exercise of a power, either by the decedent alone (or in conjunction with any person) to alter, amend, or revoke. In the case before the Court a widow set up a trust for herself and children. The property was conveyed to three trustees, consisting of herself, her son, and a third person not connected with the family. The trust was to terminate upon the death of the last survivor. The trustees could also terminate the trust at any time by agreement, and under the trust instrument they could also fill vacancies in their ranks. After the trust was created the decedent resigned as trustee and a new trustee was appointed in her stead. A year later this new trustee resigned and the remaining trustees appointed the widow, so that at the time of the widow's death she was a trustee and therefore had the power with the other trustees to terminate the trust on the date of her death. However, the Court reasoned that the power to terminate the trust was acquired solely by the action of the other trustees and "not in any sense by virtue of any power reserved to herself as settlor in the original declaration of trust." Therefore the Court held that this trust could not be taxed as part of the widow's estate. Under this decision a grantor could escape any estate tax on trust property by giving the power to terminate to carefully selected trustees, who by rearrangement could later appoint him as trustee.

Next, let us consider the case of Helvering v. St. Louis Union Trust Co. (296 U. S. 39). This was another family trust. A father conveyed property in trust to pay the income to his daughter during life with remainder over to persons named. If the daughter died before the father, the trust property was to be transferred back to the father, to be his absolutely. The Court held that this trust was not includable in the father's gross estate at his death. In another case, Becker v. St. Louis Union Trust Co. (296 U. S. 48), the facts were essentially the same, except that the grantor appointed himself as trustee. The Court in this last case held that the effect was no different than if the trustee had been another person and therefore held this trust property also not subject to the estate tax. Both cases were 5-to-4 decisions, the Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Brandeis, Mr. Justice Stone, and Mr. Justice Cardozo all dissenting. Mr. Justice Stone explained the views of the minority in his dissent in the St. Louis Trust Co. I quote the following from Mr. Stone's opinion:

"It seems plain that the gift here was not complete until the decedent's death. He did not desire to make a complete gift. He wished to keep the property for himself in case he survived his daughter. He kept this hold upon it by reserving from his gift an interest terminable only at his death, by which full ownership would be restored to him if he survived his daughter. If he had reserved a power to revoke the trust, if he survived her, Reinecke v. Northern Trust Co., supra, would have made the gift taxable, as would Klein v. United States, supra, if he had reserved a remainder in himself with gift over, if he did not survive his daughter. Instead, by using a different form of words, he attained the same end and has escaped the tax.

"Having in mind the purpose of the statute and the breadth of its language, it would seem to be of no consequence what particular conveyancers' device—what particular string—the decedent selected to hold in suspense the ultimate disposition of his property until the moment of his death. In determining whether a taxable transfer becomes complete only at death we look to substance, not to form (Klein v. United States, supra, 284; Chase National Bank v. United States, 278 U. S. 327, 335; Reinecke v. Northern Trust Co., supra, 345; Saltonstall v. Saltonstall, 276 U. S. 260, 271). However we label the device, it is but a means by which the gift is rendered incomplete until the donor's death. The extent to which it is incomplete marks the extent of the 'interest' passing at death, which the statute taxes.

"The judgment should be reversed."

In other words, Mr. Justice Stone showed that under the majority opinion, merely by using a different form of words in the trust instrument, a person could escape the estate tax and yet have the same practical benefits. Thus, under the Court's decision, the same result could be obtained by either of two methods; but if one method was adopted, the trust was subject to the estate tax, whereas if the other method was adopted, the trust was exempt from the estate tax. Naturally all the wealthy taxpayers will choose the method which results in no estate tax. This is a striking example of the Court's effort to decide tax cases on the basis of the form of the transaction selected by the tax dodger rather than the substance.

The Court's decisions preventing us from subjecting transfers made before the enactment of the statute has greatly handicapped us in our collection of the Federal estate tax. Where these transfers are mere substitutes for testamentary dispositions, and where, because of the decedent's death after the enactment of the taxing statute, the beneficiaries acquire certain benefits and rights to possession and enjoyment not heretofore had, it seems entirely constitutional for us to make the occasion for the accession of such rights a taxable one. But in Schwab v. Doyle (258 U. S. 529), the Court held that we could not subject to the estate tax transfers in contemplation of death made before the Revenue Act of 1916. And in Nicols v. Coolidge (274 U. S. 531) we were prevented by the Court from taxing property transferred in trust in 1907 but taking effect in possession and enjoyment after the enactment of our taxing statute. This was also held to be true in the case of Helvering against Helmholz, involving a family trust created in 1918. And the Court has also held that we cannot subject to the estate tax insurance taken out before the passage of the act, where the decedent could not change the beneficiary, although his death was the event which entitled the beneficiaries to the proceeds (Bingham v. U. S., 296 U. S. 212).

All of these cases considered together has cost the Government about $25,000,000. And they clearly show that the Court is indulging in legal fictions and niceties and not looking to the actualities in rendering its decisions. I have already considered the community-property income-tax decisions. The same result was reached by the Court in the estate-tax case (U. S. v. Malcolm, 282 U. S. 792). In spite of the fact that in the community-property States, the wife, upon the death of the husband, acquires the right to manage, control, and dispose of the portion of the community property, in which prior to death she had a mere naked legal title, the Court has refused us the right to subject this property to the estate tax, even though it was acquired through the sole efforts of the husband, and he had control of it up to the date of his death.

APPENDIX G

STATE TAXATION—FEDERAL COURT FRUSTRATION

It is impossible here to enumerate all of the instances in which the Supreme Court has arbitrarily interfered with the right of the States to levy taxes for the support of their governments. Here are a few of the cases:

Massachusetts under its general income-tax law taxed royalties received from copyrights granted by the United States. Although these royalties inured entirely to the benefit of the recipient, a private party, and not to the benefit of the United States, the Supreme Court held that Massachusetts had no right to tax such royalties on the ground that the copyright was granted by the Federal Government (Long v. Rockwood, 277 U. S. 142). However, New York under its general income-tax law taxed royalties from the use of patent rights granted by the United States. When the New York case was heard, the Court was forced to admit that its reasoning in the Massachusetts case was faulty, for while the copyright or patent was granted by the Federal Government, it was exercised by the owner not in performing a function of government, but for his own personal gain and profit. So the Court not only upheld the right of New York to tax the income from patents granted by the Federal Government but expressly overruled its decision denying the right of Massachusetts to subject to its income-tax royalties received from copyrights granted by the United States (Fox Films Corporation v. Doyle, 286 U. S. 106). Wisconsin in imposing its income tax, classified "a husband and wife" together and required them to file a joint return for income-tax purposes and levied an income tax graduated for surtax purposes upon their combined incomes shown in such return. Although the Supreme Court has held that it is a reasonable classification to treat husband and wife as a unit for the purpose of allowing them a larger exemption from the income tax than that accorded single persons (Brushaber v. Union Pacific Railroad Co., 240 U. S. 1), it held the Wisconsin statute arbitrary and capricious in treating them as a unit for the purpose of levying surtaxes. It is hard to see why, if they can be classified for exemption purposes, they cannot also be classified for the purpose of imposing surtaxes. But the Court held otherwise (Hoeper v. Wisconsin Tax Commission, 284 U. S. 206). Vermont under the Income and Franchise Act of 1931, to encourage the making of loans within the State, taxed loans made by Vermont citizens outside the State and exempted loans made within the State. The Supreme Court held this provision unconstitutional as a violation of the fourteenth amendment. Mr. Justice Stone in a dissenting opinion, concurred in by Mr. Justice Brandeis and Mr. Justice Cardozo, said:

"All taxes must of necessity be levied by general rules capable of practical administration. In drawing the line between the taxed and the untaxed, the equal-protection clause does not command the impossible or the impractical. Unless the line which the State draws is so wide of the mark as palpably to have no reasonable relation to the legitimate end, it is not for the judicial power to reject it and say that another must be substituted (Citizens' Telephone Co. v. Fuller, supra, 329; Miller v. Wilson, 236 U. S. 373, 384; Clark v. Titusville, 184 U. S. 329, 331; Metropolis Theatre Co. v. Chicago, 228 U. S. 61, 69, 79; see also Salomon v. Tax Commission, 278 U. S. 484; McCray v. United States, 195 U. S. 27; Quong Wing v. Kirkendall, supra; Bell's Gap R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 134 U. S. 232, 237).

"As the purpose of the exemption appears to be to encourage the lending of money within Vermont by its residents at low rates of interest, and as it appears reasonably calculated to have that effect, and as we cannot say that such loans will not be of benefit to the State by tending to establish the interest rate at 5 percent or less, and by stimulating loans to borrowers for the purpose of carrying on business and industry within the State, the conclusion seems inescapable that the equal-protection clause does not forbid it."

And then concludes:

"If the exemption does not merit condemnation as a denial of the equal protection which the fourteenth amendment extends to every person, nothing can be added to the vehemence or effectiveness of the denunciation by invoking the command of the privileges and immunities clause."

Massachusetts levied an excise tax on corporations doing business within the State measured by the net income from all sources. The Supreme Court held that Massachusetts had no right under such a statute to include as a measure of the tax income from Federal securities, because a prior statute on the same subject expressly exempted them (Macallen Co. v. Massachusetts, 279 U. S. 620). New York also levied an excise tax on corporations, doing business within that State, measured by the net income from all sources. The Supreme Court, in Educational Films Corporation of America v. Ward (282 U. S. 379), held that New York, under its statute, had a right to include as a measure of its tax the income from Federal securities, claiming that the New York statute, unlike the Massachusetts statute, was not aiming directly at Federal securities. California, in its constitution, had a provision prohibiting the taxation of income from tax-exempt securities. By a constitutional amendment this provision was repealed, and California then enacted a statute taxing corporations doing business within the State, measured by the net income of the corporation from all sources.

The Supreme Court held that California had a right under this statute to include in the measure of the tax the income of the corporation from Federal securities (Pacific Co. v. Johnson, 285 U. S. 480). And yet the only practical difference between the situation in Massachusetts and California was that Massachusetts repealed a statutory provision preventing the taxation of the income from Federal securities, while California removed a similar provision from its constitution by a constitutional amendment. This is certainly a distinction without a difference. And speaking of tax-exempt securities, I wish to bring out what the Supreme Court did to a tax on net worth levied by the State of Missouri on insurance companies. In arriving at net worth the State statute as construed by its highest court required the companies' liabilities to be reduced by the proportion that the value of their tax-exempt securities bore to the total assets. In other words, the statute prorated the liabilities of the company between its taxable and nontaxable assets, and only allowed that portion of the liabilities attributable to the taxable assets to be used in computing net worth. This seemed a fair method, since there is no way of ascertaining whether the liabilities of such companies will be satisfied out of taxable or nontaxable property. But the Supreme Court, in Missouri v. Gehner, held this statute invalid (281 U. S. 313), stating that none of the liabilities could be deemed to be paid out of the Federal securities, otherwise there would be discrimination against Federal securities. Mr. Justice Stone, in an opinion concurred in by Mr. Justice Holmes and Mr. Justice Brandeis, explains the absurdity of the majority opinion, as follows:

"To state the problem now presented in its simplest concrete form, if an insurance company has policy liabilities of $100,000, $100,000 of taxable personal property, and $100,000 of Government bonds, its net assets would be $100,000. Under the statute of Missouri taxing net assets, as applied by the State court, one-half of this net worth, or $50,000, would be subject to the tax, since one-half of its entire property consists of taxable assets, and so contributes one-half of the net. Under the decision of this Court the company would go tax free on the theory that the Constitution requires that in ascertaining the taxable net worth tax-exempt bonds must be excluded from the computation as though they were not liable for the debts of the taxpayer.

"That conclusion appears to me to open a new and hitherto unsuspected field of operation for the immunity from taxation enjoyed by National and State securities as instrumentalities of government, and to accord to their owners a privilege which is not justified by anything that has been decided or said by this Court."

And in a whimsical decision by Mr. Justice Roberts, a Kentucky statute imposing a graduated gross sales tax was held unconstitutional (Stewart Dry Goods Co. v. Lewis, 294 U. S. 550). Under the statute the rate of tax was stepped up according to the amount of sales. The decision is so far reaching in its effect that it has placed in jeopardy many of the graduated gross sales or gross income taxes of the various States. It was because of this decision that the Supreme Court held unconstitutional, in a per curiam opinion of November 9, 1936, the Iowa Chain Store Act of 1935, imposing a tax on gross receipts from sales, according to an accumulated graduated scale. And it was only by a bare majority that the Supreme Court upheld a State chain-store tax graduated according to the number of stores within the State (Commissioners v. Jackson, 283 U. S. 527). In the minority opinion to the Stewart Dry Goods Co. case, written by Justice Cardozo and concurred in by Mr. Justice Brandeis and Mr. Justice Stone, it was pointed out that under the majority opinion a tax upon gross sales, if laid upon a graduated basis, is always and inevitably a denial of the equal protection of the laws, no matter how slight the gradient or how moderate the rate of tax, and concluded that the statute was not arbitrary, stating, "It is not the function of the Court to make itself the arbiter between competing economic theories professed by honest men on grounds not wholly frivolous." And to cap the climax, the Supreme Court, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Butler in Great Northern Railway v. Weeks (297 U. S. 137), even questioned as arbitrary an assessment by the North Dakota State Equalization Board as to the value for tax purposes of certain railway property. In a dissenting opinion by Mr. Justice Stone, concurred in by Mr. Justice Cardozo and Mr. Justice Brandeis, it was pointed out that the decision of the majority was not based upon any discrimination in the valuation of the railroad's property as compared with that of other property in the State. And it was stated that the majority decision rested on the single ground that the tax was excessive. He said:

"The feature of the decision which is especially a matter of concern is that for the first time this Court is setting aside a tax as a violation of the fourteenth amendment on the ground that the assessment on which it is computed is too high, without any showing that the assessment is discriminatory or that petitioner is in any way bearing an undue share of the tax burden imposed on all property owners in the State."

And then goes on to state:

"Even if the valuation of the board be erroneous, the errors of a State judicial officer, however gross, whether of law or of fact, are not violations of the Constitution and are not open to review in the Federal courts merely because they are errors. If overvaluation, even though gross or intentional, were, without more, held to infringe the fourteenth amendment, every taxpayer would be at liberty to ask the Federal courts to review a State tax assessment upon the bare allegation that it is grossly excessive, and without showing that it does more than subject him to taxation on the same basis as every other taxpayer.

"It has long been recognized that discrimination between taxpayers, if intentional or so persistent as to be systematic, is a denial of equal protection, whether the discrimination is in the application of different rates to property in the same class or in inequality in its valuation (Iowa-Des Moines Bank v. Bennett, 284 U. S. 239, 245; Cumberland Coal Co. v. Board of Review, 284 U. S. 23, 25ff; Chicago G. W. Ry. Co. v. Kendall, 266 U. S. 94, 98, 99; Sioux City Bridge Co. v. Dakota County, 260 U. S. 441, 445; Raymond v. Chicago Traction Co., 207 U. S. 20, 37). But to hold that a tax is unconstitutional because based upon an assessment which is too high, as compared with the value of the same property for purposes of condemnation, overlooks the principle upon which property taxes are laid and collected. Taxation is but a method of raising revenue to defray the expenses of government and of distributing the burden among those who must bear it. The taxpayer cannot complain of the tax burden which he has to bear who shows no inequality in the application of it. And plainly, he does not show inequality merely by proving that the valuation of his property for taxation is much higher than its market or its condemnation value.

"The burden of a property tax like the present is distributed by applying a rate of tax to the assessed valuation of all taxable property. Variation of either without discrimination affects the amount of the tax but not the equality of its distribution. The activities and expenses of government, over which the State has plenary control, do not cease in time of depression. They may increase. The State may meet those expenses by raising the valuation of taxable property, or by raising tax rates, or both, without infringing any constitutional immunity. Here the State, so far as appears, is raising the needed revenue and distributing the burden as in previous years, by continuing old valuations. However high those valuations may be, if not discriminatory, they impose no unequal share of the tax burden on petitioner and cannot be said to be arbitrary or oppressive in the constitutional sense."

APPENDIX H

LOSSES ON SURTAXES CAUSED BY COURT'S DECISION EXEMPTING STOCK DIVIDENDS

The estimate of $1,300,000,000 was based upon the amount of corporate earnings withheld from the stockholders for 1936. I quote the following from the statement of Secretary Morgenthau, appearing on page 4 of the Senate Finance Committee hearings of the revenue bill of 1936:

"The Department has also estimated that under the present law more than four and one-half billion dollars of corporation income in the calendar year 1936 will be withheld from stockholders and that, if this income were fully distributed to the individual owners of the stocks represented in those corporations, the resultant yield in additional income taxes would be about $1,300,000,000."

In arriving at such loss of revenue, which would occur either from a 100-percent distribution of dividends or by requiring stockholders to report in their individual returns their pro-rata share of the net earnings of the corporations, whether distributed or not, it was necessary for the Treasury to estimate the individual income-tax brackets into which such earnings, if distributed, would fall. It appears that the Treasury has a record for the latest available year showing the number of individuals who actually received dividends and the income brackets in which they fall. Each year when the Budget estimate is prepared the Treasury has to estimate the various sources of income to individuals—that is, wages, salaries, rents, royalties, dividends, capital gains, etc. Therefore, the only new factor involved in this estimate of $1,300,000,000 was in estimating the total amount of corporate income. The Treasury contends that from this data they can secure a pretty good picture in what brackets these earnings will fall.

Stock dividends: Congress attempted to tax stock dividends under the broad definition of income under the Revenue Act of 1913. The Supreme Court, in Towne v. Eisner, held that this broad definition of income did not embrace stock dividends. In the Revenue Act of 1916 Congress specifically provided that "a stock dividend shall be considered income to the amount of its cash value." The Supreme Court, in Eisner v. Macomber, decided March 8, 1920, held that this provision was unconstitutional, because stock dividends were not income under the Constitution. As a result of this decision Congress, in the Revenue Act of 1921 and subsequent acts, has specifically provided that stock dividends shall not be subject to tax. In our Revenue Act of 1936 we changed the law by providing that stock dividends shall be taxable as income to the extent they represent income under the Constitution.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to add to my address delivered here on June 8 on the question of tax dodging.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. LUECKE of Michigan, for 6 legislative days, on account of important business.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 2901. An act to extend the benefits of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, to certain employees in the legislative and judicial branches of the Government;

H. R. 6287. An act to amend Public Act No. 467, Seventy-third Congress, entitled "Federal Credit Union Act"; and

H. R. 6737. An act to amend the stamp provisions of the Bottling in Bond Act.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 2901. An act to extend the benefits of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, to certain employees in the legislative and judicial branches of the Government;

H. R. 6287. An act to amend Public, No. 467, Seventy-third Congress, entitled "Federal Credit Union Act"; and

H. R. 6737. An act to amend the stamp provisions of the Bottling in Bond Act.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House, pursuant to its previous order, adjourned until Thursday, July 8, 1937, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold a public hearing in room 219, House Office Building, Wednesday, July 7, 1937, at 10 a. m., on H. R. 7158, to except yachts, tugs, towboats, and unrigged vessels from certain provisions of the act of June 25, 1936, as amended.

COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS

The following is the schedule for Naval Affairs Committee for this week:

Wednesday, July 7, 1937, at 10:30 a. m., the full committee will hold open hearings on S. 2521, to authorize the assignment of officers of the line of the Marine Corps to staff duty only as assistant quartermasters and assistant paymasters, and for other purposes.

Thursday, July 8, 1937, at 10:30 a. m., open hearings on S. 1131, to amend the part of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 4, 1920, relating to the conservation, care, custody, protection, and operation of the naval petroleum and oil-shale reserves.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE—POSTPONED

The meeting of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce at 10 a. m., Wednesday, July 7, 1937, on H. R. 5182 and H. R. 6917—textile bills—is postponed until 10 a. m., Thursday, July 8, 1937.

There will be a meeting of the Subcommittee on Cancer of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, at 10 a. m., Thursday, July 8, 1937. Business to be considered: Joint hearing on the cancer bills. Hearing to be held in the Senate Commerce Committee room, gallery floor of the Senate.

COMMITTEE ON RIVERS AND HARBORS

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors will meet Tuesday, July 13, 1937, at 10:30 a. m., to begin hearings on H. R. 7365, a bill to provide for the regional conservation and development of the national resources, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

699. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to relinquish in favor of the Blackfeet Tribe of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, Mont., the interest in certain land acquired by the United States under the Federal reclamation laws; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

700. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a proposed joint resolution to authorize the acceptance on behalf of the United States of certain bequests of James Reuel Smith, late of the city of Yonkers, State of New York; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

701. A letter from the Chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, transmitting a copy of the Annual Report of the Federal Deposit Insurance for the year ending December 31, 1936; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

702. A letter from the Acting Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting a report and recommendation to the Congress concerning the claim of Leo L. Harrison; to the Committee on Claims.

703. A letter from the Acting Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting a report and recommendation to the Congress concerning the claim of Irvin H. Johnson; to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. ZIMMERMAN: Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation. S. 2681. An act to authorize the construction of the Colorado-Big Thompson project as a Federal reclamation project; without amendment (Rept. No. 1180). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida: Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. H. R. 6048. A bill to provide for the establishment of a Coast Guard station in the vicinity of Fort Myers, Fla.; without amendment (Rept. No. 1181). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BOYKIN: Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. H. R. 6976. A bill to provide for the establishment of a Coast Guard station on the coast of Alabama at or near Dauphin Island, Ala.; without amendment (Rept. No. 1182). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GASQUE: Committee on Pensions. H. R. 7531. A bill to afford protection of pension benefits to peacetime veterans placed on the pension rolls after March 19, 1933, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 1183). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BLAND: Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. H. R. 7611. A bill to adjust the pay of certain Coast Guard officers on the retired list who were retired because of physical disability originating in line of duty in time of war; without amendment (Rept. No. 1184). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. KELLER: Committee on the Library. Senate Concurrent Resolution 10. Concurrent resolution accepting the statue of Gen. William Henry Harrison Beadle, to be placed in Statuary Hall; without amendment (Rept. No. 1185). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GASQUE: Committee on Pensions. H. R. 5787. A bill granting pensions and increases of pensions to certain soldiers who served in the Indian wars from 1817 to 1898, and for other purposes; with amendment (Rept. No. 1186). Referred to the Committee on the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of rule XXII, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7747) granting an increase of pension to Jane A. Richardson, and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado: A bill (H. R. 7764) to authorize the sale of surplus power developed under the Uncompahgre Valley reclamation project, Colorado; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

By Mr. FRED M. VINSON: A bill (H. R. 7765) to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CITRON: A bill (H. R. 7766) to declare Burr Creek, from Fairfield Avenue southward to Yacht Street in the city of Bridgeport, Conn., a nonnavigable stream; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT: A bill (H. R. 7767) creating the Owensboro Bridge Commission, defining the authority, power, and duties of said commission and authorizing said commission and its successors and assigns to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Owensboro, Ky.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. CHURCH: A bill (H. R. 7768) to provide for the establishment of a Coast Guard station on the shore of Illinois at or near Waukegan Harbor, Waukegan, Lake County; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. WEARIN: A bill (H. R. 7769) to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. BEITER: Resolution (H. Res. 268) to secure certain information for the House of Representatives from Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works; to the Committee on Appropriations.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. LANZETTA: A bill (H. R. 7770) for the relief of Domenick Zucaro; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. STACK: A bill (H. R. 7771) for the relief of Alice N. Boyle; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7772) granting a pension to Fannie Gauntlett; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

2838. By Mr. CASE of South Dakota: Resolution adopted by the League of South Dakota Municipalities at their annual meeting, urging Federal aid for good roads and streets based on a matching with municipal government; to the Committee on Roads.

2839. By Mr. CURLEY: Petition of the New York County Lawyers Association, urging disapproval of Senate bill 1890, introduced by Senator Norris, in relation to the power of the Supreme Court to render judgment declaring any act of Congress invalid because it is unconstitutional, unless concurred in by more than two-thirds of the members of the Court; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

2840. Also, petition of the New York County Lawyers Association, urging disapproval of Senate bill 1400, introduced by Senator WHEELER, to transfer to the Interstate Commerce Commission the functions now being performed by the United States Maritime Commission; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

2841. Also, petition of the Travelers Aid Society of Minneapolis, Minn., urging the passage of Senate Joint Resolution No. 85 to investigate the social and economic needs of laborers migrating across State lines; to the Committee on Labor.

2842. Also, petition of the New York County Lawyers Association, endorsing Senate bill 2226, introduced by Senator WHEELER, in regard to regulating interstate commerce in the products of child labor; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

2843. Also, petition of the New York County Lawyers Association, New York, N. Y., urging disapproval of House Joint Resolution 303, introduced by Congressman CASE of South Dakota to prohibit the Supreme Court from declaring an act of Congress or the acts of State legislatures unconstitutional unless the decision is concurred in by two-thirds of the members of the Court; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

2844. Also, petition of the New York County Lawyers Association, New York, N. Y., urging disapproval of House Joint Resolution 307, seeking to bring about the retirement of all Federal judges at 70 years of age, and the prohibition against the United States Supreme Court declaring an act of Congress unconstitutional unless concurred in by seven Justices of that Court; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

2845. Also, petition of the New York County Lawyers Association, urging disapproval of House Joint Resolution 404, introduced by Congressman O'MALLEY, seeking to amend the Constitution of the United States by providing that any law held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court shall be valid if reenacted by Congress; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

2846. By Mr. JARRETT: Petition of citizens of Pleasantville, Pa., protesting against the Hill-Sheppard bill (H. R. 1954; S. 25); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

2847. By Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON: Petition of J. S. Herring, manager of Ideal Laboratories, Inc., Waxahachie, Tex., opposing House bill 7667, to impose an excise tax on blackstrap molasses; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

2848. By Mr. PFEIFER: Petition of the American Vault Co., Brooklyn, N. Y., concerning the Black-Connery bills; to the Committee on Labor.

2849. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the San Francisco Bay Area District Council, No. 2, San Francisco, Calif., with reference to carrying out the present Works Progress Administration program without any cuts in personnel; to the Committee on Labor.

2850. Also, petition of the Wisconsin Legislature, memorializing Congress to enact House bill 6092; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

2851. Also, petition of the Common Council of the City of Detroit, memorializing the Congress to enact Senate bill 4424 and House bill 5033; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

2852. Also, petition of the Board of Aldermen of the City of New York, memorializing the Congress to appropriate sufficient funds to maintain the Federal Works Progress Administration at its present level except for those privately reemployed; to the Committee on Appropriations.

2853. Also, petition of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, memorializing the Congress to refrain from increasing the interest rate on loans made by the Farm Credit Administration; to the Committee on Agriculture.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, JULY 7, 1937

(Legislative day of Tuesday, July 6, 1937)

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Tuesday, July 6, 1937, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. LEWIS. I suggest the absence of a quorum, and ask for a roll call.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Chavez	Hughes	Pepper
Andrews	Clark	Johnson, Calif.	Pittman
Ashurst	Connally	Johnson, Colo.	Pope
Austin	Copeland	King	Radcliffe
Bailey	Davis	La Follette	Reynolds
Bankhead	Dieterich	Lee	Robinson
Barkley	Duffy	Lewis	Schwartz
Berry	Ellender	Logan	Schwellenbach
Bilbo	Frazier	Lonergan	Sheppard
Black	George	Lundeen	Shipstead
Bone	Gerry	McAdoo	Stelwer
Borah	Gillette	McCarran	Thomas, Okla.
Bridges	Glass	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Brown, Mich.	Green	McKellar	Townsend
Brown, N. H.	Guffey	McNary	Truman
Bulkley	Hale	Minton	Tydings
Bulow	Harrison	Moore	Van Nuys
Burke	Hatch	Murray	Wagner
Byrd	Hayden	Neely	Walsh
Byrnes	Herring	Nye	Wheeler
Capper	Hitchcock	O'Mahoney	White
Caraway	Holt	Overton

Mr. LEWIS. I announce the absence of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY], caused by illness.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are detained from the Senate on important public business. I ask that this announcement stand of record for the day.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is detained from the Senate because of illness.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that my colleague the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] is necessarily absent, and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is detained from the Senate by illness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

PETITIONS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the petition of Adam Th. Drekolias, of Los Angeles, Calif., praying for the extension until October 12, 1954, of his patent (no. 1355656) issued October 12, 1920, on the "means of preventing the sinking of ships", which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the Northern California Newspaper Guild and the East Bay Union of Machinists, in the State of California, favoring the carrying out of the present W. P. A. program without personnel reductions and the making of further appropriations therefor when current appropriations become exhausted, which were ordered to lie on the table.

LOW-COST HOUSING

Mr. WAGNER presented a statement of the Brooklyn (N. Y.) Committee for Better Housing, endorsing the pending low-cost housing bill, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Detroit Boosters' Association, Locals Nos. 329 and 415, of the United Automobile Workers of America, Branch No. 4504 of the N. C. Zamfirescu, Branch No. 3 of the Communist Party, the Dom Polski Association, and the Renters' and Consumers' League, all of Detroit, and the Lithuanian Literary Club, of Hamtramck, all in the State of Michigan, favoring the prompt enactment of the pending low-cost housing bill, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution signed by C. C. Ward, publisher of the River Rouge Herald, of River Rouge (Detroit), Mich. (with text identical with that of the resolutions just above noted), which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution for Wagner-Steagall housing bill addressed to Senator WAGNER and Congressman STEAGALL

Whereas there is an acute housing shortage in the city of Detroit that threatens the peace and welfare of the community; and

Whereas thousands of families are living in slum areas in homes unfit for human habitation; and

Whereas other thousands of families, in order to pay rents, have been forced to cut the food and necessities budget to the point that endangers the health and well-being of their children; and

Whereas slums are a breeding place of disease and crime and a menace to the health and safety of the city; and

Whereas slums constitute an unwarranted and unfair burden on the general taxpayer who has to pay for the excessive cost of city services in these areas which have a high percentage of tax delinquency; and

Whereas property owners are faced with depreciation of property values due to the encroachment of slums; and

Whereas private building enterprise cannot realize a reasonable and fair return on its investment in providing homes for families of an income of $1,000 or under; and

Whereas President Roosevelt estimates that one-third of the people of the United States are ill-housed, and this means that approximately 10,000,000 families live under conditions that endanger their lives and safety, and menace the well-being of all communities; and

Whereas public support of slum clearance and the rehousing of low-income wageworkers is rolling like a tidal wave across the country and all forces working for public housing—Federal, State, and municipal authorities, organized labor, the churches (Catholic, Protestant, and Jewish), civic and social agencies—are united in the belief that a plan for providing Federal assistance to local housing authorities must be adopted by the Congress in the present session; and

Whereas the Wagner-Steagall housing bill will meet these respective needs in providing homes, not below an accepted minimum standard, for families in the lower-income brackets who are not now able to secure decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings at rents they can afford to pay, a measure that is second to none in social importance, economic necessity, and the urgency of the people's need: And be it therefore

Resolved, That this organization go on record urging the Senate and the House of Representatives to enact this bill into law without delay: be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to Senator WAGNER and Representative STEAGALL.

RIVER ROUGE HERALD,
River Rouge, Mich., and 423 Reid Building, Detroit, Mich.
C. C. WARD, Publisher.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BROWN of Michigan, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 744) for the relief of Lulu M. Peiper, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 874) thereon.

Mr. BULOW, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2305) for the relief of William F. Kimball, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 875) thereon.

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2372) for expenditure of funds for cooperation with the public-school board at Wolf Point, Mont., for completing the construction, extension, equipment, and improvement of a public-school building to be available to Indian children of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 876) thereon.

Mr. STEIWER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 608) to authorize the leasing of certain Indian lands subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 877) thereon.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2263) providing for per-capita payments to the Seminole Indians in Oklahoma from funds standing to their credit in the Treasury, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 878) thereon.

Mr. FRAZIER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1774) to authorize the purchase of certain lands adjacent to the Turtle Mountain Indian Agency in the State of North Dakota, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 880) thereon.

Mr. McCARRAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7472) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 879) thereon.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on July 2, 1937, that committee presented to the President of the United States the enrolled bill (S. 2254) to amend section 460, chapter 44, title II, of the act entitled "An act to define and punish crimes in the District of Alaska and to provide a code of criminal procedure for said District", approved March 3, 1899, as amended.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

As in executive session,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported favorably from that committee the following nominations:

George S. Messersmith, of Delaware, to be an Assistant Secretary of State;

Grenville T. Emmet, of New York, now Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Netherlands, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Austria, vice George S. Messersmith;

Wilbur J. Carr, of New York, now an Assistant Secretary of State, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Czechoslovakia, vice J. Butler Wright;

Jefferson Caffery, of Louisiana, now Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Cuba, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Brazil, vice Hugh S. Gibson;

J. Butler Wright, of Wyoming, now Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Czechoslovakia, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Cuba, vice Jefferson Caffery;

Hugh S. Gibson, of California, now Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Brazil, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Belgium; also Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Luxemburg, vice Dave Hennen Morris;

Ferdinand L. Mayer, of Indiana, now a Foreign Service officer of class 1 and counselor of Embassy at Berlin, Germany, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Haiti, vice George A. Gordon;

Leland Harrison, of Illinois, now Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Rumania, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Switzerland, vice Hugh R. Wilson;

William E. Chapman, of Oklahoma, now a Foreign Service officer of class 5 and a consul, to be also a secretary in the Diplomatic Service; and

Ray Atherton, of Illinois, now a Foreign Service officer of class 1 and counselor of Embassy at London, England, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Bulgaria, vice Frederick A. Sterling.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported favorably the nomination of Fred G. Healy, of New Mexico, to be State administrator for New Mexico, in the Works Progress Administration, vice Lea Rowland.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 2751) to authorize the transfer to the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Treasury of portions of the property within the West Point Military Reservation, N. Y., for the construction thereon of certain public buildings, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NEELY:

A bill (S. 2752) for the relief of Russell C. Cross; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (S. 2753) granting an increase of pension to Hannah Gibbs; to the Committee on Pensions.

SAN FRANCISCO BAY EXPOSITION, 1939

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 88) providing for the participation of the United States in the world's fair to be held by the San Francisco Bay Exposition, Inc., in the city of San Francisco during the year 1939, and for other purposes, which was to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That there is hereby established a Commission, to be known as the United States Golden Gate International Exposition Commission and to be composed of the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of Labor, three Members of the House to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives and three Members of the Senate to be appointed by the President of the Senate; which Commission shall serve without additional compensation and shall represent the United States in connection with the holding of a world's fair and celebration in the city of San Francisco during the year 1939.

SEC. 2. There shall be a United States Commissioner for the Golden Gate International Exposition, who shall be appointed by the President, and who shall receive compensation at the rate of $10,000 per annum, and one Assistant Commissioner for said Golden Gate International Exposition, who shall be appointed by the Commissioner with the advice and approval of the Commission herein designated and shall receive compensation not to exceed $7,500 per annum. The salary and expenses of the Commissioner, the Assistant Commissioner, and such staff as the Commission may require, shall be paid out of the funds authorized to be appropriated by this joint resolution, for such period prior to the opening of the Gold Gate International Exposition as the Commission may determine, for the duration of the Golden Gate International Exposition, and for not more than 6 months after the official closing thereof.

SEC. 3. The Commission shall prescribe the duties of the United States Commissioner and shall delegate such powers and functions to him as it shall deem advisable, in order that there may be exhibited at the Golden Gate International Exposition by the Government of the United States, its executive departments, independent offices, and establishments, such articles and materials and documents and papers as may relate to the growth and development of civilization on the American continents and such as illustrate the function and administrative faculty of the Government in the advancement of industry, science, invention, agriculture, the arts, and peace, and demonstrating the historic growth and nature of American institutions, particularly as regards their adaptation to the needs of the people.

SEC. 4. In carrying out the purposes of this joint resolution, the Commission is authorized—

(a) To appoint, without regard to the civil-service laws and regulations and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, such clerks, stenographers, and other assistants, and to engage by contract or otherwise such other services as may be necessary in connection with the performance of the functions of the Commission, including the preparation of exhibits plans: Provided, however, That for similar services the pay shall not be in excess of that provided by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

(b) To erect, on land owned by the city and county of San Francisco, such building or buildings, or other structures, and to provide for the landscaping of the site or sites thereof: Provided, That in the construction of buildings and exhibits requiring skilled and unskilled labor, the prevailing rate of wages, as provided in the act of March 3, 1931 (46 Stat. 1494), shall be paid; to rent such space in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, without regard to section 322 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412), as the Commission may deem necessary; and to provide for the decoration and maintenance of buildings, structures, sites, and grounds during the period deemed necessary by the Commission.

(c) To use funds appropriated under authority of the joint resolution to pay salaries of employees of other Government agencies detailed or loaned for duty with the Commission at rates not in excess of the rates received in the agency from which detailed or loaned; to purchase books of reference, newspapers, and periodicals, payment for which, and for telephone service, rents, and similar items, may be made in advance; to purchase, hire, maintain, repair, and operate passenger-carrying vehicles for use of the Commissioner and Assistant Commissioner without regard to the statutory restrictions upon the price for new cars or the amounts which may be expended for maintenance, repair, and operation; to have printing and binding done elsewhere than at the Government Printing Office in the discretion of the Commission; to entertain distinguished guests; to provide for reimbursement of expenses of travel by airplane when deemed necessary notwithstanding the cost may exceed the cost by rail; to provide for insurance on privately owned exhibits loaned to the Commission; to purchase ice and drinking water for use in buildings and offices; to purchase uniforms for guards and attendants; and to incur such other expenses as may be deemed necessary to the fulfillment of the purposes of this joint resolution.

(d) To allot funds appropriated for the purposes of this resolution to any executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government with the consent of the head thereof, for direct expenditure in executing the duties or functions delegated by the Commission.

(e) To delegate any of its powers and authority, in its discretion, and any power or authority vested in the Commissioner by this resolution or delegated to him may be delegated or subdelegated by him to the Assistant Commissioner or to any other person or persons in the employ of the Commission or detailed to it.

SEC. 5. The heads of the various executive departments and independent offices and establishments of the Government are authorized to cooperate with said Commissioner in the procurement, installation, and display of exhibits, and to lend to the San Francisco Bay Exposition, Inc., sponsors of the Golden Gate International Exposition, with the knowledge and consent of said Commissioner, such articles, specimens, and exhibits as said Commissioner shall deem to be in the interest of the United States and in keeping with the purposes of such world's fair and celebration, to be placed with the science or other exhibits to be shown under the auspices of such Golden Gate International Exposition, to appoint without regard to civil-service laws and regulations and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, such draftsmen and other assistants as may be necessary, to contract for labor or other services as shall be deemed necessary, and to designate officials or employees of their departments or independent offices and establishments to assist said Commissioner. At the close of the world's fair, or when the connection of the Government of the United States therewith ceases, said Commissioner shall cause all such property to be returned to the respective departments and independent offices and establishments concerned, and any expenses incident to the restoration, modification, and revision of such property to a condition which will permit its use at subsequent expositions and fairs, and for the continued employment of personnel necessary to close out the fiscal and other records and prepare the required reports of the participating organizations, may be paid from the appropriation authorized herein; and if the return of such property is not feasible, he may, with the consent of the Commission and the departments or independent offices and establishments concerned, make such disposition thereof as he may deem advisable and account therefor.

SEC. 6. The sum of $1,500,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of this joint resolution, and shall remain available until expended; except that, upon the termination of the Commission, any unexpended or unobligated balances shall be covered back into the Treasury of the United States. And, subject to the provisions of this joint resolution, the Commission is authorized to erect, on land owned by the city and county of San Francisco, such building or buildings, or other structures, for its own use, and such other buildings and structures as will further the trade and good will between the United States and the other nations of the world, and to provide for the landscaping of the site or sites thereof; to rent such space without regard to the provisions of section 322 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412), as the Commission may deem adequate to carry out effectively the provisions of this joint resolution; to provide for the decorations of such buildings or structures, and for the proper maintenance of such buildings or structures, sites, and grounds during the period deemed necessary by the Commission: Provided, That the facilities of the Public Buildings Branch, Procurement Division, Treasury Department, may be utilized in the preparation of plans, drawings, designs, specifications, and estimates, the execution of contracts, and the supervision of construction in connection with any buildings or structures erected for Federal exhibits and for other purposes: Provided further, That funds designated for the foregoing construction purposes may be available for transfer to and expenditure by the Procurement Division, Treasury Department, to the extent and at such time as may be deemed necessary by the Director of Procurement to permit him to carry out such work as the Commission shall deem advisable to be contracted for in that manner. The appropriation authorized by this joint resolution shall be available for the operation of the building or buildings, structure or structures, improvement or improvements, including light, heat, water, gas, maid, janitor, and other required services; for the rental of space in the District of Columbia or elsewhere; for the selection, purchase, preparation, assembling, transportation, installation, arrangement, repair, safekeeping, exhibition, demonstration, and return of such articles and materials as the Commission may decide shall be included in such Government exhibits and in the exhibits of the Golden Gate International Exposition; for the purchase of uniforms, for the compensation of said Commissioner, Assistant Commissioner, and other officers and employees of the Commission in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, for the payment of salaries of officers and employees of the Government employed by or detailed for duty with the Commission, for actual traveling expenses, including travel by air, water, and automobile, and for per diem in lieu of actual subsistence at not to exceed $5 per day: Provided further, That no Government official or employee detailed for duty with the Commission shall receive a salary in excess of the rate which he has been receiving in the department or branch where regularly employed, plus such reasonable allowance to officers and enlisted men of the armed forces for additional uniforms and equipment required by participation in the Golden Gate International Exposition, including alterations, laundering, cleaning, and pressing thereof, as deemed proper by the Commissioner; for telephone service, purchase or rental of furniture and equipment, stationery, and supplies, typewriting, adding, duplicating, and computing machines, their accessories and repairs, books of reference and periodicals, uniforms, maps, reports, documents, plans, specifications, manuscripts, newspapers, and all other appropriate publications, and ice and electric refrigeration and drinking water for office purposes: Provided further, That payment for telephone service, rents, subscriptions to newspapers and periodicals, and other similar purposes, may be made in advance; for the purchase and hire of passenger-carrying automobiles, their maintenance, repair, and operation, for the official use of said Commissioner and Assistant Commissioner in the District of Columbia or elsewhere as required; for printing and binding; for entertainment of distinguished visitors; and for all other expenses as may be deemed necessary by the Commission to fulfill properly the purposes of this joint resolution. All purchases, expenditures, and disbursements of any moneys made available by authority of this joint resolution shall be made under the direction of the Commission: Provided further, That the Commission, without release of responsibility, as hereinbefore stipulated, may delegate these powers and functions: Provided further, That the Commission or its delegated representatives may allot funds appropriated herein to any executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government with the consent of the heads thereof, for direct expenditure by such executive department, independent office, or establishment, for the purpose of defraying any proper expenditure which may be incurred by such executive department, independent office, or establishment in executing the duties and functions delegated by the Commission. All accounts and vouchers covering expenditures shall be approved by said Commissioner or by such assistants as the Commission may designate, except for such allotments as may be made to the various executive departments, independent offices, and establishments for direct expenditure; but these provisions shall not be construed to waive the submission of accounts and vouchers to the General Accounting Office for audit, and permit any obligations to be incurred in excess of the amount authorized to be appropriated herein: And provided further, That in the construction of buildings and exhibits requiring skilled and unskilled labor, the prevailing rate of wages, as provided in the act of March 3, 1931, as amended, shall be paid. Subject to the provisions of this joint resolution, the Commission is authorized to make any expenditures or allotments deemed necessary by it to fulfill properly the purposes of this joint resolution.

SEC. 7. The Commissioner, with the approval of the Commission, may receive contributions from any source to aid in carrying out the purposes of this joint resolution, but such contributions shall be expended and accounted for in the same manner as the funds authorized to be appropriated by this joint resolution. The Commissioner is also authorized to receive contributions of material, or to borrow material or exhibits, and to accept the services of any skilled and unskilled labor that may be available through State or Federal relief organizations, to aid in carrying out the general purposes of this joint resolution. At the close of the world's fair and celebration or when the connection of the Government of the United States therewith ceases, the Commissioner shall dispose of any such portion of the material contributed as may be unused, and return such borrowed property; and, under the direction of the Commission, dispose of any buildings or structures which may have been constructed and account therefor: Provided, That all disposition of materials, property, buildings, and so forth, shall be at public sale to the highest bidder, and the proceeds thereof shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States: Provided further, That the Commission may, if it deems it desirable and in the public interest, transfer, with or without consideration, the title to the Federal Exhibits Building or buildings erected or constructed to the city and county of San Francisco.

The Commissioner, with the approval of the Commission and in cooperation with the Secretary of the Interior, may make provision for participation in the exposition by the Indian citizens of the United States. For this purpose the Commission may allot funds appropriated under authority of this joint resolution as may be necessary for the erection of buildings, the employment of supervisory and other personnel without regard to the civil-service laws and regulations and to fix their salaries in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and for all other expenses incident thereto, as the Commission shall deem advisable to be contracted for in that manner.

SEC. 8. It shall be the duty of the Commission to transmit to Congress, within 6 months after the close of the world's fair, a detailed statement of all expenditures, and such other reports as may be deemed proper, which reports shall be prepared and arranged with a view to concise statement and convenient reference. Upon the transmission of such report to Congress the Commission established by and all appointments made under the authority of this joint resolution shall terminate.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

SPEECHES BY AND EDITORIAL COMMENTS CONCERNING SENATOR ASHURST

[Mr. ASHURST asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD sundry speeches made by him, letters written by him, and editorial comments concerning him, which will appear hereafter in the Appendix.]

THE LATE JUSTICE HOLMES—TRIBUTE BY WALTER LIPPMANN

[Mr. MCCARRAN asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a reprint in the Reader's Digest of July 1937 from an article published in the New York Herald Tribune, written by Walter Lippmann on the occasion of the resignation from the Supreme Court of Mr. Justice Holmes, which will appear hereafter in the Appendix.]

THE GREAT FILIBUSTER—ARTICLE BY WALTER LIPPMANN

[Mr. MCCARRAN asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article by Walter Lippmann entitled "The Great Filibuster", published in the New York Herald Tribune of July 6, 1937, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE LABOR SITUATION—PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER EDITORIAL

[Mr. STEIWER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Philadelphia Inquirer of the issue of Wednesday, June 30, 1937, on the subject of present labor conditions, which appears in the Appendix.]

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 1392) to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, as the subject of my remarks is largely historical, and, I hope, noncontroversial, I request that my colleagues do not interrupt me until I shall have concluded.

Mr. President, this is the age of political realism in the United States. The sham battles that enlivened the atmosphere and amused the spectators in the gay days which preceded the economic depression are a thing of the past. If the actors in the political drama are still unaware of that fact, the audience is not.

The time has arrived when something more than lip service is demanded of those who enlist under the banner of progressivism and liberalism. The people of this country are aroused. They are distrustful of leaders who say, "I am for judicial reform, but I dislike the President's method of accomplishing it." "I am for a bill establishing minimum wages and maximum hours, but I disagree with details of the administration's program." "I am for adequate farm-relief legislation and a decent income for farmers, but I disagree with many features of the administration policy." "I am for conservation and social security and all those things, but I think we ought to go slowly in writing them into law."

Mr. President, when a liberal puts the word "but" after his declaration of political faith it is prima-facie evidence either that he secretly believes in the philosophy of reactionary Bourbonism or else he lacks the courage of his own convictions. The test of office holding should no longer be what a man says he believes. The test should be what he actually does and how he votes.

It is not my purpose to warn my colleagues or to criticize their actions. The Democratic Party sits here today in overwhelming power because we went before the people and solemnly pledged ourselves to outlaw economic wrongs and injustices that have been rankling and festering for generations. For the first time in many years political promises were taken to have definite meaning. The voters in last November's election entrusted into our hands the solemn duty of giving legal and concrete form to the social and economic aspirations of the vast majority of American citizens.

This task lies ahead of us today. This task is bound up completely and inextricably in the current effort of the Democratic Party to transform the United States Supreme Court from a superlegislative body that is above and beyond the law into the kind of impartial tribunal for the adjudication of judicial disputes that it was originally intended to be.

It is futile for Senators to sit here legislating on the most vital aspects of social and economic conditions, if they know in their hearts that what is being done may be arbitrarily overturned by a few aged Justices who substitute their "own political predilections" for the Constitution of the country. This game of political blind man's bluff is about over.

There are persons who proclaim their belief in the purposes of the Roosevelt administration and who believe that the Supreme Court sometime ago set itself against the program of that administration, but who at the same time proclaim that it would be morally wrong to do anything about the Court. I frankly cannot understand such a position, whether it be taken by a Senator, a Member of the House of Representatives, or any other citizen.

Today the public expects something more than a mere recital of ideals and aspirations. The outstanding lesson to be learned from the events of the past few years is the fact that liberal and progressive forces of the Nation can write their program into law, if they stand shoulder to shoulder fighting for the principles in which they profess to believe. The people of progressive turn of mind are in the overwhelming majority in the country, and there is no reason why they should be in a minority here in the Congress of the United States.

The essence of democracy is majority rule. The American people, by a plurality never before equaled in our history, indicated that they desired the enactment of a program of social legislation to meet the conditions which exist today.

They did not ask Congress to think up a lot of legal quibbles and sophistries as to why this cannot be done or that cannot be done. They experienced too much of that type of negative statesmanship in the days of the unfortunate Mr. Hoover. What they want now is not someone to tell them why this or that program cannot be enacted but to point out how it can be enacted. The people would like a demonstration of the fact that progressivism in politics means something more than a constant policy of obstruction and frustration.

In undertaking a discussion of President Roosevelt's program for judicial reform, the first thing to strike the attention is the effort being made by those who oppose social reform to paint the Supreme Court as a hallowed institution whose august members, endowed with qualities of mind almost supernatural, have found a way to distill the pure spirit of law free from the impurities and corrupting influence of bias, passion, or prejudice.

This erroneous myth is being nourished with painful and loving care in the hope that it may become implanted for all time to come as a sacred tradition in the consciousness of the American people. As a matter of concrete fact, nothing could be further from the truth. History shows conclusively that throughout most of its existence the Supreme Court has been enmeshed in partisan party politics, that throughout most of its history it has been openly hailed as the last bulwark of reaction, that its members frequently have been appointed for political considerations, and that this spirit of partisan politics has been very rampant in the present Court.

Unquestionably, the Court was conceived originally by the founding fathers as an institution to be composed of men whose outlook and motivations took root in the rich soil of national patriotism and whose zeal was to be directed to the promotion of even-handed justice and to the impartial interpretation of the Constitution. But in actual practice the Court has fallen woefully short of that idea. The very fact of this debate here today is sufficient evidence to prove that the Court has not played the role assigned to it.

If some of my colleagues are inclined to disagree, let me remind them that the most severe criticisms of the course pursued by the supreme tribunal have come from Senators who are now actively and heatedly opposing the Chief Executive's program of reform and reorganization.

In all the welter of words and arguments over this issue, let us never lose sight of the fundamental fact that this problem confronts us today because the Supreme Court of the United States has been partisan, prejudiced, and biased in denying workingmen and farmers their fundamental legal rights. That is the real core of the issue, and we may as well state that fact bluntly and boldly. Had the Justices been half as zealous in upholding the rights of the poor and lowly as they have been in protecting the property rights of the wealthy, this problem would not be resting on the doorstep of the President and Congress.

My recollections in politics go back a great many years—in fact from the time I was first old enough to listen and understand, it was my pleasure to hear my father and his friends earnestly discussing political happenings and events.

Although he never had studied law, my father was a keen student of public affairs and thoroughly versed in the history of the Supreme Court. His political philosophy consisted of a firm and unshaken belief in the deathless principles of true democracy. He never lost that faith.

My political education began so early that often the points at issue were beyond my comprehension, but I was always impressed by the fact that my father was convinced that the Supreme Court had been a partisan, political body almost from its inception. Time and again I recall hearing him inveigh against the crafty and cunning methods used by John Marshall to thwart and frustrate the democratic principles which were becoming the bedrock of Americanism during the administrations of Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe.

The annals of history bear out his contention that the Supreme Court was a partisan body. Whatever were the attainments of the illustrious John Marshall in molding the outlines of constitutional law, the record discloses beyond the possibility of doubt or cavil that when matters came before the Court clothed in the form of judicial questions but with a shadow of politics hovering close by, he was unable to divest himself of his political beliefs in rendering his decisions.

It was this spirit of partisanship which caused him to issue a subpena for President Jefferson in the trial of Aaron Burr, a subpena which Jefferson rightfully scorned and ignored. Even the most friendly biographers of Marshall agree that his action in that instance was a blemish on his legal career, and it induced Thomas Jefferson to say:

"His twistifications of the law in the case of Marbury, in that of Burr, and the late Yazoo case, show how dexterously he can reconcile law to his own personal biases."

Throughout its early history the Justices of the Supreme Court on occasion after occasion gave tangible proof of the fact that their thinking was tinged with partisan feeling that had its roots in party politics. A great many early members of the Court had an itch for political preferment, and they made no effort to conceal that fact from the public.

John Jay, the first Chief Justice, held that office and the office of Secretary of State simultaneously, and he ran for Governor of New York while still Chief Justice. Oliver Ellsworth was for over a year both Chief Justice and Minister to France.

Justice William Cushing ran for Governor of Massachusetts while he was still a member of the Court. Bushrod Washington, a nephew of George Washington, actively supported Charles C. Pinckney for President. John Marshall continued in office as Secretary of State for more than a month after his appointment and confirmation as Chief Justice, and signed his own commission as Chief Justice.

In point of fact, the Federal judiciary of a century and a quarter ago was so saturated with politics in the inexcusable sense that Congress, backed by weight of public opinion, finally found it necessary to act. One of the worst offenders was Judge Samuel Chase, who was given to passionate harangues from the bench on matters which did not even remotely concern the judicial problems which lay before him. In one of these vituperative outbursts, Chase allowed his Federalist views to carry him to the point of denouncing Congress and the universal suffrage act, which had only recently been passed in his own State of Maryland.

Congress took up the challenge. The House of Representatives voted the articles of impeachment; and, although the vote in the Senate lacked the necessary two-thirds for conviction, Chase and his associates were so humbled and sobered by his narrow escape that the Supreme Bench was relatively freed from politics for years afterward. This purging of the judiciary was brought about by the courageous actions of President Jefferson and his supporters in Congress, and not by a realization by the members of the Court themselves that they had been offending against the ethics of the positions which they occupied.

To those of you who are inclined to believe in the theory that history repeats itself, what happened under Thomas Jefferson in regard to the Supreme Court is a fitting parallel for what is happening today. Once again, unfortunately, we have Justices on the bench who are far more concerned with the propagation of their own political views than they are with the scrupulous interpretation of the organic law of the land, and once again we have a Chief Executive who has the courage to challenge and condemn that partisanship.

In view of recent Court decisions, I think every Senator will agree that President Roosevelt has been as successful as his illustrious predecessor, Mr. Jefferson, in changing the habits of Supreme Court thought.

After the scare given the august members of the Supreme Tribunal by Mr. Jefferson and his supporters, the Federal judiciary was relatively free from partisanship for nearly half a century. The idea that the courts were to stand forth openly as the last bulwark of reactionary political thinking had been shot away by the stern action taken in the Chase case.

Even John Marshall was so deeply impressed by the determination of Congress and the people to uproot the evil of judicial partisanship that he suggested that a better method than impeachment might be the adoption of legislative review of unsound decisions. He said:

"A reversal of those legal opinions deemed unsound by the legislature would certainly better comport with the mildness of our character than a removal of the judge who has rendered them unknowing of his fault."

The action taken by the Supreme Court in the Dred Scott case has become such an integral part of American history that the facts, and their significance in influencing what came after, are familiar to all. Time and conditions had changed, the Nation was agitated by vexing and complex issues of a profound nature, and the political alignments of the day bore little resemblance to what they did in Jefferson's time. It may be easy to concede that Chief Justice Taney and his Associate Justices were honestly motivated by a sincere desire to remove the menacing issue of slavery, once and for all, from the political scene by rendering a decision that would be accepted as final by all factions and all sections.

Whatever their motives, the Supreme Court Justices in the Dred Scott case dipped deeply into partisan politics, and the appalling catastrophe which soon followed was due in great measure to the arbitrary action taken by the Court. The facts show that the lower Federal courts first disposed of the case on grounds which were in no way related to the constitutionality of the Missouri Compromise. The Supreme Court at first decided to uphold the decision of the lower court and instructed Justice Nelson to write the opinion.

Later Chief Justice Taney decided to adopt a different attitude, to enlarge the scope of the case, and, as he expressed it, to "quiet all agitation on the question of slavery in the Territories."

The fact that President Buchanan was informed in advance of the Court's intention to pass upon the legality of the Missouri Compromise and other related questions has now been fully revealed. There is also available to students and researchers sufficient documentary evidence to show the strong undercurrents of partisan feeling that were at play beneath the surface as Justices on each side of the question maneuvered to advance their own beliefs. The legal problems involved were thus swallowed up in the larger issue of politics. So it was, as in all other instances where the supreme tribunal has confused politics with the law, nothing tangible was gained either for the Court or for the country, and the net result was, in the opinion of many, a severe loss in the dignity and prestige of the Court.

In this connection it is interesting to note that the Dred Scott case was the first in which the Supreme Court had possessed the hardihood to declare an act of Congress unconstitutional since the House of Representatives had voted the impeachment of Judge Chase over 50 years before. Apparently the lesson had been well learned.

It is interesting to note also that the Dred Scott case was omitted from the list published on the occasion of the centenary of the Court which enumerated the cases in which the Supreme Court is regarded as having declared a law of Congress unconstitutional.

The attitude of Abraham Lincoln toward the Supreme Court, especially when he thought that tribunal was stepping outside its powers to interfere with the proper conduct of the war, is so well known that there is no occasion for repetition on my part. The fact that on at least one occasion he defied a ruling of the Court is generally known; but I wish to pause long enough to give one quotation from Mr. Lincoln which should be of particular interest in view of the present controversy over Mr. Roosevelt's proposal to enlarge the membership of the Court.

George S. Boutwell, of Massachusetts, attributes Lincoln as stating at the time Salmon P. Chase, then Secretary of the Treasury, was being mentioned for appointment to the Chief Justiceship:

There are three reasons in favor of his appointment and one very strong reason against it. First, he occupies the largest place in the public mind in connection with the office. Then we wish for a Chief Justice who will sustain what has been done in regard to emancipation and the legal tenders.

We cannot ask a man what he will do, and if we should and he should answer us, we should despise him for it. Therefore, we must take a man whose opinions are known. But there is one very strong reason against his appointment. He is a candidate for President, and if he does not give up that idea it will be very bad for him and very bad for me.

I hope my colleagues noted that Mr. Lincoln, a profound believer in the American system and a patriot of the deepest convictions, considered it both honorable and necessary to appoint Supreme Court Justices whose views on vital questions before the Court were known to be favorable to the acts of his administration. In view of the abuse that has been hurled at Mr. Roosevelt on the ground that he might presumably name judges who looked with sympathy on the aims of his administration, I wonder what these eminent critics think of Mr. Lincoln, who went further in that respect than Mr. Roosevelt ever thought of going? Whatever the answer, the record is unmistakable that both Jefferson and Lincoln had no hesitancy in challenging the authority of the Court when they knew they were right.

The same is also true of President Theodore Roosevelt, as evidenced from the following quotations from his books Roosevelt's Progressive Principles and Roosevelt's Messages and Papers.

President Theodore Roosevelt, in speaking of a decision by the Court of Appeals of New York in the Employers' Liability case, said:

What is the result of this system of judicial nullification? * * * to any man with vision, to any man with broad and real social sympathies, to any man who believes with all his heart in this great democratic Republic of ours such a condition is intolerable. This is not government by the people, but mere sham government in which the will of the people is constantly defeated.

It is out of this experience that my remedy has come and let it be tried in this field. When, as the result of years of education and debate, a majority of the people have decided upon a remedy for an evil from which they suffer and have chosen a Legislature and Executive pledged to embody that remedy in law, and the law has been finally passed and approved, I regard it as monstrous that a bench of judges shall then say to the people, "You must begin all over again."

There are, however, some members of the judicial body who have lagged behind in their understanding of these great and vital changes in the body politic, whose minds have never been opened to the new applications of the old principles made necessary by the new conditions. Judges of this stamp do lasting harm by their decisions, because they convince poor men in need of protection that the courts of the land are profoundly ignorant of and out of sympathy with their needs, and profoundly indifferent or hostile to any proposed remedy.

Too often the facts indicate that men on the Supreme Bench have continued to nourish overweening political ambitions even while they were wearing the robes of office. That was true of at least one Chief Justice and one Associate Justice in the period after the Civil War, and it has likewise been true in the case of men occupying those exalted positions in our own time.

In fact, it is accurate and fair to state that the present period of the Supreme Court will go down in history as a time in which partisan politics played a role of great magnitude both in the Court's deliberations and in its decisions.

At this point I think it wise to point out that the foundations for a political court were deliberately laid by the Republican Party elders who ruled this country in the decade following the World War. For proof of that statement, it is necessary only to refer again to the letter written in 1920 by the late President William Howard Taft, and which was first made public in a radio address by our majority leader, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], a few weeks ago. Said Mr. Taft, in explaining why he was supporting the Republican candidate for President:

Take, for instance, the four places likely to be filled by Wilson's successor on the Supreme Court. Think of the danger of another Brandeis and Clark. The power and the usefulness of that Court would be broken down under such appointments if the majority of the Court were to be made up of them.

Mr. Taft stated the case as baldly as it could be stated. Unless the Court was packed with reactionaries who were in effect pledged to oppose every enlightened economic and social step taken by Congress, then the Court, to use his words, would lose its power and influence. It will be noted that Mr. Taft was not concerned for a moment with the legal and constitutional aspects of such a question.

What happened? The Republican candidate, Mr. Harding, was elected and the Court was soundly and solidly packed by him to such an extent that legislation to protect the farmer and the workingman was doomed almost before it was passed.

That was the situation when Mr. Roosevelt came into office, carrying with him a mandate from the mass of American people to reestablish the principle of equal justice under majority rule. That is the condition which has existed almost to this hour. Until the last couple of months, the supreme political power in this country has been the Supreme Court of the United States, and its grip has been broken only by the courage and the single-minded purpose of President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

It is all very well for my colleagues to work themselves into a fury of indignation over Mr. Roosevelt's proposal to enlarge the Supreme Court. It is their privilege to view with alarm and to thunder from the mountain top that the stricken Republic will totter to its doom if any reorganization plan is enacted into law. It is their privilege to picture this issue as a struggle on their part to preserve unsullied and unharmed the springs and sources of judicial power. But I venture to predict that their naive view will find little support when the story of this era is written into history.

The men and women who look at this controversy with the proper degree of detachment will see this struggle for what it is—a contest for political power between two opposing groups whose political philosophies are diametrically opposed. Any man who contends that the Supreme Court itself has not indulged in politics in the last few months is either totally ignorant of what has happened or he has a childlike faith in human nature that is wholly out of place in the realistic sphere of public affairs.

The record now shows positively that until a few months ago a majority of the members of the Supreme Court of the United States were engaged in the dubious business of blocking the social-reform program of the Roosevelt administration.

We have already seen how the appointment of reactionary judges was a cardinal doctrine in the program of Republican leaders. We can trace the subsequent decisions of these judges on the bench, and we find that in almost every case their so-called judicial opinions were identical with their views on current political questions. In fact, the similarity is too glaring to pass for coincidence.

When opposing forces meet in human affairs, we naturally seek to appraise the leaders on either side. In the present instance, the leadership of President Roosevelt is so well understood by the American people, his purposes and his plans are put forth with such candor and frankness that there is no occasion for lengthy consideration of what his program means in terms of the common welfare. But there is ample reason for giving deep thought and consideration to the man who today leads the opposition party to the Roosevelt New Deal.

In appraising the judicial record of the present Chief Justice of the United States, it is appropriate to reexamine the acts of his public career and to determine whether his conduct on the bench has been in keeping with what might reasonably be expected of a man of his experience and background.

The first and most impressive thing to be noted in connection with Mr. Hughes is the fact that his background has been political throughout the major portion of his adult life. In fact, he was elevated to his present position of eminence on the Supreme Bench not only because of his judicial attainments but because of his achievements as a Republican Party leader. In other words, the post was awarded on the basis of a juicy political plum.

Mr. Hughes first came into national prominence when he was elected Governor of New York State in 1906 as a candidate on the Republican ticket. He was reelected for a second 2-year term, and he left that office to become an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, to which he was appointed by President Taft.

When a man takes his place on the supreme judicial tribunal of the land, it is customary to assume that he has voluntarily removed himself from the arena of public affairs in order to avoid the passions, disagreements, and disputes which arise from clashing opinions and intense partisan feeling. However, in the case of Mr. Hughes that was not true. Less than 6 years after he had gathered the robes of office about him, he summarily resigned in order to reenter the political lists as the standard bearer of his party in the contest for the Presidency of the United States. It was a year of intense political partisanship, and it can be said without fear of contradiction that Mr. Hughes' services on the bench had in no way unfitted him for his new role. His partisanship was never questioned.

When the American people decided that they preferred to have Mr. Wilson in the White House, Mr. Hughes returned to the private practice of law. He reentered public life in 1921 to become Secretary of State in the Cabinet of President Harding, continuing in that office for a time under Mr. Coolidge. He resigned as Secretary of State in 1925, again to enter the private practice of law. His renown in the field of public affairs brought him an extensive practice, during the course of which he appeared as counsel before the Supreme Bench to plead for his clients before his former colleagues.

Mr. Hughes was named by President Hoover in 1930, as a reward for his active support of Herbert Hoover in 1928, to the exalted post of Chief Justice of the United States, and a couple of weeks later he was confirmed by the Senate.

The fact that his confirmation was strenuously opposed by some of the distinguished Senators who are still Members of this body is generally known. Although in the end the nomination prevailed, it is accurate to state that the reasons advanced in opposition made a profound impression upon the whole country.

I think some of the Senators who spoke in opposition were almost prophetic when they objected to his confirmation on the ground that politics had always been the dominating motive in his career. Let me read to the Senate what the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] had to say in the course of that debate on February 11, 1930:

> My futile objection to the confirmation of this nominee is based, first, on his insensibility. In theory and expectation, a person appointed and confirmed to the highest court in this land should serve for his lifetime, or until he is himself convinced that he has reached that point of service and that age in life when he finds himself disqualified for the position.
>
> That is why Supreme Court judges have life tenure; and it has always seemed to me an exhibition of the severest indifference to that theory and that consideration for any Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States to contemplate for a moment discarding the ermine and coming down from his exalted station to participate selfishly in the turmoils and disputes of partisan politics. I believe this whole country felt a shock, as it was grievously distressed, when Mr. Hughes resigned his place on the Supreme Court Bench to be a candidate for President of the United States.
>
> I think the offense, if such it be—and such, in my conception, it was—is frightfully accentuated when he is nominated for a position upon that same bench and indicates a willingness to accept such nomination. For that reason alone I could not in conscience or judgment vote for his confirmation, because, as I have said perhaps rather severely, such action indicates an insensibility that does not become a man who is to pass, in the last stage and final analysis, upon the great concerns of this Nation."

The Senator from Virginia stated the grounds of his objections so well that there was little else to be said. During the course of the same debate a few days later the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] told why he was against the confirmation of Mr. Hughes. I quote from the remarks of the Senator from North Dakota:

> "We find him retiring from the Court to become a candidate for President. His candidacy failed, and Mr. Hughes becomes again a private citizen. He gave up his place on the Court, I suppose, because he preferred the Presidency to it. To his retirement from the Court to seek the Presidency I think there can be no valid objection, and of that action there can be no real criticism; but I believe, Mr. President, that there is grave and general ground for objection to his return to that Court as a member after he has once shown politics to be a really dominating factor in the charting of his own course.

I think what the Senator from North Dakota said about politics being the dominating factor in the career of our present Chief Justice might be used as the text in preparing a description of the Court itself. After what has happened in the past few months, what Senator here would care to stand up and contend that politics has not had its place in the deliberations of the Court?

Let us look at the facts honestly and candidly. A majority of the aged Justices who compose the Court were intent upon thwarting the major purposes of the Roosevelt administration. By their votes the Court invalidated the National Recovery Act and the Agricultural Adjustment Act. The Guffey Coal Act, designed to bring order out of chaos in the bituminous industry, was likewise overturned. A host of State statutes seeking to regulate the hours and pay of women in industry were stricken from the books. There is no question that the outlook of the Court was dead set against the social and economic philosophy of the national administration. As a result the people, the President, and the Congress were powerless to act.

Then it was that President Roosevelt adopted the same kind of straightforward, courageous tactics which had been employed by his illustrious predecessors in office, Jefferson, Jackson, and Lincoln. He challenged the moral and legal right of five aged Justices to hobble the political life of the Nation simply because they disliked the policies and the program of the party in power. The issue was joined.

What has happened? Since then the United States Supreme Court itself has proceeded to demonstrate that President Roosevelt was completely and absolutely right. Facing an aroused Nation, sensitive to the fact that the people were intolerant of what had been going on, the Court decided to yield as the safest way out.

First, the decision of the Court forbidding the enactment of State minimum-wage laws for women was overthrown. There was no change in the law and no change in the Constitution since the previous contrary decision had been rendered less than a year before. The change was in the attitude of the judges.

Then came the Wagner Labor Disputes Act. It was upheld by a majority decision of the Court, and by a process of reasoning which bore every evidence of being a complete reversal of what the majority said in striking down the Guffey Coal Act. Once again the Court had yielded.

Next came a momentous decision which will live for scores of years to come as a landmark in the struggle of civilized people to protect men and women from the hazards and shocks of industrial life. By another 5-to-4 decision the Court decided that the Social Security Act came within the scope of the Constitution.

There is the record. Who changed, the Constitution or the judges, and why? We know that this reversal of attitude was made a fact because the eminent jurist from Pennsylvania, Mr. Justice Roberts, decided to do an about face and to change his mind regarding the true meaning of the Federal Constitution. Yet I am inclined to agree with those news writers who assert that the palm for the masterly political strategy employed by the Court members during the past couple of months must be awarded to the supremely clever politician and scholarly Mr. Chief Justice Hughes. He it was who has been the real master of tactics behind the scenes, and hardly anyone can question the adroitness of the moves that have been made.

The letter of the Chief Justice to my eminent colleague the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], in which he rendered an advisory opinion to the effect that all cases should be considered by the full Court and not by one or more members, was extremely effective.

The resignation of Mr. Justice Van Devanter, coming as it did on the morning when the Senate Judiciary Committee was voting on the reorganization bill, was especially well timed. The country, in fact, has enjoyed the spectacle of the political battling between the respective leaders.

But the people of the United States have a different way of looking at these things. They know an about face when they observe one, and they are sensible enough to know why such things happen. Facts are more impressive to the public than oratory.

It was a glorious day of triumph for the working people of this country when that odious decision of the Supreme Court forbidding the enactment of State minimum-wage laws for women was swept aside; and let me say that the man responsible for that great humane victory, singly and alone, is President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The Court's reversal of an unjust decision was brought about not by the political wiles of Chief Justice Hughes and his associates but by the statesmanship of Mr. Roosevelt. He forced the Court to act in behalf of the people. What saddens me is that this victory was accomplished by the leader of our party over the opposition of Democratic Members of this Senate who have, because of what I believe to be a mistaken viewpoint, allied themselves with reactionary leadership.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GUFFY. I decline to yield.

The substance of justice is what is important—not the form.

It was far more imperative to wipe away the injustice of the minimum-wage decision than it was to preserve the Court membership at any given number. The same fact is true regarding the other outstanding human issues which we confront at this time.

The Social Security Act, with its pledge of assistance to aging men and women who need financial aid, is today the law of the land because of the brave and untring fight waged by President Roosevelt. Had he faltered in the fight, had he listened to the counsel of those who feared to face this Court issue openly, the Social Security Act would today be on the junk pile along with the A. A. A. and other acts intended to help the economic position of those in distress. The same may be said of the Labor Relations Act.

I am amused at times by some of my colleagues who recoil with horror from the Chief Executive's Supreme Court reorganization bill because they say it smacks of politics in the Court. In view of what has happened, I wonder what these Democrats think of the politics being played by Mr. Hughes and his Associate Justices.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GUFFEY. I decline to yield.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator from Pennsylvania asked a question. He ought to be willing to yield to permit an answer to be made to it.

Mr. GUFFEY. I decline to yield.

The Supreme Court is playing politics, and everyone knows it; and when the Chief Justice of the United States persists in campaigning politically against the administration's reorganization program, as, for instance, he was doing in his recent utterances at the Amherst College and Brown University commencements, I intend to place that fact upon the record.

If my colleagues feel so strongly on the subject, why have they remained silent while the Court itself has been going through this amazing spectacle of political backing and filling?

I wonder if some of them felt that the Court had let them down when it yielded to the popular will and changed its position on minimum wages and other related issues?

Mr. CLARK. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. GUFFEY. I do not yield. I announced at the beginning of my remarks that I would not yield.

To me it always seems a bit hypocritical for Tory, reactionary leaders to complain that the Chief Executive's bill would inject politics into the Court, when all their lives these reactionaries have been treating the Court as a partisan political body.

Once again let me assure the Senators on this side of the Chamber that if they are unaware of the fact that this is a political struggle between the two parties, the leaders on the other side are fully conscious of that fact. I must commend the astute and able leadership of my friend the senior Senator from Oregon, who has managed to get the maximum of political advantage for his own party by the somewhat novel process of maintaining silence as deep as the grave on this issue. It has been the part of wisdom on his part to hold his lines while Senators on this side of the aisle have been firing the heavy guns for the opposition.

But I ask my colleagues on this side of the aisle if the time has not come to end this artificial political alignment?

The history of the past few months tells its own story. We were elected by the American people in the belief that we would strive faithfully and earnestly to write the humane program of President Roosevelt into law.

Today victory is flowing his way because he has had the courage to drive head on against the hidden vice of political prejudice on the Supreme Court. He is winning because he is right and for no other reason. Why put obstacles in the path?

A decisive decision on this question will have its beneficial effects for decades to come. When Jefferson made his frontal assault against partisanship on the bench, the healthy effects of that action were felt for half a century. Similar good effects will result from favorable decisive action now.

I believe it accurate to say that there is hardly a Senator in this Chamber who will not agree that a reasonable retirement age should be observed by jurists who have a life position on the Federal bench. The necessity for such a practice has been made evident almost since the very beginning of the Court. Time and again Justices have remained so long that it was painfully apparent to the Nation that they were no longer fit to carry on the duties of their exalted position.

More than a century ago a Chief Justice remained upon the bench until he had reached a very advanced age. The opinion was general that the time had come for him to step down. A distinguished statesman, Senator Thomas H. Benton, of Missouri, was mentioned as a possible successor. He declined to be considered for that honor, but in writing to a friend he used the following words:

> The Chief Justice ought to resign. The elevation of the station requires that a man should descend from it with grace and dignity instead of hanging on until he tumbles off.

I commend Senator Benton's words to the country and to the Court.

The Supreme Court is in retreat from its unyielding attitude of resistance to needed social reforms, a retreat which constitutes in itself a full confession of the fact that President Roosevelt is right in this controversy.

When the highest tribunal in the land sees fit to overthrow its own decisions the evidence is convincing that those decisions were indefensible both in law and in common sense. That is particularly true of the decision affecting minimum wages for women.

We Democrats have been proud of the fact that throughout its long history our party has been looked upon as a special friend and protector of humble men and women. In the spirit of this grand tradition a Democratic President is now winning notable victories for the underprivileged working men and women who, too often in the past, have been left to the mercy of greedy exploiters.

To these folks the Constitution is again becoming what it should always be—a noble charter of human rights.

In conclusion I want to say that, as a partisan and as one who believes in the two-party system of government, I not only prefer but will support the leadership of Franklin D. Roosevelt and Senator JOSEPH T. ROBINSON rather than the leadership of Chief Justice Hughes and Senator CHARLES D. MCNARY.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question at this time?

Mr. GUFFEY. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKE. I understood the Senator to say that he considered it futile for Senators to sit here and legislate in the effort to remove economic wrongs without there being any certainty that the legislation would be upheld by the Supreme Court. Do I quote the Senator substantially correct?

Mr. GUFFEY. No; I said that we were foolish to sit here and legislate when we know that the legislation would be turned down.

Mr. BURKE. Then the Senator did not use the term that was used by the President in reference to what he wanted concerning legislation?

Mr. GUFFEY. I do not think I used the same words.

Mr. BURKE. Then it is not the Senator's idea that in passing legislation we need certainty that it will be upheld by the Supreme Court?

Mr. GUFFEY. I agree with Mr. Lincoln on that point and I quoted his language.

Mr. BURKE. Then the Senator agrees that the attitude of judges should be ascertained in advance?

Mr. GUFFEY. I want men whose attitude of mind we know. Mr. Lincoln knew the attitude of the man he wanted to put on the bench.

Mr. BURKE. If there be enough appointments of that kind, there will be the certainty of which the Senator has been talking?

Mr. GUFFEY. That is what we hope to accomplish in this work for human welfare and human advancement.

Mr. BURKE. Let me ask a question about the Dred Scott case, which the Senator elaborated upon to some extent. That was the first case since the House voted the impeachment of a Supreme Court judge where the Court had the hardihood to override an act of Congress, the Senator said, and he followed that up by the statement that "evidently the Court had learned its lesson."

Mr. GUFFEY. That is what I stated.

Mr. BURKE. Does the Senator believe at all in the doctrine of judicial review, and that we ought to have a court to pass on the constitutionality of measures?

Mr. GUFFEY. Oh, yes, I do.

Mr. BURKE. The Senator still believes in that?

Mr. GUFFEY. Yes.

Mr. BURKE. But along with that view the Senator believes that it is proper for Congress or a President or both to make their influence on the Court so strong that they will, as the Senator says, "learn their lesson" and not dare to override acts of Congress?

Mr. GUFFEY. I did not put it exactly as the Senator has stated it; but I hope the Court will learn from the history of the past that they will understand what this movement is about, and will act accordingly.

Mr. BURKE. Further, is it not entirely possible that in the period of years immediately preceding the Dred Scott decision the reason there had been no overturning of acts of Congress by the Supreme Court was that Congress in that period may have been more careful to legislate within the terms of the Constitution and not outside it? Does the Senator have any information on that point?

Mr. GUFFEY. I have no information, but I think the Congresses of that period took the same chance as the Congresses of our time in passing legislation. It was a constructive, growing period of the country. I have not studied the acts which were passed during that period, but I think the Congress then ran the same risk in enacting legislation as does the Congress now.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I do not wish to interfere, but may I take the liberty of calling the attention of my able friend to the income-tax law which was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, by a member of the Court from Pennsylvania, Justice Shiras, changing his opinion, after the manner of Mr. Justice Roberts, of Pennsylvania, in more recent days?

Mr. GUFFEY. For the information of the Senator from Illinois, I am sorry to say that three out of the four reversals of single opinions on the Supreme Court were by Justices coming from Pennsylvania. I am sorry for that record of Justices coming from my State.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in the case of Justice Shiras he changed rather more suddenly than did Justice Roberts.

Mr. GUFFEY. Yes.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, just one other question.

Mr. GUFFEY. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Does the Senator object very seriously to the present Chief Justice and challenge his competency to serve on the Court because the dominating factor in his life has been politics?

Mr. GUFFEY. No. I merely called the attention of the country to that fact.

Mr. BURKE. Did not the Senator really set forth, as a reason for disqualifying him from serving on the Court, that he was given over to politics?

Mr. GUFFEY. That is what some of our colleagues said when the question of his confirmation came up; that is the ground on which they objected to him.

Mr. BURKE. What is the Senator's view on that subject?

Mr. GUFFEY. I think he is disqualified if he goes out and makes political speeches. I think that is true of any Chief Justice or Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. BURKE. So the fact of his deep interest in politics disqualifies him? That leads me to this question: There is now a vacancy on the Supreme Court, and one of those whose names we hear mentioned most often for the nomination has devoted every conscious moment of his life to politics, and in a very high and noble way. Does the Senator, therefore, consider him disqualified to serve on the Court?

Mr. GUFFEY. Under no circumstances do I think he is disqualified [laughter], for the simple reason he will respect the duties of the high office.

Mr. BURKE. It depends on what kind of politics it is.

Mr. GUFFEY. He will not leave the bench to make political speeches, although he has been in politics all his life.

Mr. BURKE. But he was not a judge when he was discussing and taking part in politics.

Mr. BARKLEY. He never resigned a judicial position in order to run for political office.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GUFFEY. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Having listened with a great deal of interest to the admirable, from his viewpoint, speech of the Senator from Pennsylvania, I should like to ask him if he is supporting this bill in order to get judges who, as he says, will decide what he knows they are going to decide, rather than because of the age of the Justices?

Mr. GUFFEY. I have answered that question all the way through my remarks.

I want judges whose line of thought we know. I have no objection to any judge having a line of political thought, but I do not want it expressed on the bench.

Mr. CONNALLY. If a judge is a good judge and decides right, the Senator would not take him off the bench because he is old, would he?

Mr. GUFFEY. No; but if he is old enough to fall off, I think we should take him off.

Mr. CONNALLY. If they fall off, they do not have to be pushed off by the Senate or by anybody else. [Laughter.]

Let me ask the Senator another question. I want to get his viewpoint in objecting. Is the objection of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the character of the decisions and not the ages of the judges?

Mr. GUFFEY. Both.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator want to put Mr. Justice Brandeis off the Court? He is the oldest man on the Supreme Bench today.

Mr. GUFFEY. No; but I think when a man reaches 75 years of age, 5 years beyond the allotted score, he should retire.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator does not want to put Mr. Justice Brandeis off the Court, he being the oldest man in years on the Court, then the purpose of the Senator is not to get men off the Court because of age.

Mr. GUFFEY. I see no reason why we should adopt a different policy in reference to the Supreme Court than is adopted by the most successful corporations. The Pennsylvania Railroad, for instance, has adopted a retirement age of 70. Less than one-third of men are able to carry on after reaching that age. The Standard Oil Co. has adopted the retirement age of 65, and if they see any one of their officials slowing up they retire him at the earlier age of 63. Those corporations are in active business, two of the most successful business corporations in the world. If they find it necessary to adopt such a policy with reference to their business, I can see no reason why we should not adopt a similar policy with reference to the Supreme Court. The Steel Corporation, too, has adopted the age of 70 years as the proper retirement age.

Mr. CONNALLY. I can understand the Senator's viewpoint as to those great corporations, but we are talking about the Court.

Mr. GUFFEY. I think such a rule should apply to the Court as well as to business corporations.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator has stated his objections. His reason for supporting the bill is not because of the age of the Justices, but because of the kind of decisions they have rendered.

Mr. GUFFEY. I said both.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator mean to withdraw his statement?

Mr. GUFFEY. No. I said both.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me ask the Senator another question.

Mr. GUFFEY. I yield the floor.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator assured us that when he got through with his speech he would yield for questions. I beg his pardon for asking him to yield if he does not now want to do so.

Mr. GUFFEY. I yield the floor.

During the delivery of Mr. GUFFEY's speech,

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. GUFFEY. I decline to yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I am not asking the Senator to yield. What I am seeking to do is to ask for order in the Chamber so that we may hear what the distinguished Senator is saying. I cannot hear him, either because he is speaking too low or because there is too much noise in the Chamber. I should like to ask the Chair to maintain order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator cannot even make that point of order unless the Senator from Pennsylvania yields for that purpose.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I make the point of order that it is the business of the Chair to preserve order without a point of order being made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair cannot preserve order in the galleries or on the floor apparently. It is very difficult for the Chair to maintain order on the floor if Senators will not obey the rules. Let there be order in the galleries.

After the conclusion of Mr. GUFFEY's speech,

Mr. LOGAN obtained the floor.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me for a moment?

Mr. LOGAN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. HATCH. Yesterday in some brief remarks concerning the pending bill I paid what I thought was a very high compliment to the distinguished junior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]. In referring to a roll call on one of the bills which had come before the House of Representatives I observed the name "Connally" and naturally presumed it was our distinguished colleague from Texas. I thought I paid him a high compliment when I said he voted for the passage of that bill.

However, I am informed this morning by the Senator from Texas that he was not a Member of the House at that time, and that the Connally listed in the roll call was a Mr. Connelly from Kansas. In order to correct the RECORD, I transfer the compliment which I paid the Senator from Texas yesterday to the Representative from Kansas, Mr. Connelly. As the Senator so desires, I apologize for the error.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator from New Mexico for this transfer of the compliment which he intended to pay me. Of course, the purpose of the Senator was not to pay the Senator from Texas a compliment, but the purpose was to undertake to make it appear that the Senator from Texas had voted one way in 1917 and would vote another way on the pending bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Would that be wrong?

Mr. CONNALLY. No; that would not be wrong. If the Senator from Texas does not learn anything in 20 years of service in the Congress, it would indicate that he had been wholly incapable of learning anything in his service among distinguished Representatives in the House and distinguished Senators in this Chamber.

However, that is not the point. The Senator from Texas was not a Member of the House when the vote was had on the bill to which the Senator from New Mexico referred. Therefore he may not claim credit for approving 20 years ago what the Senator from New Mexico approves now in the way of the substitute now pending. I think it is due the Senator from Texas to say that he did not vote for a bill similar to this one. In the committee I voted against the amendment or substitute of the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. I wanted to make it clear that the Senator from Texas did not so vote when he was a Member of the House, and I now say to the Senator from Texas that I would be delighted always to pay him a compliment.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator; but, Mr. President, my purpose in rising is to remind the Senator from New Mexico that the diligence with which he has combed the RECORD to find how the Senator from Texas voted 20 years ago will probably be duplicated by other searchers who 20 years from now will resort to a combing of the RECORD with respect to the Senator from New Mexico. I regret that that searcher will find that the record of the Senator from New Mexico now being made is quite contrary to what the Senator from Texas conceives to be a record of sound statesmanship and wisdom.

Mr. HATCH. May I say to the Senator from Texas that the Senator from New Mexico is willing to stand on the record he makes here in this body, today, tomorrow, or 20 years from now.

Mr. CONNALLY. I hope the Senator will be able to stand, but I fear he will fall on such a record. [Laughter.]

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me before he proceeds?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I listened with great interest to the speech of the able Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] concerning politics on the Supreme Court. Believing that a leopard never changes his spots, and that there have been some lightning changes by the Court recently, we might interpret the present conduct of the Court by remembering the past conduct of the Supreme Court.

One of the most interesting political incidents in the history of the Supreme Court was touched upon briefly by the Senator from Pennsylvania in his speech. That grew out of the legal-tender decision. At the time the Legal Tender cases came before the Supreme Court there were eight judges on the bench, one a very aged and infirm judge. It was understood that the act was upheld and held to be constitutional by a vote of 4 to 4, which would affirm the decision of the lower court; but when the Court passed on to another case which involved consideration of the legal-tender question, by pressure brought to bear upon this aged and infirm judge, it was discovered that he was brought over to join the four and make the decision 5 to 3 against the act.

This led to a most terrific political fight on the Court. So bitter did it become that the Justices, for the sake of history, sought to put in the archives of the Court a report of what happened. Chief Justice Chase wrote his report, and Justice Miller wrote one, and they were put in the archives. They were both later withdrawn, but the Miller report is still in existence, and I wish to call attention to it at this time. From the Miller report I read as follows:

> An attempt was then made to convince an aged and infirm member of the Court (Justice Grier) that he had not understood the question on which he voted. He said that he understood the Court of Appeals of Kentucky had declared the legal-tender law unconstitutional, and he voted to reverse that judgment. As this was true, the case of Hepburn against Griswold was declared to be affirmed by a Court equally divided, and we passed to the next case.
>
> This was the case of McGlynn, Executor, against Magraw, and involves another aspect of the legal-tender question. In this case the venerable judge referred to, for whose public services and character we entertain the highest respect, made some remarks. He was reminded that he had agreed with a certain member of the Court in conversation on propositions differing from all the other judges, and finally his vote was obtained for affirming Hepburn against Griswold, and so the majority, whose judgment it is now said to be so sacred, was obtained.
>
> To all this we submitted. We could do nothing else. In a week from that day every judge on the bench authorized a committee of their number to say to the judge who had reconsidered his vote that it was their unanimous opinion that he ought to resign.
>
> These are the facts. We make no comment. We do not say that he (Justice Grier) did not agree to the opinion. We only ask, of what value was his concurrence and of what value is the judgment under such circumstances.

As further evidence of this terrific political fight, I quote from a letter written by Mr. Justice Miller concerning the fight, dated April 21, 1870, recently referred to by Professor Fairman, of Williams College. Justice Miller wrote:

> We have had a desperate struggle in the secret conference of the Court for 3 weeks over two cases involving the legal-tender question. The Chief Justice has resorted to all the stratagems of the lowest political trickery to prevent their being heard, and the fight has been bitter in the conference room * * * The excitement has nearly used me up. It has been fearful; and my own position as leader in marshaling my forces and keeping up their courage against the domineering chief, and a party in Court who have been accustomed to carry everything their own way, has been such a strain on my brain and nervous system as I never wish to encounter again.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, let me say at the outset that I have no objection to interruptions by Senators. I ask only that they be orderly about the matter, and give me a chance to answer any question they may ask or any surmise they may make.

At the present time I desire to discuss rather briefly some of the reasons which impel me to support the pending legislation.

I desire to state that at no time shall I intentionally say anything to offend any Senator. I do not expect to lose my temper during this debate. I believe that the question is one which would be discussed calmly and intelligently. I also wish to say that, in my humble judgment, I was as free from outside influences when I came to the Senate this time as any Member of the Senate; and because I was under no obligation to any administration anywhere, or to any group of persons, I have been in position to give careful, earnest, and honest consideration to this proposed legislation.

I was a candidate for renomination last August. In that race there ran against me a man perhaps better qualified than myself, a most outstanding gentleman, and one of the best-loved Democrats in Kentucky. He was supported by the brilliant young Governor, with all the power and force of the State administration, as well as by the great political organization in the city of Louisville, and the metropolitan newspapers. Although I have been running for office for many years, I have never had a political organization and I never had any money; so the only thing I could say in that campaign was that I had been a supporter of the policies of President Roosevelt since I had been in the Senate. My opponent and those who supported him claimed not only that he had the support of the State administration but that the national administration looked with favor upon him.

Not only were all those things against me but the American Federation of Labor and the United Mine Workers of America endorsed resolutions against me; I do not know why, because I do not know much about politics, but I insisted on one point alone in that race and that was that we were in a great economic war, that great questions confronted the country, that we had made progress, and that I ought to be renominated and reelected so that I might aid the President in carrying out the program which he had placed before the country.

Of course, my opponent took the same position, but I received the nomination. I came here, then, with the definite idea that I was to help carry out the program.

I have always had great respect and great admiration for the courts. I still have; but I realize that judges are only human, that they are subject to the same outside influences as are Members of the Senate, and that their own thoughts about economic questions and political questions are not forgotten when they become members of a court. So when it was suggested in the message of the President that something should be done about the Supreme Court I hesitated about it somewhat, but I began to look into matters. I knew what some of our distinguished Senators had said about the Supreme Court in the past. I familiarized myself with the position of the great Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], whom I have always admired, and the great Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE]; and I found even then that everyone who had ever given any thought to the question said there was something wrong with the Supreme Court of the United States. Then later, when we heard the many, many witnesses of outstanding ability testify before the Judiciary Committee, I found that every one of them almost without exception said, "the Supreme Court is wrong; there is something the matter with the Supreme Court." Then, if there was something wrong with the Supreme Court, at least, I reasoned that something should be done to correct whatever was wrong.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LOGAN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. BURKE. Is it a fact that the distinguished witnesses who appeared before the Judiciary Committee in opposition to this plan said, as I understood the Senator to say, that there was something wrong with the Supreme Court; or did they say, on the contrary, that they individually disagreed with some decisions of the Supreme Court? I call the Senator's attention particularly to the testimony of Mr. Raymond Moley and other liberals who appeared before the committee. Is not that a correct statement of their position?

Mr. LOGAN. I may say to the Senator that I think his statement is correct, and that is what I mean. I may use some figure of rhetoric and refer to the Supreme Court when in fact I am referring to the decisions of the Supreme Court. That is what I mean, of course. I do not mean now, and I never have thought, that there was anything wrong with the individual members, except that they were a little lacking in knowledge of the proper interpretation of the Constitution.

As I say, I believed then, and I submit this statement to the Members of the Senate, that if something should be done about the Supreme Court, this is the people's Government. Whose plan would the people prefer to follow—the recommendation of the President of the United States, who brought back to life the Democratic Party, who has rendered to the Nation the greatest service that any man, perhaps, has rendered in the last 100 years; or would they prefer to follow the plans of those who in the newspapers even today are suggesting making up a $10,000,000 campaign fund so that they may organize a new party which will cooperate and amalgamate with the Republican Party? I say, would the people prefer to follow the suggestions of those who think the Democratic Party ought to be divided or destroyed, or would they prefer to follow the suggestions of the President of the United States?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

Mr. LOGAN. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator referred to me, and stated that I had said there was something wrong with the Supreme Court.

It is true that on many occasions I have criticized some of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. I have, as every lawyer has, criticized some of the decisions of the supreme court of my State. Then I have, as every lawyer has who has tried any cases, criticized some of the decisions of the lower courts when they have decided cases in a way that I thought was contrary to the law. But never in my life had it occurred to me that because some judge decided contrary to what I as an individual believed to be the law, the judge should be removed, and somebody should be placed upon the court who would at all times decide as I wanted him to decide.

I say to the Senator from Kentucky that I am in a little different position than he was, since apparently he was elected solely because of the fact that he promised to go along 100 percent with the President. I am in a little different position from that, because I said to the people of my State from every platform where I spoke that I had not always agreed with the President of the United States, and that I did not expect always to agree with him in the future. So I am not in the same position as men who said, "I am 100 percent for the policies of the present administration", and were elected upon the coattails of the present President of the United States.

I cannot conceive of a man who has practiced law in the United States and who has had the experience the Senator from Kentucky has had who would say, because he does not like some of the decisions of the Court and because he does not like some of the Justices on the Court, that he wishes to have other men appointed on the Court and to humiliate before the American public and drive from the Court the men whose decisions or personalities he does not like.

Mr. LOGAN. It is the imagination of the Senator from Montana which leads him to suppose that anybody has any such view. The Senator from Montana is seeing spooks. I read some time ago a little verse written by someone—I have forgotten whom—which very well describes the condition and the position and the attitude of the Senator from Montana. It went something like this:

> Yesterday upon the stair
> I saw a man who wasn't there.
> He wasn't there again today;
> I hope to God he'll go away.

[Laughter.]

The Senator is seeing spooks. Nobody has ever taken the position that anyone should be removed from the Court because through an error of judgment or a misinterpretation of the law he had decided against one. I have never taken the position that anyone should be removed from the Court, and, so far as I know, that is a manufactured issue. The bill we have before us is for the express purpose of allowing those who may be aged, and perhaps infirm, to remain on the Court. The idea of humiliating a man because someone else is appointed or elected to serve with him! The Senator from Montana has a word he uses quite frequently, a word I never use, since I do not like it, but he sometimes refers to a man who does not agree with him as "asinine." If the word describes anything thoroughly it is the position of the man who says that anyone in the Senate is advocating the removal of any Justice from the Supreme Court.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that I am not seeing things, and it is not a matter of spooks with me. I am saying to the Senator now that those connected with the administration have said that they wanted six men upon the Supreme Court whom they could trust, that they wanted men on the Court who would decide cases as they wanted them to be decided. That is the issue. It can be camouflaged as much as one wants to attempt to camouflage it, but the truth is that it is impossible to get away from the fact that this is a proposal to make the Supreme Court of the United States subservient to the executive branch of the Government.

The Senator need not take simply my word; he has the word of the Attorney General of the United States, when he said that if the present Justices do not like this proposed law they can resign. He has the word of the Assistant Attorney General, who said, "We want six men we can trust."

He has the word of those of the administration, who said, "We want a Court which will meet the needs of the time."

What are the needs of the time?

Mr. LOGAN. Of course, I insist that until the Senator can give more definite information than that, he is still seeing spooks.

Mr. WHEELER. Before the debate is concluded I will give the Senator more definite information than that.

Mr. LOGAN. Very good. I noticed the other day an interview given out by the Senator in which he made a statement like that. The intimation was that he was going to throw some dead cats. I have never thrown a dead cat yet; therefore, I have been saving them up for a lifetime, and I have a house full of them, and while I dislike to go into matters of that kind, if anyone wants to throw dead cats, I can throw a few. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. If the doctrine expounded so ably by the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] this morning—that it is fitting and proper to coerce, intimidate, and influence the Court so that it will change its opinion—is accepted, is there after all very much difference between that and forcing a man physically off the Court?

Mr. LOGAN. I did not understand that to be the attitude of the Senator from Pennsylvania. As I stated awhile ago, if the splendid Senators whom I admire so much would just quit for a few minutes seeing ghosts and get down to the plain facts they would not make statements reflecting on a brother Senator, such as an intimation that he said that someone should coerce the Court to make the Court do so-and-so.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. The question is whether or not the Senator said it. Did the Senator from Pennsylvania make that statement? I was not in the Chamber.

Mr. GUFFEY. If the Senator will yield, I made no such statement, and I will ask that Senators refer to the RECORD.

Mr. BURKE. Did not the Senator from Pennsylvania say that there was a period of 50 years after the impeachment of one judge before the Supreme Court ever dared again to override an act of Congress; that they had learned their lesson? And did he not come down to more recent times and place the credit in certain hands for having forced the Supreme Court to change its opinion in the Minimum Wage case, and to change its opinion and uphold the Social Security Act, and, I believe, the Wagner Labor Relations Act?

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I was merely stating historical facts.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I wish to proceed further now, if I may, with my remarks.

When the original bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary that committee undertook its work very seriously, and I can say that I have never seen any body of men who were more inclined to be fair and courteous to one another than were they. We did not have any disagreements; there was no loud talk, no violent argument, no virulent or heated controversy. We considered the matter as men should. Therefore, I was all the more surprised when I read the report of the committee. There was not anything in the conduct of the proceedings before the Committee on the Judiciary which would lead me to believe that we were going to have come forth from it a virulent and violent report, not only attacking the President of the United States but, if the statements in the majority report are true, if those making it can establish the truth of the statements which they have made, the President of the United States ought to be impeached and removed from office. Yet I am told quietly and gently that there is no charge against the President of the United States. I expect sometime—I will not have time today—to show the Senate of the United States what the charges are, and I may state the way I feel about them.

I am of the opinion that those who made the report were not familiar with everything back of it. There is a movement on foot to bring out into the field an opposition party. They are looking around for a candidate now. Of course the worshipers of the golden calf are really behind it all. They do not like Mr. Roosevelt; they have never liked him. They are starting out now to destroy him. I would not say, in the face of what the members of the committee who wrote this report have said to me, that they intended in the beginning to destroy the President of the United States, but there is not one of them with reasonable intelligence—and they all have intelligence—who can say that it has not been seized upon by the enemies of the President, by the enemies of the policies of the President and the present administration, and that it is not now being used as a campaign document, as the basis for the organization of a new party which is to take over the Republican Party. They need a candidate for President.

Oh, there are able men in the Senate, some of them very liberal, and because they are candidates they must not be thought to come from Wall Street; the fact must be concealed. But the forces referred to must have a liberal and able man, one who does not hesitate, when occasion arises, to leave his party. If they put him up, they may not love him; but they love Roosevelt even less. They would rather have a radical, a liberal of the extreme type, if he would take the Republican Party in with him, than to have someone favorable to the policies of the President of the United States. So we have been noticing in the newspapers for some time articles from the pens of the writers for Hoover and special correspondents stating that in certain States where elections are coming up this year the Republican Party is going to abandon any effort to nominate a candidate and go into the party primaries and vote for a Democrat if the Democrat will vote against the President's Court plan.

Not only have we seen that in many of the newspaper columns, but we read in newspaper items from day to day suggestions that the Republican Party ought to disband, and ought to take over this party which is going to save the Constitution, as the Liberty League saved the Constitution.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator thinks the Republican Party ought to have disbanded a long time ago, does he not?

Mr. LOGAN. I think so. I think it ought never to have lived.

Mr. WHEELER. I have thought it ought to have disbanded a long time ago, and that the present talk about doing so comes rather late. But I wish to say that I think the Senator is seeing bogey men now; he is the man who is seeing spooks; he is the one who is seeing the man on the stair when there is no man there; and a lot of other people are seeing the same spooks.

Let me call attention to the fact that when the utilities fight was on in the Senate the enemies of the President grabbed at it, writing to certain Democratic Senators who were fighting the bill then before us and saying what great men they were. Many Democratic Members of the Senate who are now fighting with the President on the Court plan were then fighting, either under cover or aboveboard, against the utilities bill. I did not accuse those men of trying to wreck the Democratic Party because they disagreed with me. I gave them credit for having honest convictions. I did not take the position that they wanted to destroy the President of the United States. Has it come to pass at this time that when a man disagrees with the President of the United States upon a fundamental issue he is to be accused of trying to destroy the President of the United States, and are his motives to be questioned because he disagrees with the President and because he writes a report?

I did not sign the report of the Judiciary Committee. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] signed the report. The President of the United States has no better friend than the Senator from New Mexico. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] signed the report. He was a friend of the President of the United States before the Senator from Kentucky ever knew the President. The Senator from Wyoming is and has been a close personal friend of the President, and a man upon whom the President of the United States at times has depended for advice and counsel. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] signed the report. Other Senators who have been close personal friends of the President, and close personal advisers of the President, signed the report. Now, however, because they will not follow him in something which they believe to be fundamentally wrong as well as morally wrong, they are being accused of trying to destroy the President.

I say that such a statement simply seeks to draw a red herring across the trail; and, in my judgment, it is beneath the dignity of the Senator from Kentucky to charge that these men—these Democrats, liberals, progressives, and conservatives—who disagree with the President upon one issue are seeking to destroy the man who has been their friend for years.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I charge nothing. I hold in my hand the majority report, and I thought members of the Committee on the Judiciary made the report. I did not know the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] took charge of the matter while members of the committee were considering writing the report to be made to the Senate. But yesterday, as I understood, the Senator from Montana very frankly avowed that he was present at every conference——

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, no!

Mr. LOGAN. And that he knew there was no intention to slight the President.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator again is seeing the man on the stair who was not there. Again he has made a statement simply because he misunderstood me. I never was present at any conference of the committee members and never saw the report until it was written. During the time it was being prepared I was out of Washington, and I never saw it and never read it until a few days ago.

Mr. HATCH and Mr. O'MAHONEY rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am going to make the same statement which the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] will also make. I am sure the Senator from Kentucky is confused in the statement he has just made. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] remarked while I was speaking yesterday that I was present at each meeting, and at that time we both disclaimed any desire to destroy the President.

Mr. LOGAN. Of that I am quite sure. At the same time I think the RECORD will show that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] said he knew that there never had been any suggestion of antagonism to the President in any of the conferences which had been held.

Mr. WHEELER. I said in a conference; not with reference to writing the report, however, because I was not privileged to be present at any of the conferences held with reference to the report.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. In order that the statement may appear in the RECORD at this point, I wish to assert again that the report was written by the members of the Committee on the Judiciary whose names are signed to it; that every conference which was held with respect to the report was a conference of the members of the majority of the Committee on the Judiciary; that no Senator outside of the committee, and no other person in or out of the Senate or in or out of the Congress, took part in any of those conferences.

I am sure the Senator from New Mexico will assent to that statement.

Mr. LOGAN. That makes the matter a little worse than I thought it was.

Mr. WHEELER. It makes it worse?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. Does the Senator mean it makes it worse with reference to me?

Mr. LOGAN. No; not with reference to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator that not only did I not attend any of the conferences, but I never even made a suggestion with reference to the report. I repeat that I never suggested a line or a sentence of the report. I have not read the report as carefully as I should like to read it, but I should not hesitate to sign it; and if I signed it, I should not feel that in doing so I was reflecting upon the President of the United States.

Mr. LOGAN. We have different views. I accept the statement of the Senator from Montana.

However, let us see what the matter does look like to one who has given it serious consideration. Here we have a number of very important Senators. Few of them, perhaps, would be here today at all but for the friendship of the President of the United States. But for his magnificent leadership, but for his efforts in behalf of the American people to see that justice was done to them, they would not be here. I have no intention to say that a man does not have a right to be of any opinion he pleases, but I do say that when my friend goes out of the way to make a vicious attack upon the man who is responsible for my position in public life, his action is indefensible. For that reason I regret it all the more.

May I call attention to something else? The Senator says the report of the majority is not an attack upon the President of the United States. I said awhile ago, and I say again, that if the statements in the report are true and the inferences therein drawn are true, the President of the United States ought to be impeached.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, did I correctly understand the Senator from Kentucky to say that all of the Senators would not have been here except for the President of the United States?

Mr. LOGAN. I said many of them.

Mr. WHEELER. Many of them?

Mr. LOGAN. If I said all, I made a mistake. I meant many of them.

Mr. WHEELER. I wish to say that a great many of the Senators now in the Senate were in the Senate a long time before the present administration came in; and many of us were fighting for the liberal cause before ever the present Postmaster General was known as a great liberal, before the present Attorney General and many other persons were known as great liberals. Many of us, instead of coming in on the coattails of the President, helped to nominate Mr. Roosevelt in the convention of 1932. Many of us went out and campaigned for him in the pre-primary campaign, when some who are now hanging to his coattails were out opposing him for the nomination.

Mr. LOGAN. I never have had occasion to hang to anyone's coattails. I have managed to hoe my own row fairly well. I will say to the Senator that two of the seven Democrats who signed the report were in the Senate prior to the beginning of the Roosevelt administration, but only two. Of the other five, most of them, I see, come from what are ordinarily Republican States; so it seems to me that when Democratic Senators were elected from those States they were elected because of the policies espoused by the President of the United States. They had a right to disagree with him; I grant that; and if they did disagree with him no one can complain. But when Caesar discovered that Brutus, his own friend, had turned against him his great heart broke. He fell bleeding at the foot of the statue of Pompey.

Here is the President of the United States. Put yourself in his place. Here are his friends, from whom he has a right to expect at least courteous treatment, those who should at least say with dignity, "We disagree with you; we cannot go along with you." But they did not do that. Senators may look in vain in this report for a single word of explanation indicating the belief of its writers that the President of the United States is sincere.

Mr. President, this was legislation proposed by the President of the United States himself, and he sent a message accompanying it. When the bill is discussed without any excuse being offered for the statements made in the report, Senators can reach but one conclusion. Not only did those who wrote the report say, "We disagree with the President because we think he is not right", but they indicate later that he apparently wishes to be a dictator, that he is trying to control the Court, that his acts are immoral, that his acts are illegal, that his acts are unconstitutional; and they charge those things against the President of the United States because the suggestion for Court reorganization was his suggestion, not my suggestion or the suggestion of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST]. So every charge in the report of the committee is a charge against the President. No one can deny that statement.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. In the first place, let me say to the Senator that I appreciate the fact that he is not very familiar with the political situation existing in many of the Northern and particularly the Northwestern States. It has been whispered around that one of the Senators from that section who signed the report would not have been here if it were not for the fact that he, among others, was picked by those now in power to run for the Senate. I happen to know something of that man's State and I happen to know something of his standing in that State. Instead of the administration being responsible for his election, he was responsible for the administration carrying his State in the 1932 election. Not only that, but he was responsible for the delegation to the Chicago convention being instructed for the President of the United States. He was responsible not only for his State going for the President but for some of the other States in the Northwest going for the President of the United States.

Mr. President, let us be fair. We are talking about ingratitude. I know men who left their party in order to support the present President of the United States. Then I saw the present administration send speakers to New Mexico to fight the late Senator Cutting, notwithstanding the fact that he had left his party to campaign for Mr. Roosevelt. Why did they do it? Because Senator Cutting disagreed with the administration on one issue, and that was in the matter of overriding the veto of the President on the soldiers' bonus bill.

When we talk about ingratitude, when we talk about breaking hearts, I know another man who was largely responsible for the nomination of the President, and but for whose support the President could not have been nominated at the Chicago convention; yet I saw this administration go into his State and carry on a persecution against that man never equaled except in the days of Daugherty, and Gaston Means, and President Harding.

Mr. President, let us not talk about ingratitude in the political field. I expect no gratitude in politics, for there is none. The only thing one gets in politics is the comfort derived from the knowledge that he is doing what his conscience tells him to do. The idea of gratitude from men one helps to elect to public office should never be entertained, and is not entertained by those who have had any experience in the political game.

But I know the Northwest; I know that most of the men in that section who were elected to office and also most of those in the Northern States did not ride in, although some of them did, I will admit. Most of them were men of standing in their communities, men who had been fighting the political issues in their States for years before the present administration had ever been heard of; and they had been fighting the liberal cause, while some others were lined up with the economic royalists here in the East.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The Senator from Montana may know the politics of the Northwest, but he knows very little about the politics of New Mexico and the Southwest. I happened, at the Chicago convention, and even before that time, to have been fighting for the nomination of President Roosevelt. I helped to nominate him. I was a delegate to that convention and was partly instrumental in getting the delegation from the State of New Mexico instructed for President Roosevelt in 1932. Without minimizing in the least the virtues of my predecessor, he did not help to nominate President Roosevelt. As a matter of fact, his representatives were at the other convention helping to nominate Mr. Hoover. So I know that the President of the United States should not be accused of ingratitude because he dares, in his own way, to try to help those who helped nominate him at the Chicago convention.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I want to make myself clear, if I can, particularly to the Senator from Montana. I do not mean to intimate that a man who was elected by reason of the popularity of the President owes anything to him in a personal way; I do not mean to say that. I do not think that men count anything in life; it is the things that they stand for that count. But, after many long years fighting the battles of Democracy, as the Senator from Montana has been doing, we come to a time when Democracy prevails throughout the Nation more abundantly than it has ever prevailed even in the days of Jefferson and Jackson; and now members of that party, without any excuse or justification, are making an attack so vicious upon the President of the United States that it can be construed only as an effort to destroy him. Enemies of the President and—while I do not like the expression—"economic royalists" refer to it and seize upon it, and letters and telegrams come in filled with the vilest charges against the President, and they all come because of the report that our friends submitted in an effort which they say was not to destroy the Democratic Party or the President. Then, what was it for? If the Senator from Montana had been ready to support him, perhaps he would in dignified language have expressed his views, but he would not have charged the President of the United States with schemes, with devious ways, with vicious practices. It was absolutely unnecessary to do that, and for it there was no ground in the world.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BURKE. The report from which the Senator is about to read is a report recommending that the original bill introduced, as the Senator stated a few moments ago, at the suggestion of the President, should not pass. I now ask the Senator two questions: In the first place, if the statements made in the report to which he is objecting are not correct, why did not the minority of the committee express their views and show the fallacy of the statements made? The second question is, If the bill, as originally introduced, was so good, and if the statements made in the report are so filled with error, why has the Senator sponsored chiefly a very different measure, offered it as a substitute, and participated in the arrangement under which it is not possible to have a vote on the very bill criticized by the report?

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I never knew that there was any necessity for filing a dissenting or minority opinion or report in cases of this kind. I never believed much in writing dissenting opinions. I do not believe I ever wrote a half dozen of them in my life. I did express my opinion to a very good friend in Kentucky about this matter, and, briefly, I am going to read the letter I wrote him, although portions of it are pretty "hot." The letter is addressed to a lawyer friend of mine, C. W. Milner, at Louisville, Ky. He wrote me a letter of this tenor, "The report of the Judiciary Committee was a great state document, one of the great American state papers", and he expressed his very great chagrin and regret that my name was not on it. I wish to say now that I have much to thank God for, and one thing I have to be grateful for is that my children and my posterity will never be able to point to that report and say my name was on it. Here is what I said in my reply to Mr. Milner:

JUNE 25, 1937.

Mr. C. W. MILNER,
Kentucky Home Life Building, Louisville, Ky.

DEAR MR. MILNER: I really appreciate your letter of the 22d, and you make your position very clear. I do not fall out with my friends because they are wrong. I am often wrong myself, but this is one time when I am right and you are wrong. You have been a busy lawyer and I doubt whether you have ever gone into the question of reforming the judiciary in a connected, diligent, painstaking way.

You refer to the report of the majority of the Committee on the Judiciary as a paper that will go down in history as a great state paper. After this great encomium from you, for whose legal ability I have such a high regard, last night I took time to wade through that dull, uninteresting report and, to show how friends may differ, I reached the conclusion that it is a strange document. The committee, in the consideration of the bill, had proposals to amend it so as to remove every objection pointed out in the report of the majority, but the members making the report voted against every such proposal.

The report is made up of paragraphs of pointless piffle. The nine Olympians, the nine great intellects, the nine mountain-peak statesmen—I say nine because one, like the lame boy of Hamelin-Town, could not keep up with the others—labored for days and nights, weeks and weeks, and brought forth what? "A wee cowering beastie"—a pale, wobbly, anaemic mouse.

Their premise is unsound, their reasoning fallacious, and their conclusions false.

What then does it mean? The report bears no relation to the Court issue. It is an attack on the national administration as a whole. It is the beginning of the fight to return to the days of Hoover and hard times and the reign of the unmerciful. It is the first shot in the battle by those who worship the golden calf to discredit the President and make the Democratic Party the party of reaction. Those who in principle favor the President's proposal to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government did not bring politics into it. Those who wrote the report made the issue political. If the matter is to be a political issue, it is well that the fight should begin now. We should find out now whether a liberal democracy, led by President Roosevelt, must be converted into a reactionary party, led by those who grew fat in the days of Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover. I believe that the friends of good government should accept the challenge and carry on the fight until democracy is triumphant and would-be dictators are made afraid.

You will thus see that we disagree and are still friends. That is as it should be. I expect to have something to say about the report of the majority from time to time.

With very sincere regards, I remain,

Your friend,

M. M. LOGAN.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator now read to us the answer he must have received from his constituent to that letter?

Mr. LOGAN. I may say to the Senator from Nebraska that my friend in Louisville has remained very quiet; he has never written me even to acknowledge the receipt of the letter. I have called attention to it because that was the view I placed on the report at the time. Since then, from one end of the Nation to the other, enemies of the President and our Liberty League friends have seized upon the document and are sending it out over the country as an attack upon the administration. If a man is shot accidentally it hurts just as badly as if he were shot of a purpose.

So, whatever the object of the committee may have been—and I am willing to accept their word, because they are gentlemen whose words should be accepted if they say they did not so intend it—the effect of what they have done is to raise an issue to be used by the enemies of the present administration which will lead eventually, perhaps, to a destruction of this great party of ours, which will lead, perhaps, to the destruction of the Nation itself, for the Nation is not so safe as it might be. We hang on to things until it is too late. All the nations of the earth that have been destroyed have met that fate because they could not make readjustments. Here we are harking back to what are called the days of the Constitution, insisting that we should return to the Constitution. Is there anyone who does not know where that cry came from? That was the slogan of the Liberty Leaguers; that was the slogan of the men who undertook to defeat the President of the United States and the Democratic Party. Return to the Constitution! What has this issue got to do with the Constitution? There is no constitutional question involved, and when anyone undertakes to say that any constitutional question is involved in this proposed legislation he makes himself what the Senator from Montana would call him if he were expressing views contrary to his opinion.

When the Constitution was made back yonder in 1787, when the three departments of government were established, what did the framers of the Constitution do? They established an executive branch of the Government and, after long consideration, decided that the head of it should be one man, and he should be the President of the United States. They said that he should be a native-born citizen of the United States, that he should have attained a certain age, and, moreover, that he should have a fixed term of office. There was a check placed upon him. He had to go back to the people every 4 years. So, with great detail, his duties were prescribed. He was hedged about by those who made the Constitution in the interest of the protection of the liberty and the freedom of the people of the Nation.

Then when they came to the legislative branch of the Government we find again that Members of the Congress are circumscribed as to residence, age, and, as to Members of the House, their number is fixed by determining the population of the respective States. Then it was provided that Members of the Senate must go back to the people every 6 years and that Members of the House must go back to the people every 2 years. It was said, in effect, "That is the check we place upon you."

Now we come to the Supreme Court.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not want to interrupt the great argument the Senator is making with reference to the three independent branches of the Government, but I should like to go back for a moment to a statement he made at the outset wherein he appealed to the members of the party to stand behind the President. I may have misunderstood him, but I understood him to say that the heart of the President had been broken because of the fact that his friends did not go along with him on this great issue.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator may reason that out by process of analogy. I said that when Caesar saw Brutus was among the conspirators it broke Caesar's heart; and reasoning by process of analogy I might say I expect the President has been very deeply grieved to know that those upon whom he depended and those upon whom he now depends in the Senate are attempting to destroy that which he considers necessary in order to save the Nation from destruction.

Mr. WHEELER. That is what I wanted to get from the Senator. One of the very prominent issues in the campaign of 1932 was the proposed repeal of the prohibition amendment. That was the one issue which did as much to help elect Mr. Roosevelt as any other issue in the campaign. It was talked of from one end of the country to the other. Mr. Roosevelt submitted the proposal to repeal the prohibition amendment and to adopt another amendment in its place. If I am not mistaken, the distinguished Senator from Kentucky must have broken the President's heart when he voted his own conscience and voted against that proposal. [Laughter.]

Mr. LOGAN. Yes; I voted against it, and always shall vote against it. Perhaps I was wrong. However, I have not supported all the things the President has asked, and do not expect to do so. But where there is no issue, or where the sole issue is a manufactured issue, a bogey man erected to scare the people, coming from sources in opposition to the President, let me say that to see a man of the importance and intelligence and liberality of the Senator from Montana line up against those things which are so necessary to the President's program, I imagine does grieve the President of the United States very greatly, as it grieves me.

Mr. WHEELER. I can say to the Senator from Kentucky that while I may have grieved the President of the United States by taking a position against him, some of the things that have gone on in this administration have grieved me and have grieved many other liberals and progressives throughout the Nation. However, let us leave those matters aside for the moment.

The Senator said that "of course there is no issue", but he must know that many intelligent people throughout the country have a very deep and profound conviction with reference to the issue that does exist. They believe, and, in my judgment, they have reason to believe that this is an attempt to control the Supreme Court. I want to say, as to the President of the United States, that I cannot conceive that he ever gave this matter very careful consideration.

I say to the Senator now what I said once before on the floor of the Senate. A year ago last January a bill was brought to me by two men close to the President of the United States proposing to increase the membership of the Supreme Court by six. At that time I said to those men, "You are wrong. It is the wrong way to go about this thing." They came back to me about May and again I said to them, "You are wrong. I agree that the Supreme Court or a majority of the Supreme Court in some of their decisions, in my judgment—not in the judgment of a great many people, but in my judgment—have been wrong, but because they have been wrong in some of their decisions is no reason why it is right to attempt to increase the membership of the Supreme Court with the idea of putting six new men on that bench."

Their idea was to put six men on the Supreme Bench to make that Court subservient so they could get decisions which the administration wanted. I said to them then that they were wrong and I say now that they are wrong, and if they reported what I said then to the President and if they reported what I said to them in May, there could not be any question about the President being broken-hearted when I disagreed with him at the time he sent this bill to the Senate of the United States.

In addition to that, again those two men came to me and asked me to support the pending bill, and again I said I could not do it because, in my judgment, it is wrong. There cannot be any question as to what my position was, and if they reported correctly to their superior what I said to them, there could not be any question in his mind as to where he would find me and some of the other liberals in the Senate of the United States.

Not only that, but I advised, "Do not take this issue into the campaign, because if you do, in my judgment, it will wreck the President of the United States, and I do not want to see that done." I do not want to see that done now, either. I said, "It will wreck him if you take it into the campaign," and it was not taken into the campaign.

The Democratic Party did not dare to submit this issue to the people of the United States in the campaign. As a matter of fact, whenever the question was raised it was denied. A Representative who spoke on the same platform with me in the city of Billings, Mont., said that immediately after the election four new judges would be added to the Supreme Court. The Associated Press carried the statement that I had said four new Justices would be added. The Republicans immediately took up that statement and, because I had just left the President's train, tried to give it prominence, intimating that I had been associated with him and had just left his train and was expressing the President's views. Immediately I denied that Associated Press dispatch and said it was not true; that, as a matter of fact, I had never made the statement, and no intimation was ever made to that effect. Every Democratic speaker from one end of the country to the other, when such a statement was made, denied that it was the intention of the President. The platform said and the chairman of the National Committee said and the leader of the majority in the Senate said that we ought to have a constitutional amendment. Everybody else agreed to that proposal.

Now, for the Senator or for anyone else to come here and say that those of us who have taken this position repeatedly for years are breaking the President's heart is hardly fair.

Mr. LOGAN. I cannot understand what the statement of the Senator has to do with whether this is right or wrong.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. Very well.

Mr. HUGHES. I ran for the office of Senator in my State. I met frequently, through the newspapers and on the platform, the accusation made by Republicans that the purpose of the President was to reorganize the courts and put a number of new Justices on the Supreme Bench. It was said so often that eventually I did say—and I said several times during the campaign—that I did not know what purpose was in the mind of anyone else, but as for me, I did not like the decisions of the Supreme Court, that I was perfectly willing to see the Supreme Court reorganized, and if it was necessary to put new judges on the bench to accomplish that purpose, I was in favor of it. So when the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] said such a statement was not made anywhere in the country he was mistaken, because it was said in our State and discussed openly in our State. I subscribed to the doctrine that if it was necessary to reorganize the Supreme Court, not by amendment but by putting additional judges on the bench, I was in favor of it, and I was elected on that issue as much as any other issue involved in the campaign.

Mr. LOGAN. And the Senator was the first Democratic Senator elected from Delaware in how many years?

Mr. HUGHES. In 36 years.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In the absence of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], who has been quoted by the Senator from Montana as favoring an amendment to the Constitution, I think it ought to be said that the amendment to the Constitution suggested by the Senator from Arkansas had nothing whatever to do with the Supreme Court, its reorganization or its change, or any other act that might be passed with reference to the judiciary. The Senator from Arkansas did suggest, early in the session, that it might ultimately be desirable to amend the Constitution with respect to the power of Congress over interstate commerce, or to clarify the interpretation of the commerce clause with respect to interstate commerce, the general welfare, and other things about which the members of the Supreme Court had from time to time disagreed, and about which they had from time to time reversed themselves; but at no time did the Senator from Arkansas intimate that he thought it was necessary to amend the Constitution in order to reorganize the courts of the country.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course, the Senator from Arkansas did not say that, but he did say we should have clarifying amendments to the Constitution. I do not know that he used that exact language; but what was the purpose of such amendments? If we are to judge from the Victory dinner speech of the President of the United States, what the Senator from Arkansas wanted to accomplish by clarifying amendments to the Constitution it is now sought to accomplish by putting more Justices upon the Supreme Court.

The Senator from Kentucky and I may differ. Perhaps he is one of those who think we ought now to discard the Constitution. Perhaps he thinks we ought to put six more men on the Supreme Court, or three men, or four men, to interpret the Constitution "to meet the needs of the time", as has been expressly said. I cannot subscribe to that doctrine, however, notwithstanding the fact that the Supreme Court has interpreted the Constitution in certain ways.

I heard my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] refer to John Marshall this morning. What the President of the United States and the administration are now seeking to do is to get the Supreme Court to adopt the views of John Marshall with reference to the Constitution, and to abandon the views held by Thomas Jefferson. I agree with the President of the United States that he is right in wanting to see a broader base; but I say that the way to bring that about is the way prescribed by the forefathers who drafted the Constitution, and not by packing the Court, or having it done by interpretation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. BARKLEY. The view of John Marshall about the Constitution was a view that he enforced and emphasized by his interpretation of the Constitution.

Mr. LOGAN. That is very true.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Kentucky will let me answer that statement——

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course John Marshall did; and of course his view was what Thomas Jefferson and Andrew Jackson and all the Democratic Presidents down to this time have rejected as being the Republican doctrine, the Hamiltonian doctrine, and not the Democratic doctrine.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not know whether or not the Senator recalls it; but sometime ago, in making a speech, I pointed out the very remarkable situation that we have in this country today. On the one hand we have a Democratic administration fighting for the constitutional interpretation advocated and sustained by Marshall and Hamilton, and on the other hand we have a Republican Party which has gone right over to the Jeffersonian side of the question, and is standing up and fighting for the views of Thomas Jefferson.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course, the Republicans at the present time have taken the position of Thomas Jefferson; and why?

In the days of John Marshall the financial interests of the country wanted to have the Federal Government do everything, whereas the Democratic Party wanted to have governmental power reposed solely in the States. The South and all the Democrats in the South said government should be a matter of State rights. Now, because of the fact that the financial group, or whatever we may call them, feel that it is more difficult to control the Government of the United States in Washington than it is to control the State legislatures, they want to have governmental power exercised by the States. If they felt that it was easier to control the States than to control the Federal Government, of course, they would be saying that they wanted the views of John Marshall to prevail. So the Senator from Kentucky is entirely correct with reference to that viewpoint.

Notwithstanding that fact, however, we should not take action based upon intolerance, for that is what we find today in this country. We find religious intolerance; we find economic intolerance; we find racial intolerance; we find intolerance today on the part of one group against another; and nothing has stirred up intolerance in this country any more than some of the speeches that have been made against the Supreme Court of the United States. Intolerance, with reference to the Court, has been expressed time and time again upon this floor, and I say it is a dangerous thing. When we find the uninformed masses of the people of the country suffering because they have been underfed and undernourished, to say to them that the Supreme Court of the United States is responsible for all the economic ills of the country is one of the most dangerous speeches that could be made at a time like this.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield for one question?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKE. I should like to submit an inquiry to the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES]. I was interested in the statement he made that in the campaign in Delaware it was suggested that there might be the possibility of adding members to the Supreme Court as the proper method of reorganizing the Court. If the junior Senator from Delaware can inform me as to any speaker sent out by the Democratic National Committee, any literature furnished by the Democratic National Committee, or any authorized spokesman of the Democratic Party who made any such suggestion, I should like to know about them, for the reason that I have repeatedly stated that the only candidate for President who made any such issue during the campaign was Earl Browder, candidate of the Communist Party, who at Baltimore late in the campaign did say publicly over the radio, I believe, that he favored adding 11 members to the Supreme Court to make it a Court of 20. At least in the section of the country from which I come, however, all Democrats relied upon such statements as that made earlier by the distinguished chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, that for anyone even to suggest that the President or the Democratic Party would propose to add members to the Supreme Court was to suggest an absurd and a fantastic thing. So I should like a little more information on that subject at the Senator's convenience.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, if the Senator from Kentucky will permit me, I will try to give the Senator from Nebraska what information I have.

Mr. LOGAN. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. HUGHES. In Delaware during the last campaign the Democratic Party and the candidates on the Democratic ticket had no assistance from any daily newspapers. All the daily newspapers in our State are owned by the Du Pont family.

Mr. WHEELER. What family?

Mr. HUGHES. The Du Pont family. Time and again, over and over, those newspapers stated, and repeated the statement, that the candidate of the Democratic Party had in mind "packing" the Court, as they called it, just as it has been said since we have been here.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, how did they get that advance information?

Mr. HUGHES. That was not a new charge at that time. It was not new 20 years ago or 40 years ago. It was made away back in the times when changes were made in the membership of the Supreme Court; and it is not a new expression. I think the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] said that some other expression had been used at some time in the past. I forget what it was.

Mr. MINTON. "Padding."

Mr. HUGHES. Yes; "padding" the Court. It has been repeatedly said, however, that the purpose was to "pack" the Court.

As to the national campaign carried on in Delaware, of course we had the aid of the able and resourceful chairman of the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], who aided us very much and who spoke in our State. Beyond that we had very little help, except a speech made by the President near the close of the campaign in Wilmington. I may say that my good friend the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] came at my solicitation at one time and spoke in the capital of the State.

Mr. BURKE. Did he say anything about adding members to the Supreme Court?

Mr. HUGHES. He did not speak at all on that subject. He spoke entirely on national subjects. He did not touch anything that had been said in the State, because he did not know anything about the State campaign.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, did the chairman of the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, the junior Senator from Pennsylvania, in his appearances in the State or elsewhere, say that he favored making the matter of adding members to the Supreme Court a party issue?

Mr. HUGHES. I do not recall; very likely he did. If the matter came up, I am sure he would. I certainly knew his attitude, as everyone else does. I think we can all rely on him.

The campaign was carried on in Delaware, as a matter of fact, by the six candidates on the State ticket. All of us happened to be born in the month of January, as was the President, and we campaigned together, and carried on a house-to-house campaign, because we had no newspapers. We discussed all these issues, and constantly there was being thrown at me by the Wilmington Du Pont-owned newspaper, among other things, that very statement, and I never hesitated to face it, as I said before, and I discussed it from every angle. I took my position on it, and I have not changed since that time.

Mr. BURKE. As I understand, then, there was no statement in the press by anyone representing the Democratic organization, because the press was all on the other side, and they merely charged that if the Democrats were elected they might try to add some members to the Court. Is that the fact?

Mr. HUGHES. That is largely true, because we had no Democratic newspapers, except two weekly newspapers of very limited circulation.

Mr. BURKE. Do I understand that the present junior Senator from Delaware came out openly and admitted the charge which he said was made in the Republican press, that if he were elected to the Senate and a proposal were submitted to add members to the Supreme Court for the purpose of influencing its decisions, he would support such a measure?

Mr. HUGHES. I did not say that.

Mr. BURKE. Very well.

Mr. HUGHES. I did not say that, and I did not say so when I spoke a few minutes ago. What I did say in reply to that charge was that I had never liked many of the decisions of the Supreme Court; that I felt the Supreme Court was wrong; that I thought a change should be made; that I was not relying on doing it by constitutional amendment, and if it was necessary to change it in some other way, and a quick way, I was perfectly willing to do it; that, notwithstanding what my opponents might say, if I should be elected to the Senate my statement could be relied upon; that I would attempt to aid in making that change.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, a while ago I referred to the provisions in the Constitution relating to the executive branch of the Government and to the provisions relating to the legislative branch of the Government. I had started to refer to the provisions relating to the judicial branch of the Government when I was interrupted.

In both the executive and the legislative branches of the Government the people had a check, there is no doubt, and there were other checks; but when it came to the Supreme Court, if the contention of the Senator from Nebraska, and perhaps the Senator from Texas, the Senator from North Carolina, and the Senator from Montana be true, those men who had been fighting for liberty, the men who had fought a long war, the men who had railed against the practices of autocratic power, undertook to create a body with absolute power, the same power possessed by the old czars of all the Russias. If the construction placed upon the Constitution by many of our distinguished friends, that the Supreme Court can be changed only by constitutional amendment, is sound, then we did have lovers of liberty in the days of old establishing a body which could by its own whim and the exercise of its own will absolutely control the destinies of America. That power was never vested anywhere.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I would not interrupt the Senator, except that the Senator made reference to some supposed attitude of the Senator from Texas. Does the Senator contend that the Senators mentioned insist that we have no power at all over the Supreme Court?

Mr. LOGAN. I understood they insisted that it was necessary to have a constitutional amendment. If the Senator from Texas does not hold that view, of course, I am very glad to withdraw the statement as to him.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me suggest to the Senator that the Senator from Texas concedes that the Senate has the brutal physical power to do what is proposed, of course. He concedes that, so far as the actual mechanics are concerned, the Senate can do it. The Senator from Texas also points the Senator to a much more easily applied plan. If it is the purpose, as it seems to be the purpose, of Senators who are advocating this bill to get rid of members of the Supreme Court who are 75 years of age, the much simpler way would be for the Senate simply to refuse to appropriate to pay their salaries after they become 75 years of age, but to appropriate full pay if they retire, which is the law now.

We have the physical power not to appropriate. We also have the physical power not to appropriate for the President's salary. If the Congress wanted to, under the Constitution, we could say, "Mr. President, you are not doing as we want you to do, and therefore we will not appropriate for your salary." And no court and no President could make us appropriate, because we are independent. I concede that we have that kind of power, but I do not concede that we ought to use it for that purpose. I do not think we ought to try to control the Court by saying, "We will not pay you." I do not think we ought to try to control the President by saying, "Mr. President, we will not appropriate for your salary; we will not appropriate for your Secretary; we will not appropriate for your appointees." That would be constitutional; we have the power; but we have not the right. We have the power in this case to say to the Court, "No, Mr. Court; you do not decide as we want you to decide, and we will not appropriate for you, and we will make it uncomfortable for you if you do not retire; we will humiliate you; we will denounce you; we will offer inducements to get you off the Supreme Bench; we will put the pressure on you." We have the physical, brutal power to do it, but we have not the moral right to do it.

Mr. LOGAN. More spooks! More spooks! There is no one in the Senate who has ever advocated or said that he wanted to get rid of any Justice on the Court, and the Senator from Texas knows that his statement is unfair when he places such words in the mouths of the men who support the pending measure.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I want to be fair to the Senator. The Attorney General, the sponsor of the bill, appeared before the committee and said that if the Judges on the Court do not like this kind of a bill, let them resign.

Mr. LOGAN. That is an entirely different thing, and I say to the Senator that if there is any moral crime in a man trying to obstruct the will of someone else who has the power to act, it is just as much a crime for members of the Supreme Court who can retire to stay on the bench in order to prevent the President making an appointment as it is for the President to attempt to get them off.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I do not wish to annoy the Senator——

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator does not annoy me.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have a high regard for the Senator's legal ability and for his services as a Senator, and I am trying to be helpful, not to the Senator, because he needs no help, but to other Senators who are not members of the committee and are not familiar with what went on in the committee.

The Senator from Kentucky just made a statement about Judges who remain on the Court when they ought to get off. He says Judges are on the Court and stay on the Court when they ought to get off; in other words, not when they think they ought to get off, not when the Constitution says they must get off, but when the Congress thinks they ought to get off. I say to the Senator, how do the members of the Supreme Court hold their title? They hold it under the Constitution.

How long shall they hold it? The Constitution says they shall hold it during good behavior. Congress has no right, by statute, to curtail that period by one moment, by 1 hour. The people have a right to curtail it by constitutional amendment. Yet, though the Constitution says the judges shall hold their offices during good behavior, until they are 150 years old if they grow that old, the Senator frankly says we have the right, when we think they ought to get off and they do not get off, to put pressure on them and make them get off.

Mr. LOGAN. Let me say to the Senator from Texas that I made no such statement. To use the language of the Senator from Montana, that is drawing a red herring across the trail; that is not fair, when no one has ever suggested that they should be forced off or that they should get off at all. If we are to present this matter to the Senate and to the people, let us be fair about it, and present the issue.

I was trying to state, when I was interrupted, the reason why Congress must exercise such power, the reason which impelled me to believe it should. The Supreme Court, when it was set up by the Constitution, had no restrictions, no rules, no regulations. The President of the United States could, if the Senate would confirm him, appoint a Hottentot to the Supreme Court; he could appoint a boy 16 years old; he could appoint a man who could not read or write. Of course, it was intended by the makers of the Constitution that the Congress should exercise some restriction upon the body, and the number was not mentioned, because the Congress had control over the number.

If there is reference to precedent, the Constitution itself sets a precedent. It left it to Congress, and the statement—though I hope I may never be placed in the attitude of saying such a thing—that it is necessary to amend the Constitution so as to give the Congress power to do that which was vested in it in the original instrument, is the most ridiculous statement I ever heard.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will promise not to bother the Senator any more. I only rise now because I do not want to do the Senator an injustice. The Senator has said the Senator from Texas was not fair in his statement about the attitude of the proponents of the bill. I want to be corrected.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator took the position that we were trying to coerce the members of the Court; that the Congress was trying to shorten their terms of office. There is no Senator for whom I have greater respect, nor is there one who has rendered more valuable service, than the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], but the Senator knows that that statement cannot be true. No one is trying to shorten the term of members of the Court. No one is seeking to interfere with their period of service. The rest is a surmise, or it is spooks operating in the mind of the Senator from Texas, because there is no such issue here.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me suggest to the Senator that I did not want to be unjust or unfair. I did not accuse the Senator of this. He says no one wants to shorten the period of service of the Justices. Then why is it written in the bill that if they will retire no new Justices will be appointed? The new Justices are to be appointed only in the event that a Justice who is 75 years of age will not or does not retire from the bench.

Mr. LOGAN. Because in the judgment of all men, from the Psalmist on down, taking the average man—and laws should be made for the average man, and not for the exception—when a man reaches the age of 75 years, his usefulness is finished. Under this plan, and under this plan alone, can the United States Government retain the services of a man who is over 75 years of age. There are outstanding exceptions—the late Justice Holmes, Justice Brandeis, and perhaps others. But is there a Member of the Senate who knows a hundred men over 75 years of age who must not confess, if he is fair to himself, that more than 50 percent of them, yes, more than three-quarters of them, are incapacitated because of age and physical disability? So 75 years is written in the bill to take care of cases like that of Justice Cushing, Justice Grier, Justices Field and Baldwin. When Justices reach the time when they probably cannot function any more the membership of the Court may be increased to care for the situation thereby created. Is not that reasonable? Is not that sane and sensible, not merely for the immediate present but throughout the ages? It is the only way to deal with the situation. That is why the makers of the Constitution left a check upon the Supreme Court. The power is in the Congress. Congress must exercise it, or else we must run the risk of having this Nation destroyed because it is too cowardly, too afraid of threats and pressure to go ahead and do that which the makers of the Constitution conceded should have been done in the first place.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am interrupting the Senator now to exculpate ourselves of the charge of having misrepresented the facts. The Senator said that nobody is trying to get these judges off the bench. I quote the language of the bill accompanying the message from the President:

Provided, That no additional judge shall be appointed hereunder if the judge who is of retirement age dies, resigns, or retires prior to the nomination of such additional judge.

I quote from the message of the President of the United States:

If, on the other hand, any judge eligible for retirement should feel that his court would suffer because of an increase in its membership, he may retire or resign under already existing provisions of law if he wishes so to do.

And I quote the Attorney General—who, I suppose, had something to do with writing the bill:

If the Supreme Court feels that the addition of six judges would be harmful to that Court, it can avoid that result by resigning.

One other word and I am done.

The Senator from Kentucky says this bill is drawn to take care of cases like that of Cushing and Grier. Are there now any such cases?

Mr. LOGAN. I think so.

Mr. CONNALLY. Then the Senator is not concerned about Cushing and Grier. They have been dead for 50 or 75 years. The Senator from Kentucky then admits that the purpose of this bill is to get rid of some of the sitting Justices.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not. I say that I have a right to look backward as well as to look forward; and that which has happened in the past will, if we but wait long enough, happen in the future. We learn from "the preacher" in the Bible that there is nothing new under the sun. Things move in cycles. That which has occurred will occur again. So, if we are intelligent, we shall act as lawmakers should, instead of waiting until the time comes when we have one Justice who does not know how he will vote, with an evenly divided Court, in which event our Government may actually be destroyed because we shall have no way of getting rid of that Justice.

This is the way in which the Constitution allows it to be done. It vests the authority in the Congress. It is the only way in which any control may be had over the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court may go wrong. It may go wrong willfully. It may be an absolute monarch. It may set itself up and say, "We construe the constitutional provisions as being this way or that." Senators tell me that no one has the power to do anything about it, that the Court may destroy our Government, and no one has the power to do anything about it. I say that the wise men who wrote the Constitution of the United States deliberately, after they had given the subject full consideration, left in the Congress of the United States the power to prevent the Supreme Court itself from violating the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Kentucky thinks the makers of the Constitution did that deliberately?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Why did they not say that the Justices would have to retire after they had reached the age of 75?

Mr. LOGAN. Simply because they knew Congress could deal with the question in the future better than the members of the Constitutional Convention could.

Mr. President, it is almost time for the Senate to take a recess. I cannot conclude today what I mean to say. I meant to go through the report of the committee in order to sustain the charges I have made against the report. I will defer that to some other day.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. As further bearing on the question whether the purpose of this bill is to coerce or force the present members from the bench, do I understand that the Senator from Kentucky denies——

Mr. LOGAN. I deny that that is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. BURKE. I appeal to a higher authority, the majority leader in his statement yesterday. He was asked this question by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN]:

> Does not the Senator expect, as the actual consequence of the passage of such a bill as this, that any and every Justice who comes within the description of having attained the age of 75 years will exercise that freedom and withdraw from the bench upon the passage of this bill?

And the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] answered:

> Mr. President, my imagination has been described at times by others as vivid, but I respectfully decline to prophesy what a Justice of the Supreme Court may do in connection with retirement under this bill.

Then the Senator from Arkansas went on to say:

> I should think that we might regard it as an expression of the public opinion of the Nation that one who has reached the age of 75 years had best avail himself of the privilege of retirement.

That is the whole purpose of the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. Let me say to the Senator from Nebraska that that is entirely beside the question.

As I was saying when I was interrupted, I suppose that from the day of the Hammurabi, as far back as we can go in history, we shall find that it has been the universal rule—it has been written in the laws of the Athenians, it has been written in the laws of the Romans, it has come down through English history—that when a man reaches threescore and ten, he has run the limit of his usefulness. There are exceptions.

Mr. BURKE. Will the Senator yield again?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Did that sentiment prevail in the Constitutional Convention 150 years ago?

Mr. LOGAN. Most assuredly it did. No one ever questioned that rule until the Senator from Nebraska and some of his associates became very solicitous of old men, now that they are making this attack on the policies of the administration.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, where does the Senator find in the provisions of the Constitution any suggestion that at threescore years and ten a member of the Federal judiciary should voluntarily retire, or be intimidated or coerced or vilified so that he would get off the Court?

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator is now using violent language about things. I do not want to be forced to take a position of that kind. It is not written in the Constitution any more than a thousand other natural rights are not written there.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I assume that the Senator from Kentucky cannot finish his remarks today?

Mr. LOGAN. I have a speech which will take about 4 hours more to finish, and I have only 3 minutes left before adjournment time today.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEE in the chair). The Senator will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. When the Senate resumes its session tomorrow, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] will still have the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky will be entitled to the floor.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills of the Senate:

S. 557. An act authorizing the naturalization of James Lincoln Hartley, and for other purposes;

S. 630. An act for the relief of the Sheehy Drilling Co.;

S. 727. An act validating homestead entry Billings 029004 of Lillian J. Glinn;

S. 767. An act for the relief of the Charles T. Miller Hospital, Inc., at St. Paul, Minn.; Dr. Edgar T. Herrmann; Ruth Kehoe, nurse; and Catherine Foley, nurse;

S. 1474. An act to provide for the advancement on the retired list of the Navy of Clyde J. Nesser, a lieutenant (junior grade), United States Navy, retired; and

S. 2497. An act authorizing John Monroe Johnson, Assistant Secretary of Commerce, to accept the decoration tendered him by the Belgian Government.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4597) to amend the Canal Zone Code.

The message further announced that the House has disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2229) for the relief of Florida O. McLain, widow of Calvin E. McLain, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland, Mr. COFFEE of Washington, and Mr. CASE of South Dakota were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7562) to encourage and promote the ownership of farm homes and to make the possession of such homes more secure, to provide for the general welfare of the United States, to provide additional credit facilities for agricultural development, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. JONES, Mr. DOXEY, and Mr. HOPE were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution of the Senate, severally with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 114. An act for the relief of Mildred Moore;

S. 707. An act for the relief of Lucille McClure;

S. 828. An act for the relief of Ellen Taylor;

S. 885. An act for the relief of H. G. Harmon;

S. 1188. An act for the relief of J. E. Sammons;

S. 1257. An act for the relief of James H. Smith;

S. 1849. An act for the relief of the Goldenberg Furniture Co.;

S. 1934. An act for the relief of Halle D. McCullough;

S. 2266. An act for the relief of John A. Ensor; and

S. J. Res. 30. Joint resolution for the relief of William K. Richardson.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate, severally with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 171. An act for the relief of George E. Shockley;

S. 1048. An act for the relief of Alexander E. Kovner;

S. 1143. An act for the relief of G. L. Tarlton; and

S. 1144. An act for the relief of the Frazier-Davis Construction Co.

The message announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 420. An act for the relief of Marjorie L. Baxter;

H. R. 518. An act for the relief of Rosolino Zamito and Maria Zamito;

H. R. 615. An act for the relief of Margaret Voorhees, a minor;

H. R. 827. An act for the relief of Fred P. Halbert;

H. R. 851. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of A. F. Amory;

H. R. 1114. An act for the relief of Agnes Ewing Harter;

H. R. 1122. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Kentucky to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of Mat Hensley, Arnold Blanton, Lillie Price, Clyde Thorpe, and D. L. Mason;

H. R. 1207. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Middle District of Georgia to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of the estates of Marshall Campbell and Raymond O'Neal;

H. R. 1241. An act for the relief of Dorothy Krick, Ernest Krick, and the estate of James Albert Ferren, deceased;

H. R. 1355. An act for the relief of Lawrence E. Thomas;

H. R. 1729. An act for the relief of Russell J. Vaughan;

H. R. 1734. An act for the relief of Sam Romack;

H. R. 1869. An act for the relief of J. Roy Workman, Adelaide W. Workman, and J. Roy Workman, Jr., a minor;

H. R. 2191. An act for the relief of Roberta Carr;

H. R. 2339. An act for the relief of Orba Caress;

H. R. 2358. An act for the relief of Dwain D. Miles;

H. R. 2740. An act for the relief of John N. Brooks;

H. R. 3192. An act for the relief of Clifford L. Bonn;

H. R. 3503. An act for the relief of George O. Claypool;

H. R. 3745. An act for the relief of W. H. Lenneville;

H. R. 3987. An act for the relief of the estate of Col. C. J. Bartlett, United States Army;

H. R. 4156. An act for the relief of George R. Brown;

H. R. 4257. An act for the relief of H. A. Montgomery;

H. R. 4378. An act for the relief of William Sperry;

H. R. 4526. An act for the relief of Lake Spence;

H. R. 4527. An act for the relief of Luther Jennings Workman, a minor;

H. R. 4622. An act for the relief of Henry Clay Gibson;

H. R. 4875. An act for the relief of Paul H. Norboe;

H. R. 4936. An act for the relief of Charlotte Sweeney, a minor; Howard Sweeney, a minor; William Hintz; and Martha Hintz;

H. R. 5144. An act for the relief of Ludwig Bahnweg;

H. R. 5158. An act for the relief of John P. Ryan;

H. R. 5168. An act for the relief of Ethel B. Lord, a minor;

H. R. 5229. An act for the relief of Carson Bradford;

H. R. 5622. An act for the relief of Marian Malik;

H. R. 5703. An act for the relief of Thomas H. McLain;

H. R. 6010. An act for the relief of William Sullivan;

H. R. 6059. An act for the relief of Edith Jordan;

H. R. 6402. An act for the relief of Emory M. McCool, United States Navy, retired;

H. R. 6468. An act to authorize the cancelation of deportation proceedings in the case of John Grinwood Taylor;

H. R. 6574. An act for the relief of E. W. Ross;

H. R. 7387. An act for the relief of Cecile C. Cameron; and

H. J. Res. 363. Joint resolution to authorize an additional appropriation to further the work of the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 827. An act for the relief of Fred P. Halbert; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

H. R. 6402. An act for the relief of Emory M. McCool, United States Navy, retired; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

H. R. 6468. An act to authorize the cancelation of deportation proceedings in the case of John Grinwood Taylor; to the Committee on Immigration.

H. R. 7387. An act for the relief of Cecile C. Cameron; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

H. R. 420. An act for the relief of Marjorie L. Baxter;

H. R. 518. An act for the relief of Rosolino Zamito and Maria Zamito;

H. R. 615. An act for the relief of Margaret Voorhees, a minor;

H. R. 851. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of A. F. Amory;

H. R. 1114. An act for the relief of Agnes Ewing Harter;

H. R. 1122. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Kentucky to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of Mat Hensley, Arnold Blanton, Lillie Price, Clyde Thorpe, and D. L. Mason;

H. R. 1207. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Middle District of Georgia to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of the estates of Marshall Campbell and Raymond O'Neal;

H. R. 1241. An act for the relief of Dorothy Krick, Ernest Krick, and the estate of James Albert Ferren, deceased;

H. R. 1355. An act for the relief of Lawrence E. Thomas;

H. R. 1729. An act for the relief of Russell J. Vaughan;

H. R. 1734. An act for the relief of Sam Romack;

H. R. 1869. An act for the relief of J. Roy Workman, Adelaide W. Workman, and J. Roy Workman, Jr., a minor;

H. R. 2191. An act for the relief of Roberta Carr;

H. R. 2339. An act for the relief of Orba Caress;

H. R. 2358. An act for the relief of Dwain D. Miles;

H. R. 2740. An act for the relief of John N. Brooks;

H. R. 3192. An act for the relief of Clifford L. Bonn;

H. R. 3503. An act for the relief of George O. Claypool;

H. R. 3745. An act for the relief of W. H. Lenneville;

H. R. 3987. An act for the relief of the estate of Col. C. J. Bartlett, United States Army;

H. R. 4156. An act for the relief of George R. Brown;

H. R. 4257. An act for the relief of H. A. Montgomery;

H. R. 4378. An act for the relief of William Sperry;

H. R. 4526. An act for the relief of Lake Spence;

H. R. 4527. An act for the relief of Luther Jennings Workman, a minor;

H. R. 4622. An act for the relief of Henry Clay Gibson;

H. R. 4875. An act for the relief of Paul H. Norboe;

H. R. 4936. An act for the relief of Charlotte Sweeney, a minor; Howard Sweeney, a minor; William Hintz; and Martha Hintz;

H. R. 5144. An act for the relief of Ludwig Bahnweg;

H. R. 5158. An act for the relief of John P. Ryan;

H. R. 5168. An act for the relief of Ethel B. Lord, a minor;

H. R. 5229. An act for the relief of Carson Bradford;

H. R. 5622. An act for the relief of Marian Malik;

H. R. 5703. An act for the relief of Thomas H. McLain;

H. R. 6010. An act for the relief of William Sullivan;

H. R. 6059. An act for the relief of Edith Jordan; and

H. R. 6574. An act for the relief of E. W. Ross; to the Committee on Claims.

RECESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair, under the unanimous-consent order of yesterday, declares the Senate in recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

Thereupon, at 1 o'clock p. m., the Senate, under the unanimous-consent order previously entered, took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, July 8, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SENATE

THURSDAY, JULY 8, 1937

(Legislative day of Tuesday, July 6, 1937)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Wednesday, July 7, 1937, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. LEWIS. I note the absence of a quorum, and ask for a roll call in order to secure one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Clark	Johnson, Colo.	Pittman
Andrews	Connally	King	Pope
Ashurst	Copeland	La Follette	Reynolds
Austin	Davis	Lee	Robinson
Bailey	Dieterich	Lewis	Schwartz
Bankhead	Duffy	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Ellender	Logan	Sheppard
Berry	Frazier	Lonergan	Shipstead
Bilbo	George	Lundeen	Smathers
Black	Gerry	McAdoo	Stelwer
Bone	Gibson	McCarran	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	Gillette	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Bridges	Green	McKellar	Townsend
Brown, Mich.	Guffey	McNary	Truman
Brown, N. H.	Hale	Maloney	Tydings
Bulkley	Harrison	Minton	Vandenberg
Bulow	Hatch	Moore	Van Nuys
Burke	Hayden	Murray	Wagner
Byrd	Herring	Neely	Walsh
Byrnes	Hitchcock	Nye	Wheeler
Capper	Holt	O'Mahoney	White
Caraway	Hughes	Overton
Chavez	Johnson, Calif.	Pepper

Mr. LEWIS. Let me announce for the RECORD that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] are absent on important public business.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is detained from the Senate because of illness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Ninety Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

VALUATION OF WILSON DAM AND CERTAIN STEAM PLANTS—TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the vice chairman of the Board of Directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority, reporting that on May 6, 1937, the President approved the findings of the board with respect to the valuation of Wilson Dam and the steam plants at Nitrate Plants Nos. 1 and 2, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

EXCHANGE OF LAND IN PUERTO RICO

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Assistant Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to exchange with the people of Puerto Rico the Guanica Lighthouse Reservation for two adjacent plots of insular forest land under the jurisdiction of the Commissioner, Departments of Agriculture and Commerce, and for other purposes, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Young People's Conference, Disciples of Christ, of Bethany Beach, Del., favoring the enactment of stringent legislation to prevent lynching, and also favoring long-term imprisonment of persons convicted of participating in the crime of lynching, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LONERGAN presented a resolution adopted by the Twenty-sixth Annual Grand Chapter of the Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity at Washington, D. C., favoring the enactment of legislation for the protection of persons from mob violence and lynching, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LODGE presented petitions, numerously signed, of sundry citizens of the State of Massachusetts, praying for the abolition of the Federal Reserve Board as at present constituted, and also praying that Congress exercise its constitutional right to coin money and regulate the value thereof, which were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. COPELAND presented a resolution adopted by the Westchester Newspaper Guild, Yonkers, N. Y., protesting against inclusion in the recently enacted relief joint resolution of a stipulation that current relief appropriations be spent in 12 equal installments, and favoring the elimination of such provision from existing law, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a memorial of several citizens of Albany and Coxsackie, N. Y., remonstrating against the enactment of the bill (S. 1270) to regulate barbers in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. LEE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2317) for the relief of Robert L. Summers, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 881) thereon.

Mr. HUGHES, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 2383) to amend the act authorizing the Attorney General to compromise suits on certain contracts of insurance, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 882) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 2388) to increase the punishment of second, third, and subsequent offenders against the narcotic laws, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 883) thereon.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA TAXES—MINORITY VIEWS

Mr. KING, as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, submitted minority views on the bill (H. R. 7472) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which were ordered to be printed as part 2 of Senate Report No. 879.

INTERFERENCE WITH UNITED STATES MAILS—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON POST OFFICES AND POST ROADS

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 140) authorizing an investigation of the delivery or nondelivery of mail to establishments where industrial strife is in progress (submitted by Mr. BRIDGES on June 7, 1937), reported it adversely, and submitted a report (No. 885) thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that today, July 8, 1937, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills and joint resolution:

S. 557. An act authorizing the naturalization of James Lincoln Hartley, and for other purposes;

S. 630. An act for the relief of the Sheehy Drilling Co.;

S. 727. An act validating homestead entry Billings 029004 of Lillian J. Glinn;

S. 767. An act for the relief of the Charles T. Miller Hospital, Inc., at St. Paul, Minn.; Dr. Edgar T. Herrmann; Ruth Kehoe, nurse; and Catherine Foley, nurse;

S. 1474. An act to provide for the advancement on the retired list of the Navy of Clyde J. Nesser, a lieutenant (junior grade), United States Navy, retired;

S. 2497. An act authorizing John Monroe Johnson, Assistant Secretary of Commerce, to accept the decoration tendered him by the Belgian Government; and

S. J. Res. 88. Joint resolution providing for the participation of the United States in the world's fair to be held by the San Francisco Bay Exposition, Inc., in the city of San Francisco during the year 1939, and for other purposes.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHURST (by request):

A bill (S. 2754) to amend the Judicial Code by conferring on circuit courts of appeals jurisdiction to revise sentences in criminal cases; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SCHWELLENBACH:

A bill (S. 2755) to amend section 315 of the Communications Act of 1934;

A bill (S. 2756) to add section 315 (a) of the Communications Act of 1934; and

A bill (S. 2757) to amend section 326 of the Communications Act of 1934; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. WHEELER:

A bill (S. 2758) to prohibit the transmission of certain gambling information in interstate commerce by communications facilities; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. HATCH:

A bill (S. 2759) authorizing the sale of certain lands to the regents of the Agricultural College of New Mexico; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. TYDINGS:

A bill (S. 2760) authorizing the George Washington Memorial Bridge Public Corporation, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Dahlgren, Va.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. TYDINGS and Mr. RADCLIFFE:

A bill (S. 2761) authorizing the State of Maryland by and through its State roads commission, or the successors of said commission, to construct, maintain, and operate certain bridges across streams, rivers, and navigable waters which are wholly or partly within the State; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 2762) for the relief of the estate of George B. Spearin, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. PITTMAN:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 175) to amend section 4 of the joint resolution approved May 1, 1937, amending the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution providing for the prohibition of the export of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to belligerent countries; the prohibition of the transportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war by vessels of the United States for the use of belligerent states; for the registration and licensing of persons engaged in the business of manufacturing, exporting, or importing arms, ammunition, or implements of war; and restricting travel by American citizens on belligerent ships during war", approved August 31, 1935, as amended; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 363) to authorize an additional appropriation to further the work of the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY—AMENDMENTS

Mr. McCARRAN submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1392) to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA TAXES—AMENDMENTS

Mr. TYDINGS and Mr. McCARRAN each submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the bill (H. R. 7472) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

MILDRED MOORE

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 114) for the relief of Mildred Moore, which was, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$750" and insert "$1,250."

Mr. LEWIS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

ELLEN TAYLOR

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 828) for the relief of Ellen Taylor, which was, on page 1, line 5, after "Taylor", to insert a comma and "of Richmond, Va."

Mr. BYRD. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

H. G. HARMON

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 885) for the relief of H. G. Harmon, which was, on page 1, line 7, to strike out "$400" and insert "$500."

Mr. GILLETTE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

HALLE D. M'CULLOUGH

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1934) for the relief of Halle D. McCullough, which was, on page 1, line 10, after "agency", to insert a comma and "which sums have been disallowed by the General Accounting Office for lack of accounting evidence to substantiate the propriety of the expenditures."

Mr. BAILEY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

FLORIDA O. M'LAIN

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2229) for the relief of Florida O. McLain, widow of Calvin E. McLain, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BAILEY. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. BAILEY, Mr. HUGHES, and Mr. CAPPER conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 557. An act authorizing the naturalization of James Lincoln Hartley, and for other purposes;

S. 630. An act for the relief of the Sheehy Drilling Co.;

S. 727. An act validating homestead entry Billings 029004 of Lillian J. Glinn;

S. 767. An act for the relief of the Charles T. Miller Hospital, Inc., at St. Paul, Minn.; Dr. Edgar T. Herrmann; Ruth Kehoe, nurse; and Catherine Foley, nurse;

S. 1474. An act to provide for the advancement on the retired list of the Navy of Clyde J. Nesser, a lieutenant (junior grade), United States Navy, retired;

S. 2497. An act authorizing John Monroe Johnson, Assistant Secretary of Commerce, to accept the decoration tendered him by the Belgian Government;

H. R. 4597. An act to amend the Canal Zone Code;

S. J. Res. 88. Joint resolution providing for the participation of the United States in the world's fair to be held by the San Francisco Bay Exposition, Inc., in the city of San Francisco during the year 1939, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 379. Joint resolution authorizing Federal participation in the New York World's Fair, 1939.

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 1392) to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] is entitled to the floor.

FAIR LABOR STANDARDS OF EMPLOYMENT

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me to submit a report?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. From the Committee on Education and Labor I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (S. 2475) to provide for the establishment of fair labor standards in employments in and affecting interstate commerce, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 884) thereon.

It is my intention, at a later date, to file a more complete report on the measure. At this time, with the consent of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], I wish to call the attention of the Senate——

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator states that the report is favorable. Is it a unanimous report from the Committee on Education and Labor?

Mr. BLACK. All members of the committee who were present voted to report the bill favorably.

Mr. McNARY. How many were present?

Mr. BLACK. As I recall, about nine. I did not attempt to count them. I will be glad to find out who they were. One member who was not present asked that he be not recorded either way until he could go over the matter more fully.

Mr. McNARY. What is the number of the membership of the Senator's committee?

Mr. BLACK. Thirteen as I recall; I have not counted them recently. There was a majority present. If there is any question about it I shall be glad to tell the Senator what members were present.

Mr. McNARY. There is no question at all. I was merely curious to know how many voted to report the bill favorably.

Mr. BLACK. I shall be very glad to count them in a moment. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] was there, and if he will count them up while I am making the brief statement I desire to make I will be glad to have him do so. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] was also there. He can perhaps recall the Senators who were present.

I desire to read at this time a paragraph from the President's message asking for the enactment of legislation on this subject, which is as follows:

> Today, you and I are pledged to take further steps to reduce the lag in the purchasing power of industrial workers and to strengthen and stabilize the markets for the farmers' products. The two go hand in hand. Each depends for its effectiveness upon the other. Both working simultaneously will open new outlets for productive capital. Our Nation, so richly endowed with natural resources and with a capable and industrial population, should be able to devise ways and means of insuring to all our able-bodied working men and women a fair day's pay for a fair day's work.

I call attention of the Senate to that part of the message for the reason that it is my hope—and I shall urge—that before the Senate shall finally adjourn it shall act upon legislation with reference to minimum wages, maximum hours, and child labor, and that it also act with reference to farm legislation. It is my belief——

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I am going to make now a statement concerning the matter which I think the Senator from New York desires to ask me. Tomorrow the Committee on Education and Labor will meet with reference to the housing bill, at which time the Senator from New York is invited to be present.

It is my belief that all three of the legislative proposals referred to come within the direct scope of the Democratic platform of 1936, and that the people were promised legislation for the benefit of the American farmer and the American worker, and likewise legislation to carry out the housing program. I shall certainly urge that before final adjournment the Senate shall take up for consideration legislation for the benefit of the farm worker and legislation relating to the housing program. I believe our committees now should be working on an investigation preparatory to enacting farm legislation. I sincerely hope they will begin an investigation in order to determine whether they can and will report measures relating to the farm situation in keeping with what we promised the people of the United States.

Mr. POPE and Mr. BURKE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. LOGAN. I shall be glad to yield, but do not desire to yield to have started a discussion of the matter suggested by the Senator from Alabama. I yield first to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. POPE. Has the Senator from Alabama in mind the so-called new farm bill which has been discussed on the floor and concerning which some informal hearings have been held?

Mr. BLACK. With the consent of the Senator from Kentucky, I will state that it is my understanding that a bill has been suggested and informal discussions have taken place. I believe that bill or any other bill could be used as a basis for study by the committee in connection with farm legislation. I would say that the bill could be considered as a basis for such study because it evidently represents the viewpoint of a large number of farmers.

In this connection I may state that present at the meetings of the Committee on Education and Labor were the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER].

Mr. POPE. With reference to the new farm bill I expect either today or tomorrow, at the first opportunity—and I hope in conjunction with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. MCGILL], with whom I have been talking—to introduce a new farm bill with only one additional provision with reference to a referendum concerning the marketing-quota features of the bill. That is the only mandatory feature contained in the new bill, and the referendum will relate to it. I have the bill ready and hope to introduce it today or tomorrow to form the basis, as suggested by the Senator from Alabama, for consideration of further farm legislation.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Kentucky will yield, I desire to ask the Senator from Idaho a question.

Mr. LOGAN. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. McNARY. Has the Senator from Idaho in mind and is he now speaking about the so-called ever-normal trading bill?

Mr. POPE. I am speaking of the so-called new agricultural adjustment bill of 1937, to which the Senator referred sometime ago, the bill which has now been introduced in the House and concerning which some informal hearings have been had before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate. The bill has not been actually introduced in the Senate, but I expect to introduce it today or tomorrow; and I hope the Senator from Kansas [Mr. McGILL] may join with me, as we have discussed the matter together.

Mr. LOGAN. I yield now to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Kentucky, I desire to ask the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] a question with reference to his statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield for that purpose?

Mr. LOGAN. I do.

Mr. BURKE. I understood the Senator from Alabama to say there are three matters which he thinks ought to receive the attention of the Senate before we conclude our labors, namely, the wages and hours bill, farm legislation, and housing legislation. The reason he gave for considering them is that they all come within pledges made in the national Democratic platform. The question I should like to ask the Senator is whether he does not believe it would be very wise for the Senate to consider no further and give no further attention to any measures not included within the provisions of the last Democratic national platform?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield to enable me to answer the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BLACK. It had not been my intention at this time to enter into a discussion with any one of the members of the flying squadron who are opposed to the President's Court plan. Not having the floor in my own right, it is impossible for me to enter into that discussion with the Senator from Nebraska, who, as I understand, is, if not the general, at least the lieutenant general, or the major general, or the brigadier general of that squadron.

I did not mean by the statement I made that the present Congress should limit itself to consideration of the three measures to which I referred. The Senate is now considering and discussing the Court bill. As a member of the platform committee, one of the 10 members of the subcommittee which drew the platform, it is my belief that the Senate is now proceeding in accordance with another plank in the Democratic platform by which it pledged the people it would consider, in connection with legislation coming before the Congress, the bill it is now discussing. For that reason I favor proceeding with the Court bill, filibuster or no filibuster, until we complete its consideration.

Mr. BURKE. Will the Senator from Alabama kindly state what language he finds in the result of the labors of the platform committee at the last Democratic National Convention that gives any substance to the statement he just made?

Mr. LOGAN. I will answer that without yielding to the Senator from Alabama to do so, because the statement has been made several times. It was made by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], who read the platform into the RECORD and said there was nothing in the platform that would even give an intimation that there would be any legislation of this kind. I state now that it is asserted in the Democratic platform positively that if no legal remedy can be found to do something about the questions we are considering, a constitutional amendment perhaps would be submitted, but a legal remedy was found and therefore we are seeking to carry out that provision of the Democratic platform.

(At this point Mr. LOGAN yielded for the transaction of several matters of routine business, which appear elsewhere in today's RECORD.)

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 1392) to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I express the hope that I may be permitted to discuss, for at least a while, in an orderly fashion the proposed substitute for Senate bill 1392, known as the bill to reform the judiciary; but before I begin that discussion, and so that the question may be forever settled, I desire to read the Democratic platform touching the matter inquired about by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE]. Apparently the Senator from Nebraska has never read it, and some of the other Senators apparently have not done so.

It has been charged by many Senators that the President, in submitting this proposal to the Congress, was violating a platform pledge. He was doing no such thing. That is another red herring drawn across the trail.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well.

Mr. WHEELER. My attention was diverted when the Senator's statement was being made. Am I to understand that the Senator contends that the Democratic platform has in it anything with reference to increasing the membership of the Supreme Court of the United States, or putting additional Justices on the Supreme Court because members of it are over 75 years of age?

Mr. LOGAN. I did not say the Democratic platform said anything about it; but when the Constitution provides the sole means of gaining relief from the aggressions of the Supreme Court, any lawyer and any citizen may know that an effort to obtain relief within the Constitution relates to the only method left open by the Constitution.

Mr. WHEELER. Do not misunderstand me. I am trying to get at what the Senator has in mind with reference to this bill. Is it the intention of this bill to put men on the Supreme Court so as to overturn its decisions or to interfere with the aggressions of the present members of the Supreme Court?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly it is not; and no one has ever thought so except those who have a vitriolic hatred of the President and the present administration.

The Senator from Montana has been a lawyer. He has been a practicing lawyer. I desire to ask him whether he considered that he was packing a jury when he saw men on the jury who, he thought, held views that would not be for the best interests of his client, and he challenged them, and asked the officer to produce other jurors. Was the Senator trying to pack the jury then?

Mr. WHEELER. Of course that is not packing a jury; but the judicial system provides for the selection of a jury, and it provides that each party shall have certain challenges with reference to the jury. That, as the Senator knows, is quite a different thing from throwing judges off the bench because they disagree with one's political views.

Mr. LOGAN. Nobody has ever talked about throwing judges off the bench. That is a manufactured issue coming from those who oppose the proposal.

Let me say to the Senator from Montana that I have great respect for his ability. He has been an outstanding Member of this body for a long time; and there is no one more sorry than myself to see the company he is with at this time, when apparently he has turned his back on everything he has ever stood for since he has been in the Senate, and is lending aid and comfort to those who, he knows, would destroy the Government if they were not restrained.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator for his very kind remarks with reference to me. I have a high regard for the Senator from Kentucky and for his ability. I desire to say, however, that I do not need his words of sympathy; and when the Senator says I am turning my back on everything I have ever stood for, he is stating something that is not in accord with the truth or the fact.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas will state it.

Mr. ROBINSON. A Senator having the floor may yield for a question. He may not yield to other Senators for speeches within his time.

Mr. LOGAN. I started a moment ago——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. May the Chair rule on the point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Yes, Mr. President; I hope he may, so that the point of order will be recognized by every speaker from now on. I do not want that point of order to be raised in regard to this episode, however, when we see it violated every day, on numerous occasions, by other Senators.

Mr. LOGAN. I have not the slightest objection——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is not debatable unless it is submitted to the Senate.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, may I ask the Chair a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator may.

Mr. TYDINGS. I submit to the Chair that when the personal standing and record of a Senator is attacked by another Senator, I feel that it is only fair, in passing on the point of order, to give the Senator who is attacked all the latitude in the world, in order that his position may not be misstated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas makes the point of order that a Senator may not yield except for a question.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is ruling on the question. If the Senator from Montana wishes to say something, the Chair will be glad to hear him.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I simply wish to say that I have not any desire to make speeches in the time of any other Senator; but I do wish to call attention to the fact that I asked the Senator from Kentucky a question, and in response to that question he made a statement with reference to me. In all fairness and all decency I have a right to correct the statement which was made by the Senator against me.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in reply to that let me say that the Senator from Montana has a perfect right to take the floor in his own behalf. He has not the right to make an argument within the time of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not know anybody on this floor who violates that rule more than does the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I never violate any rule when I am required to conform to it; and I am now seeking to require my good friend the Senator from Montana to conform to the rule.

Mr. WHEELER. From now on we shall require the Senator from Arkansas, as well as every other Senator, to conform to that rule.

Mr. ROBINSON. I shall be very glad to do so, Mr. President. On the occasion when I addressed the Senate a few days ago it was not at my invitation that I was asked all manner of questions, some of which were irrelevant. I did yield, and permitted my colleagues to make many speeches in my time, on the theory that they might make better speeches than I could make. The rule of the Senate is well defined, however, and it is my intention to invoke it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, that is all right, provided the rule be invoked impartially.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. It is not in order for the Senator from California to address the Senate during the time of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The Senator from Arkansas has just delivered himself of an address which he was privileged, of course, to deliver here.

Mr. ROBINSON. I make the point of order, Mr. President.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. If the Senator from Arkansas may deliver a speech in the time of the Senator from Kentucky, the rest of us can do the same thing; and that may be understood right now.

Mr. ROBINSON. I make the point of order.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I desire to assure the Senate that I intended no disrespect to the Senator from Montana. I have long been an admirer of his. Sometimes, in the heat of debate, we do not express ourselves as we should. I do not question at all the good faith and the honest motives behind the conduct of the Senator from Montana; but he has, I think, taken a position which would lead those who do not know him, perhaps, as well as some of us do to think he was in bad company.

Now I desire to call attention to the Democratic platform.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky will please suspend. A point of order has been made by the Senator from Arkansas. The point of order is not debatable until it is submitted to the Senate or is appealed. The Chair has no right to raise a point of order except in particular cases where there is disorder. Whenever a Senator makes a point of order—and any Senator has a right to do so—it is the duty of the Chair to rule upon the point of order or submit it to the Senate.

A point of order has been made to the effect that the Senator from Kentucky may not yield to other Senators for anything but a question; that he may not yield for a speech. The Chair thinks it well at this time for the Chair to read the rules that are applicable to these matters, as questions regarding them will undoubtedly arise quite frequently in the near future.

Rule XIX provides:

> No Senator shall interrupt another Senator in debate without his consent, and to obtain such consent he shall first address the Presiding Officer.

Let the Chair call attention to the fact that a part of that rule requires that the Chair shall be first addressed, and that the Chair shall submit the request to the Senator who is speaking. When it is not important, Senators yield to various other Senators without conforming to that portion of the rule. The other portion of the rule is really the foundation for what is termed "unlimited debate" in the United States Senate, because there is no other provision with regard to unlimited debate in the United States Senate. It is called "unlimited debate" because as long as a Senator who has the floor is physically able to speak, he cannot be interrupted unless he is willing to be interrupted, and then he can be interrupted only for a question. The right to yield for a question is based only on precedents; but when it is apparent that a Senator is attempting to farm out his right to the floor by yielding to other Senators for speeches, he is yielding the floor, and therefore after each such yielding he is making another and separate speech.

The matter becomes particularly material at the present time because we are now in a legislative day extending over several calendar days.

Another part of rule XIX provides:

> No Senator shall speak more than twice upon any one question in debate on the same day without leave of the Senate, which shall be determined without debate.

In order to be consistent with that rule it is evident that a Senator cannot farm out the time to other Senators, because it would be a violation of the rule that no Senator shall speak more than twice on the same subject on the same day.

The Chair will hold, when the question is raised, that "day" means legislative day. In view of that fact, the Chair is forced to sustain the point made by the Senator from Arkansas that the Senator has been yielding not alone for questions but for statements, and if the Senator sees fit to yield for a speech, he may do so, but he yields the floor at that time. If he does that twice, he cannot speak again on the legislative day on the same subject, because he will have voluntarily made two speeches on the same day upon the same question.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, may I submit a parliamentary inquiry?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BURKE. I understand that the Chair is not at this time ruling on the provision of rule XIX as to the definition of "day", but states that when the point is raised he is prepared to rule that "day" as so used means "legislative day."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska is correct. The Chair was merely advising the Senate as to the attitude of the Chair.

Mr. TYDINGS. A point of order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to call the attention of the Chair to the rule which provides that no Senator either directly or indirectly may impugn the motives of another Senator. I think that rule should be enforced also.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The answer to the Senator is that any Senator may invoke rule XIX, and under that rule a Senator may call to order the speaker who is transgressing the rules of the Senate and the speaker who is called to order must take his seat and remain in his seat until the Senate shall indicate by vote that he may proceed in order. Rule XIX also provides that—

> No Senator in debate shall, directly or indirectly, by any form of words impute to another Senator or to other Senators any conduct or motive unworthy or unbecoming a Senator.

This rule can be invoked and enforced without the consent of the Senator who is speaking.

Mr. LOGAN. Then when I yield in the future, Mr. President, it will be understood that I am yielding only for a question; but I have no power myself to determine whether a question is asked or whether the interrupting Senator is making a speech. I hope that burden may not be thrown upon me. Neither will I farm out time for speeches to Senators who have been interrogating me, because if I desired to farm out some time I would farm it out to those on my own side.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair may state to the Senator from Kentucky that he has a right to stop any Senator who has interrupted him at any time, although he has yielded, and therefore the Senator is responsible for the determination of the fact whether a question is being asked or a speech is being made.

Mr. LOGAN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. As I understand the rule, if the Senator who is making a speech yields for any purpose except for a question, he loses the floor. Suppose one yields for a question, and the Senator who has interrupted him makes a statement. Is the burden on the Senator who has the floor to stop the interrupting Senator or should a point of order be made against him?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair holds that the Senator himself is responsible for the conduct of his speech, having a right to refuse to yield further at any time. He will therefore be liable for his own conduct and the effect upon his right to continue his own speech.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, as I said in the beginning, I am always glad to yield. I am also obedient to all rules of the Senate and other rules for the government of my conduct. Consequently, I do not want Senators to take it as a discourtesy if I decline to allow one to make a statement or a speech.

Mr. WHEELER. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the Chair be kind enough to state what business, other than the business under consideration, can be transacted under the rule the Chair has just announced with reference to a legislative day?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No other business may be transacted except to lay down messages from the President, the House of Representatives, and conference reports, which may be considered upon motion. Such motion is not debatable. Any business, of course, may be transacted by unanimous consent.

Mr. WHEELER. I wish to state now that, in view of the rule which has been laid down, from now on no business will be transacted, if I am on the floor, except by unanimous consent, unless it is a privileged motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair may state, however, that there is an exception with regard to action on conference reports and on matters coming from the other branch of the Congress, and from the White House.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, there is another exception. If the able Senator from Arkansas should move an adjournment, certainly we would have a morning hour for the transaction of business, and there would be routine business. That is what I would call transacting business not by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Undoubtedly that is in accordance with the rule.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, the Democratic platform in 1936 contained this provision:

> The Republican platform proposes to meet many pressing national problems solely by action of the separate States. We know that drought, dust storms, floods, minimum wages, maximum hours, child labor, and working conditions in industry, monopolistic and unfair business practices cannot be adequately handled exclusively by 48 separate State legislatures, 48 separate State administrations, and 48 separate State courts. Transactions and activities which inevitably overflow State boundaries call for both State and Federal treatment.
>
> We have sought and will continue to seek to meet these problems through legislation within the Constitution.
>
> If those problems cannot be effectively solved by legislation within the Constitution, we shall seek such clarifying amendment as will assure to the legislatures of the several States and to the Congress of the United States, each within its proper jurisdiction, the power to enact those laws which the State and Federal legislatures, within their respective spheres, shall find necessary in order adequately to regulate commerce, protect public health and safety, and safeguard economic security.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield for a question.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Will the Senator be good enough to state the problems to which the platform referred?

Mr. LOGAN. I have just read them. They are stated in the platform.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator from Wyoming is, perhaps, a little dense. Will the Senator from Kentucky be good enough to repeat the problems to which the platform refers?

Mr. LOGAN. I shall be delighted.

> Thus we propose to maintain the letter and spirit of the Constitution.

This was the situation——

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question right there?

Mr. LOGAN. Wait until I answer the other question. I shall be very glad, just as soon as I can answer the other question. I cannot answer two at once.

The platform specifically enumerates flood control, labor, minimum wages, maximum hours, social security, the regulation of commerce, protection of public health and safety, and safeguarding economic security. I believe that covers all of them except child labor and working conditions in industry, monopolistic and unfair business practices.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Will the Senator be good enough to indicate to this body which one of those problems is now in danger of not being carried out by law?

Mr. LOGAN. I will do so as soon as I yield to the Senator from Nebraska, who started to ask a question.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. But, Mr. President, why slip from one question to another?

Mr. BURKE. I withdraw my question.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Why not answer a question when it is propounded?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield further to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKE. The question I desire to submit to the Senator from Kentucky is this: Why did the framers of the platform in the last sentence read by the distinguished Senator refer to legislation within the letter and the spirit of the Constitution?

Mr. LOGAN. Because that is the way all legislation should be.

Mr. LEWIS rose.

Mr. LOGAN. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. I merely wish to protest against this concerted action on the part of the able Senators constantly to interrupt the speech of the Senator from Kentucky so as to prevent him from continuing on the point to which he wishes to address himself.

Mr. BURKE. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BURKE. The Senator from Kentucky stated that he wanted to read the platform because he believed that I had never read it. I believe that under those circumstances I have a right to demonstrate that I have read it, understand it, and know what is in it, and recognize the vital distinctions drawn by the framers of the platform when they refer both to the bare letter of the Constitution and to the spirit of the Consitution.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. The Senator from Nebraska is not stating any question of personal privilege.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, may I rise to a question of personal privilege?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is not debatable. The point of order is made that the Senator from Nebraska is not raising any question of personal privilege. The Senator from Nebraska has stated that he feels that he has been imposed upon by a statement that he has not read the Constitution.

Mr. BURKE. No; the Democratic platform.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not know whether that is an insult or not. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURKE. I withdraw the point of personal privilege.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained upon the ground that a question of personal privilege cannot be raised while another Senator has the floor without his consent.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire, then, to withdraw the statement, because I believe the Senator has read the platform.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LOGAN. I yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have risen to a point of personal privilege.

Mr. LOGAN. I have nothing to do with that.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Not because of anything——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of personal privilege must be stated.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall state the point of personal privilege if the Chair will but bear with me and give me an opportunity.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator must not make a speech without the consent of the Senator having the floor, and such Senator cannot give such consent without suffering the penalty that may attach to yielding the floor.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] raised the point that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] and I were asking questions of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] for the purpose of interrupting his argument. I deny the imputation. The question which I propounded to the Senator from Kentucky was not asked for the purpose of interrupting his discourse but to illuminate his discourse, to determine whether or not——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I again rise to a point of order. The Senator from Wyoming is not stating any question of personal privilege.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] reflects upon the motives of a Senator in asking a question, is he not then out of order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must repeat that it is obvious that parliamentary procedure could not go on if the Senate had imposed upon it methods of procedure under which questions of personal privilege such as have just been raised were indulged in. Senators cannot rise for a question of personal privilege when a Senator is speaking without his personal consent. The Senator has violated that rule.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Do I understand it to be the ruling of the Chair that a Member of this body may not rise to a point of personal privilege if the Senator who is occupying the floor declines to yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the rule.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, another parliamentary inquiry then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. In other words, if the Senator who occupies the floor undertakes to cast imputations upon the motives of another Senator, is that other Senator denied the right to rise to a question of personal privilege unless the Senator who is making the charges yields the floor?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; he is not, because rule XIX expressly provides that in such a case a Senator may rise and call the other Senator to order for improper language, in which case that Senator must take his seat without further action and must remain in his seat until a majority of the Senators vote that he may proceed. That is the remedy of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Another parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. May a Senator ask a question of another Senator without obtaining the permission of that Senator?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He may not.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. So that a Senator who occupies the floor may shut off all debate while he is talking?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the rule.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. And he may retire within his own shell and keep the argument all to himself until he has finished?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If that were not true there could not be a filibuster.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I shall attempt to proceed, although it is a little difficult to follow connected ideas or thoughts when there are so many questions of personal privilege. I now desire further to refer to the platform of 1932, on which President Roosevelt and many Senators were elected, and I find this language in that platform, a promise on the part of the Democratic Party:

> Simplification of legal procedure and reorganization of the judicial system to make the attainment of justice speedy, certain, and at less cost.

Mr. President, after the Roosevelt administration began to operate much legislation was passed which all of us thought was for the best interests of the American people, and the American people thought so. It is true there was a great protest against the legislation which constitutes the bulk of laws known as the New Deal. There existed in the country a great organization of distinguished men known as the Liberty League. Those who are opposing the Court plan now were not the first to proclaim the destruction of liberty by the Roosevelt administration.

The distinguished men known as the Liberty League raised a good deal of wind about what was being done.

After that certain legislation reached the Supreme Court of the United States. Far be it from me to criticize the Supreme Court. In the event Senators desire to find criticism of the Supreme Court, let them read some of the dissenting opinions which have been written by members of the Court, or perhaps Senators will find more severe criticism than I would ever make in expressions of some of the Senators who are now opposing this legislation. But the fact remains that we had drifted down to the good year 1936, and the Supreme Court had reached a state where some legislation might be upheld or it might be declared invalid, and no living human being could tell what would happen to it.

For instance, in that good year of 1936 there were 57 lawyers, outstanding lawyers of the Nation—I have forgotten whether they were Liberty League lawyers or whether they were American Bar Association lawyers—a Senator says they were Liberty League lawyers—and they wrote an opinion about the constitutionality of the Wagner Labor Relations Act. In that opinion there was not a single dissent. These 57 names were signed to the opinion, and it was printed and scattered broadcast over the entire Nation. The conclusion which was reached by those distinguished lawyers, without a dissent, was that the Wagner Labor Relations Act was unconstitutional.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so I may have permission to ask him a question?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I also ask the same permission from the Democratic leader.

May I ask the Senator if it was not also the opinion of the Attorney General who argued the case before the Supreme Court that the law was unconstitutional?

Mr. LOGAN. I rather imagine that it was. It was my opinion, I might say, that there was some doubt, but I thought the Court as then constituted would hold the act invalid. I did not think it was unconstitutional, but if the Constitution is what the judges say it is, and that seems to be the general opinion now, I thought the judges would say that it was unconstitutional. But they did not. They upheld it, much to the confusion of the Liberty League lawyers.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me ask another question.

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. The Supreme Court also held it constitutional to the confusion of the Attorney General of the United States, did it not? For does not the Senator know that the Attorney General of the United States had said that it would be held unconstitutional, and does he not know that some of the Senators on the floor of the Senate had said that it would be held constitutional notwithstanding the opinions of the Attorney General of the United States?

Mr. LOGAN. I do not know that, but I have no reason to dispute the correctness of the statement.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will my colleague yield to me for a question?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield to my colleague from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it not also true that former President Taft vetoed an act of Congress on the ground that it was unconstitutional, and that the Supreme Court, of which he was later Chief Justice, held it constitutional?

Mr. LOGAN. That is very true. That was the Webb-Kenyon Act.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. Does the Senator from Kentucky know of the existence of any official document anywhere which sets forth that the Attorney General of the United States has held or declared that the so-called Labor Relations Act was unconstitutional?

Mr. LOGAN. I do not.

Mr. WAGNER. He certainly argued with great ability and great favor before the United States Supreme Court to uphold its constitutionality, and he succeeded.

Mr. LOGAN. And he won his case.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. LOGAN. I was pointing out the conditions as they existed at that time, and the point I seek to make is that there was no one in the Senate or outside of it who in 1936 could tell whether an act of Congress was constitutional or unconstitutional. All fair-minded men must agree that that is true. It seems that some of the Justices had become so fixed in their opinions that one knew what they were going to do before a case ever reached them. I believe there are some members of the Court today, as there are some Members of the Senate, who believe that everything which comes from President Roosevelt, which is tinged with coloring of the New Deal, comes from the devil; and since the Constitution has become an instrument which is interpreted according to the personal whim of the judges, then anything in the way of legislation which tended to support what is known as the New Deal we knew would be held unconstitutional by certain members of the Court.

When the Democratic committee met to adopt the platform it had all these things in mind. The Agricultural Adjustment Act had been declared unconstitutional. The Supreme Court had said that agriculture was merely a question of local welfare. There is no one in the Senate who agrees with that construction, and there are just as good lawyers in the Senate as will be found on the Supreme Court Bench. The Supreme Court had held that certain things which might be done under the N. R. A. relating to interstate commerce were not constitutional. Some thought they were constitutional and some thought they were not.

Then there were other important decisions relating to the Railroad Retirement Act and other acts, not necessary to name, which had been declared unconstitutional.

Then, when the Democratic convention met, knowing all of these things, and knowing that it was necessary to carry out the program of the President, we said, "We shall carry out the program within the Constitution if it can be done. If no legal way can be found to carry out these things within the Constitution, then we will submit a constitutional amendment."

Then the lawyers—and there are a good many lawyers in the Senate—began to go back into history to find out what could be done, and we found this provision in the Constitution, which we had always known was there.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Does the Senator concede that there might be an act of Congress which would be within the letter of the Constitution but not within the spirit of the Constitution?

Mr. LOGAN. I will say to the Senator that there is no such thing. There can be no distinction between the letter of the Constitution and the spirit of the Constitution, as the spirit of the Constitution is that body of principles that may be drawn from within the Constitution itself. The implied powers that are not found in the Constitution might be called the spirit of the Constitution, but there can be no separation between the spirit and the substance of the Constitution. I am glad to answer the question.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question on the same point?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. If the two things mean one and the same, why, then, did those who met at Philadelphia and drew this plank to be inserted in the Democratic platform say that the things that this Congress would do, if the Democrats were returned to power, would be within the letter of the Constitution and within the spirit of the Constitution?

Mr. LOGAN. Lawyers have a habit of using lots of words to express very simple things. [Laughter.] We all know that to be true. There was no reason in the world to make such a statement. I do not know who wrote it; perhaps it was the Senator from Alabama, but I do know that if a thing is within the Constitution it is within the substance and within the spirit of the Constitution.

Mr. BURKE. Will the Senator yield to one further question?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. The Senator, of course, is familiar with the writings of Woodrow Wilson. I call his attention, as preliminary to the question I am about to ask, to a statement made by Woodrow Wilson before he became President of the United States, that the failure of the Constitution to specify the number of Justices who should constitute the Supreme Court left a loophole that might be taken advantage of to overwhelm the Court by adding members to secure a different decision; that such action, in his judgment, would be within the letter of the Constitution, but, to use his own language, would clearly violate the spirit of the Constitution and would be a plain offense against morality. Was Woodrow Wilson just using language when he drew that distinction between the letter and spirit of the Constitution?

Mr. LOGAN. I regard former President Wilson as perhaps the most learned and one of the greatest men that America has ever produced. Many will disagree with that statement, but that is my estimate of him. However, he overspoke himself quite frequently, and he overwrote himself occasionally. That statement coming from that distinguished citizen of the United States, whom I admire so much, shows how great men can nod; even Homer nodded at times, so we were told. Now let us get down to facts so that I may discuss the matter connectedly.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I ask the Senator whether or not he believes that either the writers of the Constitution or former President Woodrow Wilson believed that there was anything contemplated in either the letter or the spirit of the Constitution that would permit a situation to exist in our Supreme Court whereby four members of that Court would so firmly make up their minds to declare unconstitutional any legislation presented by this administration as to make it necessary every time the administration attempted to secure approval of legislation before the Supreme Court to get the unanimous vote of all five of the open-mind judges? Is that within the spirit or the letter of the Constitution?

Mr. LOGAN. It is not, and, of course, President Wilson had no such situation in view at the time. There was always the danger that Congress could absolutely destroy the Supreme Court by its failure to make appropriations to support it; and the same statement applies to the executive branch.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Now, Mr. President, may I ask a question at that point?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Did I understand the Senator correctly when I thought I heard him say that any act of Congress which would be within the letter of the Constitution would be within its spirit?

Mr. LOGAN. I said it, because I said there was no difference between the letter and the spirit of the Constitution.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then, if the Congress should refuse to appropriate for the Supreme Court, would that be within the spirit of the Constitution?

Mr. LOGAN. It would be within the letter and the spirit of the Constitution, plainly expressed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. And if the Congress should refuse to appropriate for the executive arm of the Government would that be within the spirit of the Constitution?

Mr. LOGAN. Absolutely within both the letter and spirit of the Constitution.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then, is it the opinion of the able Senator from Kentucky that the Congress of the United States, by withholding appropriations from the judicial arm and from the executive arm of the Government, would be within the spirit of the Constitution by striking down the other two coordinate branches?

Mr. LOGAN. That which is specifically allowed by the Constitution itself the Congress may do, and it is within the spirit of the Constitution. No one can dispute that. But now let me get on just a little further. Here is the question of what could we do about the situation which had developed.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LOGAN. I will.

Mr. BAILEY. How can the Senator reconcile his views that the letter and the spirit are the same, in view of the teaching of a very great teacher concerning the ancient law, "The letter killeth, but the spirit maketh alive"? I know that the Senator from Kentucky is a great Bible scholar, and I should like him to make the reconciliation.

Mr. LOGAN. I am very familiar with St. Paul, and some of these days, if the Senator will come out to my Sunday-school class, I will try to instruct him about that, but he ought not to talk about those things in the Senate of the United States. [Laughter.]

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator feel, if the Congress of the United States should fail to pass an appropriation providing for the salaries of Members of the Congress of the United States, that that would be within the spirit and the letter of the Constitution?

Mr. LOGAN. Absolutely, I do.

Now, what can be done with the Supreme Court when it sets itself up as an autocracy, a body with absolute power, without any check upon it, without anyone to say, if it says black is white or white is black, that that is incorrect, and the American people must live under its decisions?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an answer to his question?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield for a question only.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then, Mr. President, if that be so, submit a constitutional amendment and you will get your answer.

Mr. ROBINSON. I make the point of order that the Senator from Wyoming is not in order.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will hold that the Senator from Wyoming is out of order. He knows the rules of this body. He knows that he has no right to interrupt a Senator without addressing the Chair; he knows that the Senator refused to be interrupted, except for a question, and he continued to make a statement.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator from Kentucky did not refuse to be interrupted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky refused to let the Senator answer the question, and the Senator continued to violate the rules of the Senate. He knows the rules.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, may I, rising to a question of personal privilege and to draw the attention of the Chair——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will hold that the Senator has no right to rise to a question of personal privilege without the consent of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky be good enough to permit me to rise to a question of personal privilege?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I was sure the Senator would do that. I am addressing myself now to the remarks of the Presiding Officer of this body. The Presiding Officer of the body said that the Senator from Kentucky refused to permit me to answer. The fact of the matter is, as the RECORD will show, it was not the Senator who has the floor but the Democratic leader here who was the first person to raise the question of the propriety of my interruption.

Mr. ROBINSON. I rise to a point of order. The Senator from Wyoming is again not stating a question of personal privilege.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order and holds that the Senator from Wyoming is violating the rules.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Now may I ask a parliamentary question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I desire to be informed to what extent a question of personal privilege goes. If the Presiding Officer of this body imputes to a Senator improper motives, is the Senator not permitted to reply to the Chair?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas made a point of order that the Senator from Wyoming was out of order, and the Chair ruled that the Senator was out of order. The Senator should know he was violating the rules which the Chair read a while ago.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Chair is now accurate, but what the Chair ruled was that the Senator who had the floor had refused to permit me to answer when that Senator had granted me permission to answer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood that the Senator from Kentucky yielded for a question only.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I will submit the matter to the Senator from Kentucky.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has ruled the Senator from Arkansas made the point of order; the point of order was well taken and the Chair sustained the point of order.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHEELER. I want to know how far a Member of the Senate is going to have to be lectured here——

Mr. ROBINSON. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. WHEELER. I am asking a parliamentary question.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator is not stating a parliamentary question.

Mr. WHEELER. I am making a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHEELER. I want to know whether or not, during this debate, those who are opposed to this bill are going to be lectured by the Chair or are going to be lectured by the Democratic leader and not be permitted to answer?

Mr. ROBINSON. Now, I make the point of order that that is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WHEELER. Let the Chair answer the inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will attempt to rule on all points of order, and the decisions of the Chair, of course, are subject to appeal. The Chair hopes that the language of his rulings will not be offensive to any Senator, for such is not his intention. If it should be so considered, the Chair would be very sorry for it.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, until I have completed the statement of what I have in mind I will decline to be interrupted. After I shall have finished, I shall not object to interruptions; I never object to interruptions; but I find that if I am to make any kind of connected statement it is necessary for me to decline to yield for the present.

I referred to the fact yesterday that the makers of the Constitution never had in mind any idea that it would set up autocratic powers, absolute powers, in either branch of the Government. That was furthest from the thought of the delegates to the Constitutional Convention. That is what they were against. There was never any thought that the Supreme Court should have absolute power to determine all questions that might come before it without any check or without any regulation at all. So, after the convention had proposed regulations as to the executive branch, and as to the legislative branch, it proceeded to leave entirely open the question of the number of members of the Supreme Court.

I proclaim now that the determination of the number of members of the Supreme Court has always been a congressional matter. There has never been a time in the history of the Government when it was not within the will of Congress to determine how many members there should be on the Supreme Court.

In 1789, when Congress passed the first bill referring to the Court, which was a congressional triumph, the number of members of the Court was fixed. In 1801 and at various other times it has been Congress that has had the exclusive and absolute power to determine the number of members that shall constitute the Supreme Court. Does anyone dispute that? Then, if the power has been vested in the Congress, and exclusively so, does it lie in the mouth of any man to say it is against the spirit of the Constitution or against the letter of the Constitution for the Congress to do that which the Constitution specifically allows it to do, and which power and right it has exercised for more than 150 years?

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. STEIWER. Do I correctly understand the Senator to say that the power of fixing the number of members of the Supreme Court is one which the Constitution specifically conferred on the Congress?

Mr. LOGAN. I certainly state that. The Senator may have a different idea of what "specifically" means. The Constitution simply provides that there shall be one Supreme Court. There was no place from which a Supreme Court could come or from which the membership could come except through the legislation of the Congress. Therefore it was specifically provided that the number of Justices was within the discretion of the Congress of the United States.

A lawyer may be an old field lawyer or an ordinary cornfield lawyer; he may never have had a case in court, but any lawyer who can even claim to be a lawyer knows that the number of Justices on the Supreme Court depends absolutely upon the will of the Congress, and it has always depended upon the will of the Congress. When some distinguished Senator says it is against the spirit of the Constitution for the Congress to do that thing which the Constitution says it should do, I should like to have him answer me.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to enable me to answer his question?

Mr. LOGAN. I cannot yield for an answer. The Chair has ruled that I can only yield for a question.

Mr. BURKE. I thought the Senator asked for an answer.

Mr. LOGAN. I am glad to yield, but the rule of the Senate forbids me yielding except for a question.

Mr. BURKE. I thought the Senator stated he would like to have the question answered.

Mr. LOGAN. I said that; but under the rule of the Senate whoever answers will have to answer in his own time. That seems to be the rule.

Mr. BURKE. Very well.

Mr. LOGAN. Let us pursue the matter a little further. Why was it the number of the Supreme Court Justices was left to the Congress to determine? Some say the country was growing and the members of the Convention did not know how many might be needed in the future. That is true as to Members of Congress also. The members of the Convention did not know how many Members might be needed in Congress, and yet the Constitution prescribes a rule by which the number of the Members of Congress shall be determined. Could not the Convention have done the same thing with reference to the members of the Supreme Court? If that was the only reason, it left the question open. Certainly, then, there must have been another reason.

There was another reason, and it ought to be made to ring down the corridors of time so that every American citizen may know what the Constitution meant in setting up the Supreme Court. It meant there should be no such thing as arbitrary power anywhere. It is well known that if there should be placed upon the Constitution the construction which is contended for by many Senators, the Supreme Court would have more power than any absolute monarch in all the world. Upon its whims, if such a thing should happen, would depend the rights, the liberties, and the happiness of the people of the United States. I do not say such a time would ever come, but the men who wrote the Constitution were afraid of things like that. Thomas Jefferson himself wrote in one of his letters that the danger was in the Supreme Court.

No check was there, but they left a check, and what was it? They left it open for the Congress to determine the number of Justices of the Supreme Court, so that if a condition should ever arise, such as we have prevailing today, where the Court should stand as a bulwark against the rights and liberties of the people, then the Congress, the representatives of the people, could bring relief.

There is no other way except to provide as is provided in the pending substitute. When the Court becomes atrophied, when the minds of the members, either because of age or for any other reason, become hardened, when no new ideas can find lodgment in their brains, there is only one way to provide a remedy for a situation of that kind.

Senators talk about the proponents of the bill not being sincere; they talk about them not being in good faith. It is stated that we are simply planning an attack on the Court. I say away with such argument, because it is not true. Such statements come from the imagination of those whose imagination is distorted or else they are a little careless in what they say. I am supporting this measure because the liberties of the people, the life of the Nation, the very existence and continuance of the happiness of our citizens depends upon our acting as intelligent statesmen rather than cavilling children.

"Dragging a red herring across the trail." It is said that the bill is being pressed in order to change the opinions of the Court. I deny the statement. I deny that the Attorney General of the United States ever made such a statement any place. When he was asked the direct question if he had any assurance that the opinions of the Court would be changed, he said:

> Let me say that my position is that you are not packing the Court. It could not be packed. You cannot get men on the Court if it should be known how they would vote upon particular questions.

It is folly to talk about such a thing. I had hoped to get men on the Supreme Court Bench who had political and economic views in accord with the needs of the times, and who at least might have an opportunity to consider the great questions so vital to the life of the Nation. I had hoped that different opinions on certain questions would come from them. That is all. It is the same as I said a while ago about trying a case before a jury.

Suppose a lawyer is trying a case before a jury. Here is the court. If the court for good cause shown may allow an increase in the number of jurors, what would a good lawyer do? In this case we are the court. If a Senator as a lawyer should go into that court, he would be familiar with the law and the practice and know he could get additional jurors if he wanted them. The lawyer would see before him on the jury five or six men who he knew would be against his client because of their local prejudices or because of their predilections or other views on economic matters. If the lawyer knew they were apt to be against his client, what would he do as a good lawyer? Would he not say, "Here are the jury. I cannot get rid of them. My challenges have been exhausted." A good lawyer would ask the court to allow additional jurors. Why? So the lawyer might pack the jury? Away with such folly! A good lawyer would ask for additional jurors because he would want men who were unbiased and unprejudiced and who would try to deal justly between the two sides.

Having that view of it, I have very little patience with those who take the low ground of those who love darkness better than light. I should like to see these discussions placed on a high plane. I should like to know why it was that when Congress first established the Supreme Court it did not set up just one judge. Why was it we did not have a court of one judge? It was because Congress was afraid of the absolute power vested in the Court. It has been recognized, and is recognized today, that men of varying political views should be members of the Court; and because of that fact I believe the time has come when, in a perfectly legal, perfectly legitimate way, such a change should be made, though not for the immediate present. Nobody would want to pack the Court and get different decisions from those which have been handed down in the past few months; but for the future, for the life and liberty of the American people, we must build up protection against the absolute power of one branch of this Government which, if the construction is accepted which the opponents of this measure place upon it, has control over the other two branches of the Government, and over all the people of America.

When I was elected to the Senate I took an oath of office. That oath was that I would defend and protect the Constitution of the United States. I am standing on that oath, and I could not vote against this bill without believing that I was violating that oath. Why do I say that? Because not only did I take an oath that I would oppose acts which were unconstitutional on the part of Members of this body—that was one thing—but my oath meant that I would oppose unconstitutional action of the President of the United States, of the Congress, of the different departments; and it meant more than that—that I would oppose the unconstitutional acts of the Supreme Court itself, if it should act in an unconstitutional way. So if the Supreme Court has done as some of the witnesses appearing before us say that it has done, and if its acts have been unconstitutional, what other remedy have we?

Some persons say, "Submit a constitutional amendment." Nobody believes that. That is just talk. A constitutional amendment cannot be submitted. If that were done, the Court might change its opinion tomorrow or next day, and then it would be necessary to submit another constitutional amendment. In other words, if the Court misconstrues the Constitution, an amendment must be submitted to correct the error of the Court in the first place; and so it will be like following a cow wandering around through the forest, just wandering in and out. All of us know that there is no way to reach this question by a constitutional amendment, and it is not necessary.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. Does not the Senator recall that in the last campaign we had just the situation to which the Senator has alluded? The Republican platform referred to an amendment to the Constitution.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I understood that the Senator from Kentucky had declined to yield. When I asked a question a moment ago, he said he did not care to yield any further until he concluded his remarks. I am wondering if that is to be applied only to certain Senators.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I think I am entitled to answer that inquiry. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that that was not the situation. I asked a question. The Senator from Nebraska wanted to answer the question. That, I said, could not be done under the rules of the Senate, but I said that the Senator could ask a question.

Mr. BURKE. The Senator from Kentucky is perfectly willing to submit to further questions from Senators?

Mr. LOGAN. Oh, yes!

Mr. BURKE. I thought the Senator declined to yield.

Mr. LOGAN. Oh, no. I am willing to yield for questions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. As I was saying before I was interrupted, the Senator recalls, does he not, that in the last campaign the Republican Party, I believe in its platform—at least as amended by its candidate, Mr. Landon—came out for an amendment to the Constitution in order that we might have minimum-wage legislation?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes.

Mr. MINTON. Then, shortly after the election, a few months thereafter, the Supreme Court changed its mind, and, without any amendment to the Constitution, we found that we could have minimum-wage legislation. So we might have been in the ridiculous situation, might we not, of proposing an amendment to the Constitution which was not necessary?

Mr. LOGAN. That is very true. I have always thought that if we could get Members of the Congress to go into this question earnestly and sincerely, with the consequences of any determination thoroughly considered, there could be no opposition to this proposal. I myself have no interest in the matter one way or the other. I do think, however, that something must be done.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. OVERTON. Does this measure proceed upon the theory that judges who have attained certain ages are incapacitated, either in whole or in part, from properly discharging the duties of their office?

Mr. LOGAN. I should say that it does; and let me say to the Senator that it has been suggested that we should have a constitutional amendment providing for compulsory retirement at 75. That, I believe, most Senators favor.

Mr. OVERTON. That is the question I was about to ask the Senator.

Mr. LOGAN. Let me call attention, however, to the fact that the measure we are now considering is the only plan whereby the services of judges who are doing great work can be retained. I think Chief Justice Hughes is a great Judge. He has written just recently some things that will live as long as those written by Marshall. He did that in the Minnesota moratorium case. Somebody—I believe it was Mr. Justice Roberts, however—did the same thing in the Nebbia case, the New York Milk case. The Court has gone back to the principles announced by Marshall, and I think it is great. Under this measure, a member of the Court does not have to retire. He may still go on and render very valuable service; but if there is a member of the Court who has become—I cannot remember the name by which Mr. Justice McReynolds called such men—if he has reached the point where he can do nothing, this measure provides for the appointment of a live, young, vigorous judge, or at least he may not be so young but one who can carry his part of the load.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. As soon as I finish yielding to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. WHEELER. Pardon me.

Mr. OVERTON. What the Senator says is very true; but may I ask one or two more questions? I am asking for information.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes.

Mr. OVERTON. I know the Senator has given a great deal of thought to this measure, and has taken part in its preparation. If, however, a judge who attains a certain age is incapacitated on account of his age from thinking clearly and deciding wisely, and that judge remains upon the bench, and an additional judge is appointed in his place, the incapacitated judge has just as much of a vote on a decision as has the younger and the more vigorous and the more capable and more clear-thinking judge. Is not that true?

Mr. LOGAN. That is true.

Mr. OVERTON. Therefore, as I understand, if this measure proceeds, as it does, upon the theory that when men attain certain ages they are incapacitated from properly discharging the duties of their office, either in whole or in part, the question could be submitted to the people by a constitutional amendment; could it not?

Mr. LOGAN. It could.

Mr. OVERTON. I understood the Senator, however, to say that this question could not be solved by a constitutional amendment. What I desire to know is whether or not a constitutional amendment could be submitted which would modify the existing rule in the Constitution that judges shall hold office during good behavior, and would prescribe that they shall hold office during good behavior and until they arrive at a certain age.

Mr. LOGAN. I will say to the Senator from Louisiana that I have thought a good deal about that matter. I believe legislation should be for the average and not for the exception. If we had done that—and I believe everyone will agree that some law like that would be a splendid thing—we should have lost the assistance and the help and the wisdom of some very great Judges who have sat upon the Supreme Bench.

Ordinarily, I should say that when a man reaches the age of 75 years he is incapacitated. I should say that three-fourths of them are. All of us know that that is true. If we will look around among our acquaintances and find men past 75 years of age, we shall find that that is true. A constitutional amendment to that effect, however, would get rid of some whom, perhaps, we ought not to get rid of. This plan will retain those men. We do have on the bench some men that, perhaps, we would not get rid of. The only way the Constitution has left for us to handle the matter is to neutralize the effect of their votes by putting on some men who do know "what it is all about."

Mr. OVERTON. The question I wanted to propound to the Senator was this: As I understood his statement, he thought the problem could not be solved by a constitutional amendment?

Mr. LOGAN. I was talking about a different thing.

Mr. OVERTON. I desired to get the Senator's view as to whether it could not, perhaps, be better settled by a constitutional amendment, because by amending the Constitution the people could say that a judge incapacitated on account of age should be compelled to retire from the bench; but under this measure as drawn, the incapacitated judge—assuming that he is incapacitated on account of age—remains upon the bench, and we do not get rid of him.

Mr. LOGAN. I see what the Senator is driving at. When I was referring to our inability to reach this question by a constitutional amendment, I was referring to the broader aspect of the matter—that we could not adopt constitutional amendments to meet the peculiar decisions of the Supreme Court every time it changed its mind. I agree very readily with the Senator's statement; and we can see into what narrow compass this measure is compressed, and how moderate this whole thing is, if we consider that suggestion for just a moment.

Suppose we pass this bill. I have heard it stated by distinguished Senators that a proposal by constitutional amendment to bring about compulsory retirement at 75 would be promptly ratified by State legislatures or by conventions if it should be submitted. Suppose we pass this bill and submit a constitutional amendment to that effect. Suppose that should be done, and the constitutional amendment should be ratified next year. Then we should have this bill in operation for only 1 year. If, however, the constitutional amendment were not ratified, then we should have something permanent in the way of relief to the Court.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to say to the Senator that no question I have asked of him thus far has been for the purpose of filibustering, or anything of that kind.

Mr. LOGAN. I think that is true.

Mr. WHEELER. If I may be permitted to make the statement, I have felt in the discussion with the Senator that a great many of these questions could be worked out on the floor of the Senate, and I thought it would be beneficial to both sides if it could be done without trying to take advantage of anyone. But I desire to ask the Senator if he agrees with me that we could submit a constitutional amendment, and that we could not only have it ratified by conventions, but that under the Constitution we could specify the time within which ratification should be made?

Mr. LOGAN. My opinion is that we could. Many able lawyers disagree as to that; but my opinion is that the Congress of the United States could determine the time limit within which the conventions should meet.

Mr. WHEELER. Is the Senator familiar with the language that was used—I have forgotten the case now—by Mr. Justice Van Devanter, in which he held, as I recall, not only that Congress could specify that ratification should be made by conventions, but that Congress could specify the time within which ratification should occur, and that Congress could, as a matter of fact, set up the electoral machinery?

Mr. LOGAN. I am not familiar with that.

Mr. WHEELER. Is the Senator familiar with the opinion of Attorney General Palmer, a Democratic Attorney General, who laid down that very doctrine?

Mr. LOGAN. I am familiar with that.

Mr. WHEELER. So, as a matter of fact, we could specify in the constitutional amendment that it should be ratified by conventions, and we could specify that such conventions would have to be held within 6 months or 1 year, if we desired to do that?

Mr. LOGAN. I think that is true.

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to ask one more question while I am on my feet. As I understood the Senator, he stated the purpose was to put men on the bench to take the places of those over 75 because he felt that 75 percent of the men over 75 years of age were incapacitated.

Mr. LOGAN. To a certain extent.

Mr. WHEELER. If this should be done as to members on the bench of the Supreme Court, why should we not provide by law or have a constitutional amendment providing that the same rule should apply to Members of the Senate or to Members of the House of Representatives?

Mr. LOGAN. The difference is that the members of the Supreme Court are appointed for life while the Members of Congress are elected by the people, and when the people desire to retire a Member of Congress, as they often do—and there are very few here after they are 75 years of age—the people can retire them whenever they so desire. They cannot do that with the Supreme Court. That is the difference.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the Senator permit me to ask another question?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. If the Senator thinks that 75 is the proper age, why does he draw the line at 75? Why not draw it at 65?

Mr. LOGAN. Because my observation and what little knowledge I have on this subject indicate that men rarely begin to fail, or not many of them, at least, before they are 70. After they are 70 they begin to fail very rapidly both physically and mentally. There are many outstanding exceptions; but there are very few Gladstones; there are very few men who have been active and virile after reaching 80 years of age. There are few like Justice Holmes; but there are some. Throughout the world, I believe, in business, and in government where government is administered by the merit system, it is recognized everywhere that there should be an age limit. As to whether it should be 75, or 70, or 80, I do not know, but my deliberate judgment is that 70 is the best time.

Mr. WHEELER. If 70 is the best time, and men deteriorate after they are 70, would the Senator feel that a man should be appointed to the Supreme Bench when he is 74, as the President could appoint one when he was 74 under the bill? He has appointed a man who is 69 years of age to the circuit court of appeals, I understand.

Mr. LOGAN. I can answer that. There are cases where there are men of outstanding ability, although old, who have already stood the test. When a young man is appointed we take a chance on what he is going to be when he is 75, but when a man has already reached the age of 70 and is going well—when, like Moses, his eyesight is not impaired, and stands up straight, and could go on a long time by reason of great ability—the President might be justified in appointing such a man, even if he were 75 or 80 years of age.

Mr. WHEELER. He might be justified in appointing a man 74 years of age notwithstanding the fact that he would have to retire, under the Senator's bill, when he was 75, and he could get full pay afterward?

Mr. LOGAN. May I ask the Senator why he says he would have to retire under my bill at 75?

Mr. WHEELER. I stand corrected on that; he would not have to retire; but I am presuming that if someone were appointed when a sitting judge was 75, the sitting judge would retire. I would think that would be the natural course of events. The Senator disagrees with me with reference to the purposes of the bill. I want to say to the Senator in all sincerity that I am not seeing bogey men when I say that the purpose is to force men off the bench; I am simply giving the Senator the opinions of people close to the administration who have talked with me and who have stated such to be the case.

Mr. LOGAN. I did not know about that. But let me answer just briefly; then I want to discuss the report which was submitted by the committee; I have some remarks to make about that. When the bill was sent to the Congress by the President, I had never heard of it; I did not know that any such thing was in contemplation. Immediately thereafter, and before there was any discussion about it, I dictated the draft of a substitute, to see if I could do better than the original bill, because I did not like the original bill, which did not reach the point I thought should be reached.

Through the long discussion I found opinions of a number of men who had been giving much thought to the question. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] had done much work on it, and his idea was to appoint additional judges gradually, after the incumbents reached the age of 70. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. MCGILL] thought the age ought to be 75, and that the Court should go back to nine in number upon the happening of certain events. Then the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] had a flat proposal at first to fix the number of members of the Court at 11 and to throw everything else overboard. I rather favored that. I think I would like that better than the measure before us today. But from the suggestions of all these Senators we worked out the pending bill, and it is the best bill that can be worked out under all the circumstances. It certainly can do no harm to anyone. It merely maintains the integrity of the Court, as was said in the President's message, by the infusion of new blood. The old bill, the first bill, did not provide for the continuous infusion of new blood down through the ages.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. Why the distinction between the Supreme Court judges and judges of inferior courts?

Mr. LOGAN. A distinction was made upon the suggestion that the judges of the inferior courts had a heavier burden to carry, and that they grow to feel the weight of the years upon them sooner than do the Justices of the Supreme Court. I myself have no particular reason to offer why the age limit should be 70 in the one case and 75 in the other, but that was the suggestion which led to its being placed at 70 instead of 75.

Mr. OVERTON. Is it based entirely on a conception of incapacity in both cases, or has it some other purpose?

Mr. LOGAN. In the broad way I would define "incapacity", I should say that it was based in both cases on incapacity, in my judgment. I do not know what the other Senators think.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. While the law itself fixes no age limit, is it not true that for many years there has been recognized by the Department of Justice and by the President an age limit in the appointment of judges of the inferior courts which is lower, on the average, than the age limit which has applied to the Justices of the Supreme Court, and that in all likelihood the judges of the inferior courts will have served longer at the average age of 70 than the judges on the Supreme Court will have served at the average age of 75?

Mr. LOGAN. That is very true. I have been told by the Department of Justice a number of times, when I wanted someone appointed over 60 years of age, that the age limit was 60; but that has never been adhered to in the appointment of circuit judges or Justices of the Supreme Court.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Before asking the question I desire to propound, in reference to the point made by the Senator's colleague, the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] does the Senator happen to know the average age of all judicial appointments made since the 4th of March 1933, which, of course, would not include any Members of the Supreme Court, but only judges on the inferior courts?

Mr. LOGAN. I do not believe I do. I think perhaps the ages of all of them have been stated in the report made by the committee.

Mr. BURKE. Would the Senator be interested in knowing that the average age of all appointments to the inferior Federal courts since the 4th of March 1933 has been well in excess of the average age in any other like period in the history of this country, and that there was no relation to the age of 60, which was mentioned a moment ago?

Mr. LOGAN. I did not know it had no relation to the age of 60, but I can see perhaps why the age would be higher. The Democrats had been ranging around in the old fields so long that they had grown old before they had a chance to get appointments. I think that may be the reason why they were older when appointments were made than in previous periods.

Mr. BURKE. If the Senator would yield, I should like to propound the question I had in mind.

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. The Senator is going to discuss the report. There are some questions in connection with the compromise amendment, of which the Senator, I understand, is one of the chief authors, which we would like at some time to have cleared up. I am perfectly willing to have that done later. Is the Senator going to discuss some features of the measure later on?

Mr. LOGAN. I think I will do that at a later date. As I understand from the ruling of the Chair, I may make two speeches on this subject, and the one I am now delivering will be just one. I think I will make another later explaining the bill. I want to go through the report and call attention to some of the ludicrous things, some of the amusing things, and some of the tragic things to be found in it.

Mr. BURKE. If the Senator will yield, let me ask if he does not find all his time and strength today taken up in discussing the report, will he possibly still later in this speech permit the propounding of some questions with reference to details of the compromise bill?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes; I will be very glad to do so.

Mr. BURKE. Very well.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, this report made by a majority of the Judiciary Committee is, as I have said before, a strange document, indeed. The members making the report disclaim any attempt to discredit the President or his administration; and yet we have here a report made by seven Democrats and, I believe, three Republicans, who had considered a proposal made by the President of the United States himself. Instead of disagreeing with him, instead of conceding that he was honest and desired to do what was for the best interests of the country, as even Republicans are willing to concede, the writers of the report proceeded at once to say things about the President's proposal—and it was not my proposal; it was the President's proposal—which would justify impeachment if the things which were said were true. It was so violent that it was accepted by the country and seized upon by the enemies of the administration and of the President to be used as a campaign document. It was seized upon by the newspapers and magazines as showing how bad the President is; and I believe few of us have any idea how the President is hated by certain people in this country.

When the authors of the report were doing those things to their own President in a report written more bitterly than the opposite party ever wrote about any President when they were making a report, they could find no word to say in his behalf, but they could go out of their way to make a great defense of Ulysses S. Grant, who was President during the most corrupt administration that has ever been had in this great Nation of ours. They found time to charge President Roosevelt with packing the Supreme Court at a time when people were charging him with attempting to destroy liberty, religious liberty, civil liberty, to destroy the Government, to set up a dictatorship; but they defended President Grant and said, "No; he did not pack the Court." They said that he actually sent two names to the Senate for confirmation before the decision in the Legal Tender cases was handed down, one of which was rejected, and the other nominee died 4 days afterward, and that President Grant really did not make the appointments until the very day the decision was handed down.

President Grant did everything he could to get them upon the bench, but the Senate prevented it in one instance and death prevented it in the other instance. But President Grant, seeing——

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

Mr. LOGAN. Just a minute. President Grant, however, seeing that the very life of the Nation was at stake, did appoint two men to the bench who he had every reason to believe would reverse an opinion that had been rendered by the Court a short while before.

I now yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, does the Senator from Kentucky regard the Grant incident—the Legal Tender cases and the appointment of judges at that time—as a precedent for what is proposed in this bill?

Mr. LOGAN. Everything is a precedent for what is proposed in this bill which relates to fixing the number of Justices of the Supreme Court. We can go a step further. If I had the opinion of the President of the United States which some of my colleagues have—that he is urging the passage of this legislation for the purpose, and the whole purpose, of having a subservient Court which would yield to his orders and his dictates and his wishes—I should say that there never has been a precedent for it. But that is mere imagination in the minds of those who have made this issue, because there is nothing in the pending bill which would justify placing such a construction upon it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question—not a speech? I am not trying to harass him.

Mr. LOGAN. No one can harass me. I passed that stage a long time ago.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator brought up the Grant incident. What the Senator from Texas is trying to ascertain is, Does the Senator from Kentucky regard what happened with regard to Grant's appointment of those two Justices as a precedent for what is proposed in this bill?

Mr. LOGAN. I have never sought for a precedent. All I have to look for is the Constitution itself, and the method it provides for doing this very thing when it is necessary for Congress to fix the number of Justices on the Supreme Court.

Mr. CONNALLY. But the Senator, if I understood him correctly, was criticizing the majority of the Judiciary Committee for saying that the Grant episode was not a precedent. So, if it was not, what purpose has the Senator in citing it?

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator from Texas happens to be one of the members of the Judiciary Committee who signed the report. I have been hoping and believing right along that the Senator had given the report very careless consideration or casual consideration, or else he never would have signed it. I am grieved to see the name of so noble and splendid a statesman as the Senator from Texas on a paper like that. I can say the same thing about the others who signed it, though. They must have been dreaming. They must have had nightmares. There must have been something wrong with their livers, or else they never would have signed their names to such a document as that.

Mr. CONNALLY. There may have been something wrong with our livers, but there was nothing wrong with our heads.

Mr. LOGAN. There is nothing wrong now, but there was something wrong then.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. GILLETTE. I am sincerely seeking information. I listened to the Senator's speech yesterday, and to his rather critical reference to those who were opposing the President's plan. He mentioned the fact that it was the President's proposal, not that of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], or the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST]; and he further used this language:

> If something must be done about the Supreme Court, what plan do we prefer to follow, that of the President or some other and different plan?

Does the Senator still adhere to that statement today?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes; in a measure. I adhere to that statement—that I would prefer to accept the judgment of Franklin D. Roosevelt, the friend of the people, rather than the judgment of more distinguished lawyers, perhaps, who are not the friends of the people.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further for a question?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. GILLETTE. Is not the Senator now speaking, and did he not speak yesterday, very cogently and powerfully to a substitute, of which he is a coauthor, for the original proposal?

Mr. LOGAN. That is true.

Mr. GILLETTE. Then it is not the President's plan for which the Senator stands, but a substitute of which he is coauthor.

Mr. LOGAN. Let me make myself clear. I am not for the President's plan. I am standing for the proposed substitute which I introduced, after it had been prepared by some other Senators and myself; but the report which I am going to discuss is on the original bill. It is not on the substitute at all.

Let me say that I believe the opponents of the original bill everywhere said that its purpose was to pack the Court so that the administration could get decisions in conformity with the President's policies. I know I have heard the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], and perhaps the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], and some other Senators, make that statement. That is their conception of the purposes of the bill. What do they say in the report? They enumerate their points:

> I. The bill does not accomplish any one of the objectives for which it was originally offered.

So they say that it does not do what they thought it was going to do; that it will not pack the Court; that it will not achieve the objectives which had been expressed as its purposes.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Of course, the Senator must realize that when the report states that the bill would not accomplish any of its objectives the report is referring to the objectives put forward by the proponents of the bill; and packing the Court was not mentioned by the proponents as one of the objectives toward which they were driving.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator ought not to place himself in a position where he has to make an explanation. What is written is written.

> The moving finger writes; and having writ,
> Moves on; nor all your piety nor wit
> Shall lure it back to cancel half a line.

So the report is written, and it is here. I am going to call attention to some of the things that are in it. I am now just mentioning the main points:

> II. It applies force to the judiciary, and in its initial and ultimate effect would undermine the independence of the courts.

I say that when the authors of the report made the charge against the President of the United States that he sought to apply force to the judiciary, they made it without its being based on any statements by the President or anyone else. It simply was grabbed out of the thin air that an effort was being made to make the Court subservient; that an effort was being made to disturb the independence of the Court. I cannot conceive that anyone believes anything like that.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Does not the Senator think he is putting a forced construction upon the statement in the report when he says it means that the President of the United States wanted to use force, or that he wanted to do the things the Senator mentioned? Does he not think that paragraph is a discussion of the bill and not of the President of the United States?

Mr. LOGAN. I might have thought so had it not been that it was the President's bill and the President's suggestion. The majority of the committee made derogatory references to the President, but never gave a single expression that they believed in his integrity or in his honesty; never an expression that they had any faith or confidence in him. They started out with an attack on him, and that attack was maintained until the last line of the report had been written; and the statements in the report are charges, not against the measure, but against the President of the United States. If they are not charges against the President, the members of the committee should have said so.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. When the public utilities bill was before the Senate for consideration, it was a bill which was drafted by the administration. That was the President's bill, was it not?

Mr. LOGAN. I think so.

Mr. WHEELER. Some Senators who are supporting the present Court measure made statements in discussing that bill on the floor. They denounced the utilities bill in language which certainly they would not have used against the President of the United States. I did not think their denunciation was a reflection upon the President. Did the Senator from Kentucky think it was?

Mr. LOGAN. I do not think any parallel is to be found between the two cases. That was not a case where the President had control of the operation under the act, nor did it involve the President, except in the matter of the appointment of a board.

I make the statement now, so that we all may have it clearly before us, that the whole issue that is brought forward revolves around the integrity of the President of the United States. There can be no one who can oppose the suggestion on any other ground because there can be no packing of the Court, there can be no subservience of the Court, there can be no control of the Court by force or otherwise, unless it be applied by the President of the United States, and those who take the position expressed in the report say that the President of the United States will do those things; that he has asked for the power, and he wants to do them. I cannot read anything else into it.

Mr. WHEELER and Mr. O'MAHONEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield first to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. Does not the Senator know that pieces of legislation of this kind are drafted by some department of the Government, that the President of the United States cannot possibly know all of the things contained in them, and that he cannot possibly be responsible for all the things in the proposed legislation?

Mr. LOGAN. I think that may be true; I do not know it to be so; but I believe in a matter so important as this, which has been denominated as being more important than anything that has happened in many years—for myself I regard it now as of no great consequence—that no department or anyone else would write a bill proposing an increase of the Supreme Court from 9 members to 15, if it were at the suggestion of the President, without knowing what the President wanted him to do.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator spoke yesterday about Members who were opposed to the bill as seeking to destroy the President, and how this bill was being used by his opponents throughout the country. By standing here on the floor of the Senate and saying that men such as the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] and men of that type subscribe to the report for the purpose of injuring the President, does he not think that he himself is putting words into the mouths of these Senators that they did not intend to use, but which the opponents of the President will use in the campaign and say, "This is what the Senator from Kentucky said that these men meant?"

Mr. LOGAN. Oh, no; it will not get to that point. Here is a report they wrote and signed, and I am only trying to quote from that report itself. I am putting no words in the mouth of anyone. I am perfectly willing when they say it was not their purpose to assail the President or the administration to accept their word for it, but sometimes men do things without fully understanding the consequences. That may be happening in this instance.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then, may I ask the Senator from Kentucky if there was any limitation in the bill, which has now been abandoned by the Senator from Kentucky and his associates, which would have confined its operation to the administration of the present President of the United States?

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator refers to the original bill?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I refer to the original bill, the abandoned bill.

Mr. LOGAN. As I recall, it proposed an increase to 15 members at that time, and the fact was developed at that time that the Court should be permanent.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. But the bill, if enacted, was to be operative throughout all time until repealed, so long as the condition named in the bill remained in existence?

Mr. LOGAN. I think so.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator was one of the sponsors of the bill. Does he not know so?

Mr. LOGAN. Do not accuse me of anything you cannot back up. I was not one of the sponsors of the bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Well, does the Senator agree, then, that it was not limited to the present administration?

Mr. LOGAN. I do not know without reading it again. I have been working on another bill, and I have not tried to keep up with the other one. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then, Mr. President, will the Senator be good enough to explain the second bill to the Senate?

Mr. LOGAN. I may at some time, but I believe the Senator can read, at least, fairly well. The bill has been printed; it has been placed on the desk of every Senator. As I had a good part in preparing the language, perhaps more of the language is mine than any of the thought. I believe it is in simple language. I do not have any desire to start a school of instruction, but if any Senator thinks he does not understand it, while I will not take the time to explain it to the whole Senate, if he will come to my office, or I will go down to his, I will go over it with him and tell him exactly what it means.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Would the Senator be good enough to explain it to the country? Senators may understand it, but perhaps the country does not. The country does not have an opportunity, as we have, to read the bill or to listen to the Senator.

Mr. LOGAN. In answer to the Senator from Wyoming, let me say that I would not want to undertake that task, and I will tell the Senate why: In attempting to explain the measure to the country you go up against something that is insurmountable. If you listen to the wails of ignorance, of malice, and of hate that come to your office daily by reason of misinformation that has been sent out about this bill, and will be sent out about the substitute, you know how impossible it is to reach the people. You cannot see them all; you cannot talk to them all; every single vehicle that carries news to the public is poisoned against this bill, and the effort is made to poison the mind of the public against every man who sponsors it. It is an effort to control the Congress of the United States by fear. It is an effort on the part of those who have done as they pleased with the Government for many, many years to poison the minds of the people. So when you send it out it will never get to the people. You can explain it, but the explanation will never get to the people.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. May I direct the attention of the Senator to line 8, on page 1, of the substitute which he presented to the Senate for the abandoned bill, and ask him whether or not he is willing, as the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] is willing, to substitute the word "shall" for the word "may"?

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I shall not yield for that purpose. For 2 days I have been trying to read some extracts from the report submitted to the Senate, and every time I get hold of that report and look at it some member of the committee who participated in the report wants me to talk about something else. I do not blame him. [Laughter.] I am now going to try——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield for a question.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I ask the Senator if he will join with me now in asking unanimous consent that the report which he is attacking may be printed at large in the RECORD, so that the country may have the report along with his speech?

Mr. LOGAN. No; I am not agreeing at this time to put anything in the RECORD. The Senator can do that any time he wants to. There is not much occasion for one to lose his head about things. I imagine it has already been placed in the RECORD. If not, if you will go—if you can find him now; he is in retirement—to the secretary or the president—I do not know which—of the Liberty League, you can send out a million copies of it to the public and you can get them there, because your report is very popular in some sections of the country.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator made a statement a moment ago to the effect that all sources of information to the public were poisoned against this bill.

Mr. LOGAN. I think that is true.

Mr. WHEELER. Does the Senator think that the boys in the press gallery are all poisoned against this bill?

Mr. LOGAN. Oh, no; I do not think that at all.

Mr. WHEELER. Or are sending out "hate" stories with reference to it?

Mr. LOGAN. I do not say that. I think most of them are for it, but they do not own the newspapers; they are working for them.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to a question in reference to the report?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. I sympathize with the Senator's desire to proceed to the consideration of the report; and, as I understand, the first criticism upon which the Senator elaborated was that the report contains a defense of President Ulysses S. Grant, while he finds in it no defense of the present occupant of the White House. My question is, If the members of the committee who signed the report felt that the charge of adding two members to the Supreme Court in Grant's time for the alleged purpose of influencing decisions of the Court would constitute so serious a blot upon the record of that President that we ought to go to the full extent we could to defend him from that charge, is not the Senator willing to give to the members who signed the report credit, rather than blame, for trying to point out the hideousness of the present bill, so that it may never be enacted into law, and so that no future committee of Congress may ever be called upon to make the defense which committee make of President Grant?

Mr. LOGAN. That is rather a long question, Mr. President, but I am going to answer it. The committee has attempted to take from President Grant about the only thing he ever did that was of real service to the country. He did pack the Supreme Court, and he got a good decision by reason of packing it. I think perhaps he saved the Nation. Now they are trying to deny that he did that.

The next point I would call attention to—and these are the reasons why the committee think the bill ought to be reported adversely—is:

III. It violates all precedents in the history of our Government and would in itself be a dangerous precedent for the future.

Is not that fine? Here is something authorized by the Constitution itself, which at the very beginning of our Government was pointed out by the makers of the Constitution, conferring upon Congress the power always to determine the number of Justices who should constitute the Supreme Court. That comes from the Constitution and has been exercised since the first bill in which the Court was referred to in 1789. Such power has always belonged to Congress. Yet now it is said that this would be a precedent and a dangerous precedent. In other words, Senators, the committee says it is a dangerous thing to trust the Congress with the power clearly vested in it by the Constitution itself, and if it exercises any such power it would be a dangerous precedent for the future. In the report that is one of the reasons given in opposition to the bill.

The next one is—

IV. The theory of the bill—

Why talk about the theory of the bill? It is the bill we are considering. It is not a theory. It is an actuality.

The theory of the bill is in direct violation of the spirit of the American Constitution.

I said yesterday there are spooks all around those Senators who object to the bill. It is not the actuality of the Constitution, but it is the ghost of the Constitution they are talking about. There is no such thing as the spirit of the Constitution except it impliedly comes from the written words of the Constitution. That is what might be denominated by those not members of the Senate as "pure flapdoodle."

The fourth reason continues:

Its employment would permit alteration of the Constitution without the people's consent or approval.

Why should anyone make a statement like that? Why should anyone say to the American people that the enactment of the bill into law would bring about an alteration of the Constitution, when those who can read and who are willing to read will find that the power to fix the number of Justices of the Supreme Court has always resided in the Congress? It has never been anywhere else, and I hope it never may be anywhere else.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield for a question.

Mr. BURKE. Of course, the Senator must understand that in making that statement it has no reference to amending the Constitution.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the Senator from Nebraska is not asking a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky may yield only for a question.

Mr. BURKE. I am attempting to propound a question in my own way.

Mr. MINTON. It is a devious way.

Mr. LOGAN. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKE. Does not the Senator realize that what those who drafted the report had in mind in the statement made was that it is a method adopted of giving a different construction to the provisions of the Constitution by adding members to the Supreme Court, and not that in that paragraph those who drafted the report were saying it is necessary to amend the Constitution in order to increase the size of the Court if more members are needed to do the work of the Court?

Mr. LOGAN. Perhaps that is what the committee had in mind. I cannot follow the minds of the committee, but I do know the bill provided only one thing, and the thing it provides is authorized in the Constitution. The committee says it would be amending the Constitution without submitting the question to the people if the bill should be enacted into law. I do not know that the committee had in mind that the Court some time in the future might change its ruling on some constitutional question and thereby, as they apparently believe the Constitution is what the Court says it is, the Constitution would be changed.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Is not that what the Senator has contended was the purpose of increasing the Supreme Court—to get a change of opinion?

Mr. LOGAN. Oh, no. I say that the hope is there.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, the hope?

Mr. LOGAN. The hope only, because no one can know what a man will do when appointed a Justice of the Supreme Court. No one has ever been able to foretell what would happen. I hope, and I am expressing only my personal opinion, that if men are appointed with a broad understanding of the questions confronting the country today, with a broad understanding of the needs of the country, we will get—well, opinions different from some we have had. There is an interim of a few months when I do not believe anybody would like to change those opinions. The Court itself changed them.

Mr. WHEELER. It changed one of them.

Mr. LOGAN. It changed the Constitution.

Mr. WHEELER. It changed its ruling in one case.

Mr. LOGAN. I thought it changed its rulings in several cases. It just changed the Constitution.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not agree with the Senator that it changed the Constitution. It did reverse itself in one case. The Senator will admit and agree with me, will he not, that the purpose of putting additional men on the Supreme Court is to have decisions rendered which he thinks will meet the needs of the time?

Mr. LOGAN. No. The purpose is to get a court that will give prior consideration to the questions confronting the country as they relate to the Constitution, because I do not believe they can have a prior consideration before the Court as it has heretofore been constituted.

Mr. WHEELER. Does not the Senator think the Supreme Court gave fair consideration to the question of the N. R. A., and to that case, and that they properly held in the Schechter case that the act was unconstitutional?

Mr. LOGAN. So far as it held it was an improper delegation of authority, I think so.

Mr. WHEELER. Does the Senator agree with the Supreme Court ruling in the Schechter case?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes; in the main.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator is not complaining about that ruling, is he?

Mr. LOGAN. Oh, no.

Mr. WHEELER. With reference to other decisions, however, the Senator feels that the Court has interpreted the Constitution differently from the way it did in the——

Mr. LOGAN. In the A. A. A. case, for instance.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; and consequently the Senator wants to put someone on the Court who will overrule the previous A. A. A. ruling?

Mr. LOGAN. No. I want someone put on there who can weigh the question with a fair and unbiased mind, and then I will know and the people will know that we have had prior consideration and there will be a decision that can be respected. But how can we respect a decision rendered by the vote of a judge who believes that all legislation designed to help farmers, to help labor, to help the people who need help, those who have no helper, comes from the devil himself? I cannot respect a decision in a case where such a Justice votes in deciding the case adversely to the rights of the people.

Mr. WHEELER. That is the real purpose of the bill as the Senator sees it, is it not?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. As a matter of fact, the age question which is inserted in the bill has not anything to do with the real question involved except that the Senator finds some members of the Court who have decided against his viewpoint are over 75 years of age?

Mr. LOGAN. No; that is not the reason. I will say that I think there are men under 60 and really some under 50 who have no business on the bench, and there should be some way of getting them off the bench. I think age has something to do with it. It does not always have something to do with it. If I were President of the United States and had the appointment of some one to the bench, I should not hesitate to appoint the distinguished senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], although it is said he is past 70 years of age. I do not know whether he is or not. In his case I would regard 1 year of service or 2 years of service—and he seems to be good for that length of service—as worth all it might cost the Government.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. Other Senators may quarrel with the Senator from Kentucky, but not I! [Laughter.]

Mr. LOGAN. On the other hand, there are others not past 60 who are senile in body and senile in mind. So, we do have to have a limit somewhere, and we put it at 75 years of age simply because we hoped—yes, we sincerely hoped—we might be able to get the support of some of those Senators who feel that we are trying to pack the Court. We wanted to show them we were not trying to pack the Court; so not only did we raise the age limit to 75, but we provided that not more than one additional Justice might be appointed in any calendar year.

Mr. President, I desire to call attention now to the next thing in the report. I want to abide by the rule and I want members of the committee to know that it is the rule of the Senate and not myself that objects to their making an explanation as I proceed. I did not write the rule.

The next "argument" in the report is as follows:

V. It tends to centralize the Federal district judiciary by the power of assigning judges from one district to another at will.

How could we centralize Federal justices by allowing the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court to send a man from Florida to California or to New York? It seems to me it would be a diffusion instead of a centralization.

The point has nothing in it, however, in a great document such as this; and, besides that, upon an investigation of the provision relating to the transfer of judges, I reached the conclusion that the present law, the one that we now have, is as good as anything that could be proposed. So the bill continues that which now is the law, and has been the law for years, and under which the Supreme Court is operating. That shows that the authors of the report were a little reckless, I think.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

Mr. LOGAN. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. This measure goes further than the present law, does it not?

Mr. LOGAN. I think it goes somewhat further.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes. It provides for a proctor, and it provides that a judge may be sent from New York City to Alabama to try lawsuits there in which the Government may happen to be interested, if it desires to have that done; or, if it wishes to have a prosecution conducted before a particular judge, it may send him there. Does not the Senator think, as a matter of fact, that that is a rather dangerous power to place in the hands of some Attorneys General?

Mr. LOGAN. I will answer the question. That is another strange thing. There was something in that provision which I thought was improper, unintentionally put in, perhaps. One of the Senators stated to me that he believed it was unintentionally put in. It provided that only judges hereafter appointed should be subject to assignment. The committee struck out the word "hereafter" and left all of the judges subject to assignment; but when these distinguished Senators wrote the report for the Judiciary Committee, they simply forgot to say that that word had been stricken out by a vote of the committee, and they have a paragraph in the report showing how dangerous that would be, when as a matter of fact the word was stricken out by unanimous vote.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Will the Senator be good enough to turn to the first page of the report, and there to read the express statement of the report that that amendment was adopted, and that the word "hereafter" was stricken out?

Mr. LOGAN. I really have not time to deal with frivolous matters.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. But did not the Senator himself raise the question?

Mr. LOGAN. I am going to read, after a little while, what the report said about it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Did not the Senator just say that the committee report failed to pay any attention to the fact that that amendment had been made?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes. The committee used that as one basis of its attack upon the bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does the Senator still contend——

Mr. LOGAN. I cannot yield further at this time. I must get along. I am getting tired.

The report says of the bill:

It tends to expand political control over the judicial department by adding to the powers of the legislative and executive departments respecting the judiciary.

If there is any member of the committee or any Member of the Senate or any person anywhere who can show where the bill does what is stated in the report—"expands political control over the judicial department by adding to the powers of the legislative and executive departments"—I should like to have him point out where it is done. I believe anyone is bound to concede that there is nothing in the bill which adds to the powers of the legislative department or the executive department. It is not there. I said yesterday that this was a manufactured opposition. Where, I ask, does the bill add anything to the powers of Congress? Congress always has had the power, and now has the power, to fix the number of Justices of the Supreme Court. The pending bill allows us only to fix the number of Justices of the Supreme Court.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in view of the Senator's statement, I desire to ask him a question which seems to me to go to the heart of the matter, so far as I am concerned. Was it not the design and the primary purpose of this proposed legislation to effectuate, through the appointment of new Justices, a change in the construction of the Constitution which would admit the validity of the types of legislation which had been declared void?

Mr. LOGAN. I should say, as I said before, that the question is a perfectly legitimate one. Of course, it was not the purpose to find men who would say, "We will decide cases in accordance with the theories", say, "of the minority of the Court." That was never expected, in my judgment. I should say that it was not the purpose or that there was no intention to force from the Court opinions that would be in accordance with the views of the New Deal legislation. The purpose was to get good men, men learned in the law, of outstanding character, who could command the approval of the Senate, who would carefully reconsider all of those important questions, with the hope that perhaps they would reach the conclusion that Mr. Justice Stone and Mr. Justice Cardozo and Mr. Justice Brandeis and the others who had disagreed with the majority were right—that and the other matter. It was an opportunity to get a fair rehearing, where it cannot be had now by reason of the ossified views of some of the members of the Court.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, perhaps the Senator and I are not far apart. As I understand the Senator, it was the hope that through these appointments there would be effectuated such a change of view upon the part of the Court as a whole that it would bring about a construction of the Constitution which would admit the validity of legislative enactments which had been declared void.

Mr. LOGAN. That is as well stated as I myself could state the matter.

I have read to the Senate the six points upon which the report is based. I shall not have time to go over them individually, but I shall take time to say that there is not a valid point there, knowing that few people will read them, and knowing that the report will receive very favorable consideration from some of the great journals and magazines throughout the country. It has been called a great document—the greatest state paper that has been handed into the Senate in generations, as some of the periodicals express it. If it is a great state paper, I believe some of the Senators have 6- or 8-year-old children who can write a great state paper. [Laughter.]

Now, let us notice this point. Here is one which I think is the most amusing point that there is in the report.

The Attorney General submitted a statement of facts showing the pages of records, even the lines and the words, in an effort to show that it perhaps would be a physical impossibility for the Supreme Court, as now constituted, to give consideration to the petitions for certiorari and pass intelligently upon them. Here is what the majority of the Judiciary Committee said on that subject. They said: "The Court does not have to do that. Both sides have lawyers"—this is the effect of it—"and the lawyers tell the Court what is in the record, and the Court does not have to go into it."

How would you like to try a case and let the lawyer against you tell the court what was in the record? How would you like to have a court try your case when the great Judiciary Committee admits that it is not necessary for the court to read the record on a petition for certiorari?

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BURKE. I do not know whether or not the Senator from Kentucky was in the Senate at the time the Judiciary Act of 1925 was passed; but, whether or not that is the case, he undoubtedly is familiar with the provisions of that act, which, of course, cover the manner in which cases may reach the Supreme Court by writs of certiorari. Does not the Senator know that that act of Congress requires the parties seeking a hearing before the Supreme Court to make a brief statement of the issue involved in the case, and the grounds for thinking that it ought to be passed on a second time on appeal by the Supreme Court?

Mr. LOGAN. Oh, yes, I know that. I have tried to get such writs and never could.

Here is another statement——

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes.

Mr. BURKE. As a great lawyer and a distinguished judge, does the Senator mean to say that he thinks it is necessary for the members of the Supreme Court, in passing upon an application for a writ of certiorari, to read all the pleadings in the courts below, all the evidence introduced, and all the rulings made, in order to determine whether the Court should grant a review on second appeal?

Mr. LOGAN. If all the record were brought up, perhaps it would not be necessary; but in the Supreme Court, as I understand the practice, the evidence must be stated in narrative form, and the attorneys preparing the record put in only the things that are essential or that they think are necessary. In that case, it seems to me, it would be necessary for some of the judges to read all of the record. I think that is the practice; but let us look at this report:

It [the bill] thus creates a flying squadron of itinerant judges appointed for districts and circuits where they are not needed to be transferred to other parts of the country for judicial service.

The writers of the report are growing very eloquent there.

This is the conclusion to which I wish to call attention. This is what they say about the President and his department.

Though this plan for the assignment of new judges to the trial of cases in any part of the country at the will of the Chief Justice was in all probability intended for no other purpose than to make it possible to send the new judges into districts where actual congestion exists—

That is all right—

it should not be overlooked—

Here is the virus—

it should not be overlooked that most of the plan involves a possibility of real danger.

And they pursue that a little further. Here is the charge:

To a greater and a greater degree, under modern conditions, the Government is involved in civil litigation with its citizens. Are we, then, through the system devised in this bill, to make possible the selection of particular judges to try particular cases?

The President of the United States, so it is said in the report, is desirous of creating a flying squadron of judges, so that if he has a desire to have a particular case decided one way in New Orleans he may send a judge there, and if he wishes to have a case on the Pacific coast decided the other way he may send a judge there. I cannot believe that the members of the Judiciary Committee believed that the President had that in mind, or that his Attorney General had that in mind; and yet that is what is charged in the report.

Now I desire just briefly to notice another thing or two, because shortly I am going to quit.

The report says of the bill:

It applies force to the judiciary.

I have already said that that is not true.

It is an attempt to impose upon the courts a course of action, a line of decision which, without that force, without that imposition, the judiciary might not adopt.

Can there be any doubt—

So the writers of the report say—that this is the purpose of the bill? Increasing the personnel is not the object of this measure; infusing young blood is not the object; for if either one of these purposes had been in the minds of the proponents, the drafters would not have written the following clause to be found on page 2, lines 1 to 4, inclusive.

Every line of the report is a veiled attack upon the integrity of the President and the Congress, too. Of course, I have been attacked so many times that that does not make any difference. But Senators and Members of the other House, who sincerely believe that relief should be granted along this line, are attacked by this report just like the rest.

Those who signed the report talk about courts being absolutely independent. That ought not to be true. The judge should be absolutely independent to exercise his own freedom of thought in reaching conclusions, but does the committee mean that the Supreme Court should be independent entirely of the other branches of the Government, and that anything they might do should be the end of the matter? If so, if that is to be the proper interpretation of the constitutional powers of the Supreme Court, then we do not have a republic; we do not have a democracy; we have a country that is governed by one or more members of the Supreme Court of the United States. They could deny religious liberty and deny civil liberty, and nothing could be done about it under the Constitution, according to the interpretation of those who oppose this legislation.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Does the Senator then disagree with the great pronouncement of Montesquieu which was quoted by most of the members of the Constitutional Convention, that the only safeguard of liberty is a judiciary incorruptible, and altogether independent of either of the other branches of the Government?

Mr. LOGAN. He was extravagant in his language, and he did not know what he was talking about, but in a measure that statement is true. The judiciary must be independent. Nobody believes that more than do I. But the proposal before us does not interfere in any way with the independence of the judiciary.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Does not the Senator think that the philosophy of Thomas Jefferson is more in accord with what we expect in America, to this effect, that "A judiciary independent of a king or executive alone is a good thing; but independence of the will of the Nation is a solecism at least in a republican government. In truth man is not made to be trusted for life, if secured against all liability to account."

Mr. LOGAN. Jefferson was the greatest political philosopher America has ever produced, and that is his idea about absolute power in the courts.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Adverting to Mr. Jefferson, as the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Kentucky have referred to him, although Thomas Jefferson despised John Marshall, is there anywhere any indication that he ever proposed a bill to put new judges on the Court in order to overthrow the opinions of Marshall?

Mr. LOGAN. No, Mr. President; but he took a number of the old ones off by new legislation. The Senator has not forgotten that, has he?

Mr. CONNALLY. He did not take one off the Supreme Court.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not think he did, but at the same time the Federalists, just before they went out, in order to bring the judiciary into politics and to regain control of the country, although the people had spoken to the contrary, created a number of new offices, and Congress repealed the law and took the offices away from them.

Mr. CONNALLY. I renew my question. I am not talking about the circuit courts; I am talking about the Supreme Court. John Marshall was not on the circuit court; he was on the Supreme Court. Is there any record anywhere that Thomas Jefferson ever, by a message or in any other form, advocated or asked the Congress to pass a law to create new places on the Supreme Court in order that he might fill them and thereby overturn the decisions of Mr. Marshall?

Mr. LOGAN. I may say to the Senator that no other President has ever made a request of that kind.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Does not the Senator recall that Thomas Jefferson did have something to say about old judges, to this effect?—

> Knowing that religion does not furnish grosser bigots than law, I expect little from old judges.

Mr. LOGAN. Of course; and when there was a vacancy on the Supreme Court during the administration of his successor, he wrote expressing great jubilation over the fact that after 10 years' service Cushing had died and that a Democrat could be appointed to the Court.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, a Justice had died, and that created a normal vacancy, and he had a right to appoint another; but if he had wanted Cushing off the bench, and had entertained the views the Senator from Kentucky entertains, he would not have waited for Judge Cushing to die, he would have put on a partner, a riding companion for him, through the appointment of another judge.

Mr. LOGAN. I know there is no way to convince any man, much less a Senator, when he once takes a position. I wish it were possible, sometimes.

At the start the Supreme Court did not amount to anything. It was not then possible to get a man who would act as Chief Justice. The Court was hardly any part of the Government. Marshall was appointed in 1803, as I recall, or somewhere about that time, and he began to reach out and gather in some power of the Federal Government. Very little of this took place under the administration of Thomas Jefferson. While Thomas Jefferson was President, the Supreme Court had not done anything and could not do anything. It was really recognized as being entirely subordinate to the other two branches of the Government. It never legislated for itself until Marshall began to gather in some power, and others have added to it and added to it, until as Jefferson, I believe, said, like a thief in the night the judiciary had stolen power from the people until it had become a danger and a menace to the very life of the Government itself. We can very well see that that has been going on.

Here is another rather amusing thing in the report. Those who signed it quote from the President's address to the Nation of March 9, in which he said:

> We must find a way to take an appeal from the Supreme Court to the Constitution itself. We want a Supreme Court which will do justice under the Constitution—not over it. In our courts we want a government of laws and not of men.

He had said that the Court had decided certain questions wrong. The majority of the Judiciary Committee says that his words constitute a charge that the Supreme Court has exceeded the boundaries of its jurisdiction, and has invaded fields reserved by the Constitution to the legislative branch of the Government. That is what the committee says in its report. But I will call the attention of the distinguished members of the committee to the fact that after the President made that charge the Supreme Court came along and pleaded guilty, saying, in effect, "Yes, we are guilty; we have done that; we are going to correct it"; and they did a right-about face and corrected it.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. A little earlier the Senator complained that the report did not in any place praise the President. I think he has just called attention to one case where the report does give high praise to the President. At the top of page 17, just following the portion which the Senator has read, the report states that the President exercised very proper solicitude to maintain the prerogatives of the executive when challenged by the legislative department. We give him real credit for that.

Mr. LOGAN. The committee gives him credit by saying that he has repelled the invasion of the legislative department when it attempted to trespass upon the rights of the executive department.

In addition to some of the things I have mentioned—and I am not going to include all of them, for I am going to close—they have a summary in the back of the report which is worth reading. As I pass along, however, I note under the headline, "Extent of the judicial power", a discussion of that subject. No one cares anything about that; at least, I do not. Then "Guaranties of individual liberty threatened." Who is threatening the guaranties of individual liberty, that the majority of the committee should put it in capitals? The President of the United States says the committee. And again we find, the "Court has protected human rights." Who is trying to destroy human rights? According to the Members signing this report, it is the President of the United States. That is what they are leading the people to believe, putting those statements in the report, and the people are aroused, and reach the conclusion at once that Members of the Senate are stating that "the President of the United States is attempting to destroy our religious rights and our civil rights and our political rights."

In the final summary they recommend that the bill be rejected for certain reasons; and here is another charge of dishonesty and double dealing on the part of the President.

It was presented to the Congress in a most intricate form and for reasons that obscured its real purpose.

The President of the United States tried to deceive the poor, innocent Senators who prepared this report; he tried to mislead them, to cover something up—a double-dealer. That is what they think about it, according to this report.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I know the Senator has covered the ground, but would he mind in just a sentence, if he could, stating what he thinks the real reason for the proposal is?

Mr. LOGAN. The real reason for the proposal is to correct a situation which has grown up within the Supreme Court, internal dissensions among the members, with such a hardening of mind that the country cannot get an unbiased consideration of the great questions which need to be solved. This modified bill would allow a little help in that it would allow one new judge each year to be appointed for those who are over 75 years of age, because it is hoped to have judges who would agree with the minority, that is, the old minority, rather than the majority, in order to secure fair and impartial consideration by unbiased judges.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the Senator has made a very frank statement in answer to my first question, and I hope he will be equally frank in answering my second, as I know he will. Am I correct in assuming that the purpose of the bill is to change the philosophy of the Court?

Mr. LOGAN. No; that is not the purpose.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is what I thought the Senator said.

Mr. LOGAN. The purpose is to give those who have a different philosophy from that of the Court a fair trial before an impartial judiciary to determine what is right.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. MALONEY. Is the Senator of the opinion that every administration is entitled to a sympathetic Supreme Court?

Mr. LOGAN. I do not know. I know the Supreme Court ought never to be sympathetic with any administration; it should be neither for it nor against it. It should never be sympathetic with any particular idea; it should never be either for it or against it. If it were possible for the Supreme Court to forget all things except that it must approach the solution of questions with unbiased mind and free and pure heart, it would be the proper kind of a court; but throughout the history of our Nation the political views and the economic views of the judges have entered into their appointments.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator feel, then, that if the pending substitute is adopted it will not change the philosophy of the Supreme Court as we have known it?

Mr. LOGAN. It is already changed. It has changed its own philosophy.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. As I understood the Senator—and I ask him to correct me if I am in error—did not the Senator at first say that it was desired by this legislation to break down the solidified or stable minds of the Court, which were in one particular groove, and to substitute for those minds a new train of thought on national questions?

Mr. LOGAN. No; not to break down anybody or to take anybody off the bench; but it is the hope that with infusion of new minds on the Court the country may find out what the Constitution means, with the hope that when it does find the proper interpretation of the Constitution it will be along the lines of Stone and Brandeis and others.

Mr. TYDINGS. Then I shall put my question in slightly different form. Is it not a fact that the underlying purpose of this substitute is to secure a new philosophy of judicial interpretation from the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. LOGAN. It is the hope that it may be done.

Mr. TYDINGS. The hope?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is the aim, is it not?

Mr. LOGAN. That is the hope, that it may be done, not through "packing" the Court, but through the reconsideration of important questions as to which apparently some of the members of the Court have reached the stage where they cannot consider them fairly and impartially.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator from Kentucky is very generous. Will he be generous enought to answer another question?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let us suppose that the substitute is adopted. Let us suppose that in 5 or 6 years an entirely new Court replaces the old Court and, for want of a better term, that it is composed of either radical or liberal justices; I ask the Senator to assume that following that event a new administration comes into power by large majority, either Republican or Democratic or what not, which is at loggerheads or at odds with the then existing philosophy of the Court. Would the Senator then be in favor of a new judicial reform act which would by some artifice change that philosophy all over again?

Mr. LOGAN. Oh, no; I should not be in favor of such an act, and I should not favor this measure if I thought that was its purpose.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thought the Senator had said—and I ask the Senator to correct me if I am wrong—that the real purpose of the substitute was to change the philosophy of the Court.

Mr. LOGAN. The philosophy of opinions, it might be said. Throughout the years, in the interpretation of the commerce clause or the due-process clause, there have been some rather remarkable opinions of the Court. Go back to the case of Munn against Illinois, an old case with which I am sure the Senator is familiar. In that case the Court held that it was within the power of the legislature to determine the state of facts on which regulations should be made. Then when the Minnesota rate case came along, the Supreme Court said, "No; that it was for the Court to determine." Now, that is either right or it is wrong. I do not know whether I can make the Senator from Maryland understand my position, but it is a difficult thing to make the man on the street understand it.

Take the case of Munn against Illinois, where the Court specifically wrote that it was within the power of the legislature to determine the facts. Later, in the Minnesota rate case, I believe, the Supreme Court said, "No; that it was for the Court."

What is the question of general welfare? What is the question of interstate commerce? What is a burden upon interstate commerce? The Supreme Court for years has assumed the power to determine the facts without hearing witnesses.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator yield right there?

Mr. LOGAN. I will yield in a moment. Others say that the Congress has that power. The Senator from Maryland does not know; neither do I know who has it.

I now yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I ask the Senator if it is his understanding that the President, in sending down his message, used the expression that he wanted a court more in keeping with the needs of the times?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think "the needs of the times" were the words he used.

Mr. LOGAN. I think that is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. I desire to ask the Senator another question. Assume that the substitute bill goes through, and that in 5 or 6 years we have a completely new Supreme Court by reason of deaths, resignation, or the process of this bill. I ask the Senator to assume that all the new judges are radical or liberal, and insist on interpretations of radical or liberal nature, when considered in the light of the attitude of the present Court. If, then, a new national administration comes in, no matter what the party may be, which does not like that radical or liberal interpretation on the part of the Court, would not the new administration, reflecting the will of the people, be justified in again packing the Court just as we now propose to pack it, in order to change the philosophy with which the then existing Court would not be in sympathy?

Mr. LOGAN. Of course, if the same conditions existed, it would be justified. I have not time to go into the conditions which exist; but that is true.

Mr. TYDINGS. I ask the Senator from Kentucky if that would not mean that the Supreme Court would continue to be the continual football of the philosophy which for the moment was predominant in the Congress?

Mr. LOGAN. No; it would not, because the same idea has been in existence ever since the Government began. If the Senator will go back and read the debates in the twenties and the thirties over the proposal to increase the membership of the Supreme Court, in which such men as Webster and Clay and other great men took part, and which occurred at about the time Mr. Justice Taney, from Maryland, came on the bench, he will find that this is not a new question.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so that I may propound a question to him solely for the purpose of obtaining information as to his viewpoint?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. Did I correctly understand the Senator's position to be, in answering a question which I propounded to him a while ago today, that this bill is based solely upon the theory that judges of inferior courts who have attained the age of 70 years, and Justices of the Supreme Court who have attained the age of 75 years, are incapacitated, wholly or in part, from properly discharging the functions of their office?

Mr. LOGAN. That is true.

Mr. OVERTON. Am I to understand, from the answers the Senator has given to the questions propounded by the Senator from Maryland, that it is based upon another theory also, and that is that there is necessity for a change in the current of jurisprudence by a change in the personnel of the Court?

Mr. LOGAN. The two questions are the same. I think the theory is—or, at least, that is my theory—that age in some instances affects a man so that he cannot properly consider questions which come before him; that his philosophy has gone wrong because of his age; that his philosophy of the law is wrong because he has been withdrawn from the public until perhaps his ideas are not very clear.

Perhaps his mental faculties are not as strong as they were. So the philosophy that the Court now has may be a false philosophy by reason of the age of the judges. I do not know. That is just my own idea.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] yesterday read an old letter in which the writer said that Mr. Justice Grier voted on questions when he did not know what he was voting on, and the writer referred to the effort that was made to get Justice Grier off the bench, and how much trouble the Court had with him. Such things happen. I do not say that they are now happening. Whenever they happen there is only one remedy left.

I am very glad to stop at this time without analyzing the report further. I will do that at some later time.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am not trying to be facetious. I hope the Senator realizes that I am trying to get at the merits of this proposal. The Senator has been fair enough to concede that the Court has now changed its philosophy.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. In other words, its philosophy now, as I understand, is different from its previous philosophy. It is more liberal; it is more in keeping with what we think the people of the country want. Therefore, if an amendment were offered, including the Senator's bill exactly as it is written, but providing that this measure shall not apply to any present sitting member of the Court, the Senator already having the philosophy that he wants, he would have the advantages of his bill without the implication that we have tried to force the philosophy on the Court or to stack the Court in any way, and no harm at all would be done. In other words, if the sitting judges who are over 75 years of age are now in sympathy with the kind of philosophy that is desired, why not exclude them from the operations of the law, and make only subsequent judges who reach the age of 75 years subject to retirement?

Mr. LOGAN. I am afraid that would not work; but I will answer the question, and then I shall yield the floor.

The President spoke of the Government in his fireside chat and compared it to a three-horse team, all three horses of which were supposed to work together; and, of course, no one can find any fault with that philosophy. But one of the horses had lain down in the furrow and would not pull, and there ought to be something done about it. He was criticized for that statement. Since that time, it might possibly be argued, at least by an able Senator such as the Senator from Maryland, that the horse which had lain down in the furrow had gotten up and was going to pull. It looks as if that is true; but I want to remind the Senator of something perhaps he does not know about. He never plowed a mule or new ground on a poor farm. In the springtime, when you get an old mule at the plow, he goes along and then halts and lies down in the furrow, and you cannot get him up at all. After a while you put a burr under his tail and resort to other expedients and get him up, and he will go along very well for a while, but after a time, when he thinks you have forgotten how you got him up, he lies down in the furrow again. It may be that this third team that was lying down in the furrow has gotten up and is going to pull; but who knows when it is going to lie down in the furrow again?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I like the illustration the Senator from Kentucky has offered. It seems to me, however, that he has hooked up the team a little awkwardly. It is true we have these three horses—the executive team, the legislative team, and the judicial team—but what the Senator presupposes is that the driver of the executive horse is also the driver of the other two.

Mr. LOGAN. Oh, no; I do not think so.

Mr. TYDINGS. What I want is to have the American people drive all three teams and not have the executive and legislative horses combine in forcing the other horse, against the will of the driver, into a direction that the driver may not want him to go.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not think the Senator believes that, and I am going to make him admit it in a minute; because if he did believe it, he would perhaps be a Socialist or a Communist. He does not believe that the American people should control the judicial branch of the Government. When the Senator said that he believed the people ought to control the legislative, executive, and judicial branch——

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. LOGAN. He went a little too far. I think the American people cannot control the judicial branch of the Government, the Supreme Court. That is where the fault lies.

Mr. TYDINGS. Who does control it?

Mr. LOGAN. Nobody controls it. That is what I am complaining about. The makers of the Constitution expected when that document was adopted that Congress would keep an eye on the Court, and if the Court went wrong the makers of the Constitution expected Congress to do something about it. But it has been made a sacred something which must not be spoken about; nothing must be said about it. It can do no wrong; it can think no wrong; it cannot do anything but protect the poor, downtrodden people.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do believe in the American people controlling the executive, the legislative, and the judicial branches of the Government in line with the Constitution. The Senator from Kentucky believes that the legislative and executive branches should control the judicial branch of the Government notwithstanding that the American people, whose trustee he is, may not want the judicial branch to be controlled by the other two branches.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not want it to be controlled by any branch. The only thing I am asking is that it perform fairly and justly its proper functions under the Constitution——

Mr. TYDINGS. The executive and legislative branches to be the umpire?

Mr LOGAN. That it not usurp legislative or executive power and set itself up as a king or monarch. All I am asking is that it get back on the Constitution, and under the Constitution, and then I will stand always ready to defend it if anybody attacks it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not like some of the decisions of the Supreme Court; I am perfectly willing to accede to what the Senator says; and all I am asking him is to pass the proposal on to the American people for ratification or rejection through a constitutional amendment. They are the residuaries of all power. We have no right to pack the Supreme Court of the United States in order to change its philosophy. I accept the Senator's premise.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator places himself in this attitude: He says that we ought to submit a constitutional amendment to the people so that they can give us, the Congress, the power to do that which is already plainly written in the Constitution. It is not a consitutional amendment the Senator wants; it is a referendum. He wants a plebiscite on matters of pure legislation.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the Senator is entirely wrong. The matter of the Supreme Court can be handled by an amendment, as the Senator knows, not in the nature of a referendum at all, by the proper play of constitutional processes. With all due respect to him, what the Senator from Kentucky, as I see it, is attempting to do is to usurp a constitutional prerogative by a legislative act. He is trying to change the Supreme Court of the United States, not because of the age of the Justices, not because of its background, but because he wants decisions rendered by that Court as he wants them to be rather than as the Court sees fit to render them.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, the Senator does me a very great injustice. That is not my opinion. I have tried to make it clear, but there are none so difficult to deal with as those who positively refuse to understand.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield further to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I want to echo the remarks of the Senator from Kentucky. I would rather deal with any man other than the man who refuses to understand even when, by his own admission, he sees the light.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I have listened for the past 2 days with rapt attention to the able address of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN]. He has been speaking upon a subject that I intended to say something about in the course of this debate, but he has made a much better speech than I could ever hope to make, and I wish only to detain the Senate for a brief period in order that I may touch upon one or two matters in the alleged historic report which the Senator from Kentucky found he did not have time to touch upon or was diverted in his address and was unable to do so.

Mr. President, some of the most illustrious names that are known to the history of this great body are signed to the majority report to which reference has been made, names that will live in the history of this country long after I am forgotten, but they will not live on the record they made in signing that report. I respect these distinguished Senators for their ability as statesmen and as lawyers; I have no quarrel to pick with them personally, and I shall say no unkind word about them, but I shall direct myself briefly to another point or two involved in this alleged historic report.

I was pleased to note that Senators rose here on the floor of the Senate in the course of this debate and disavowed any purpose on their part to malign, to rebuke, or reprove the President of the United States when they submitted this report. I am glad the Senators have taken that position. I am sure in that position they disillusioned the bright young men who sit above the desk of the Presiding Officer in the press gallery, for I am certain that they derived the impression when they read that report that it was a rebuke to the President of the United States; that it was an indictment of his purpose, his aims, and his patriotism, because it was so stated in all the press of the country that is opposed to this program, as most of the newspapers are.

On June 15, 1937, the Washington Post said:

> It is difficult to find any previous occasion on which an administration measure has been so thoroughly discredited by a congressional report.
>
> There is not an iota of partisanship in the report.

Of course, the Washington Post is an admirable organ to pass on partisanship—

> * * * Yet it constitutes a blistering indictment of the plan which is said to be foremost in the President's mind. * * * Actually the rebuke contained in this report extends beyond the court bill.

Again, in the Baltimore Sun of June 15, 1937, in an editorial entitled "Sharp Rebuke", we find these words:

> Never has a President, so recently the unquestioned master of his party, sustained so severe a rebuke.

In that apostle of sweetness and light, the Chicago Tribune [laughter], on June 16, 1937, we find these words:

> Some Presidents in the past have been rebuked by the National Legislature, and one or two have been denounced by members of their own party. In one or two instances the justice of the rebuke was questionable. In the present instance there can be no question.

So I say to you, Mr. President, in view of the false impression that has gone out through the columns of the press of the country, I am glad to find the avowal from the mouths of my colleagues upon the floor of the Senate that they sought not to rebuke the President of the United States, that they sought not to indict him or to impugn his motives at all; because, after all, there is in this great subject room for reasonable, conscientious difference of opinion. I concede to my colleagues who disagree with me the reasonableness of their position and their honesty of purpose, and I expect nothing from them except that they concede to me the honesty of purpose which I concede to them.

But, Mr. President, as we approach the consideration of this vital problem, I look upon it in this manner: We are not engaged in playing a game; this is serious business that confronts the Congress of the United States; we are endeavoring now to make a form of government function as a democratic form of government, although it was set up by men who feared democracy.

We are now trying to make this Government a Democratic form of Government and to make it work in the interest of the great masses of the people of the country.

As we view our experience of the last few years, we have discovered that one of the three coordinate branches of our great Government has not been in step with the spirit of the times. Furthermore, as the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] has well said, the members of that branch have in their minds a fixation on certain fundamental problems, and nothing seems to be able to change it. So I conceive it to be my duty as a Member of the Senate to use such power as I have at my command under the Constitution of the United States to reach the problem which confronts us, where the Supreme Court of the United States is setting itself up as a superlegislature, because, after all, there is no place where the people of the country can turn for the redress of judicial abuse of this power unless they turn to the Congress of the United States.

I invite attention to the fact that on page 9 of the report reference is made in a rather critical vein to the President's speech wherein he pointed out the fact that the Supreme Court was exercising a legislative function. The committee report wound up its observations with this smug and self-satisfied observation:

> It is not the conclusion of judicial process.

I shall give some conclusions of judicial process on the question as to whether or not the Supreme Court has been legislating and exercising legislative functions. I shall quote from members of the Supreme Court themselves wherein they have charged that the Supreme Court has been exercising legislative functions.

First, I quote from one of the greatest scholars and writers with reference to the opinions of the Supreme Court that this country has ever produced, the late James M. Beck. In his book he said:

> The Supreme Court is a continuous constitutional convention.

Mr. Justice Brandeis, in Burns Baking Co. v. Bryan (264 U. S. 504, p. 534), said:

> To decide, as a fact, that the prohibition of excess weights "is not necessary for the protection of the purchasers against imposition and fraud by short weights", that it "is not calculated to effectuate that purpose", and that it "subjects bakers and sellers of bread" to heavy burdens is, in my opinion, an exercise of the powers of a superlegislature—not the performance of the constitutional function of judicial review.

That great Justice of the Supreme Court, Mr. Justice Harlan, in the case of United States v. American Tobacco Co. (221 U. S. 106, p. 192), said:

> Now the Court, in accordance with what it denominates the "rule of reason", in effect inserts in the act the word "undue", which means the same as "unreasonable", and thereby makes Congress say what it did not say; what, as I think, it plainly did not intend to say and what, since the passage of the act, it has explicitly refused to say. It has steadily refused to amend the act so as to tolerate a restraint of interstate commerce even where such restraint could be said to be reasonable or due. In short, the Court now, by judicial legislation, in effect amends an act of Congress.

In short, the Court——

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. MINTON. I yield for a question.

Mr. BURKE. Is it the understanding of the Senator from Indiana that the purpose of the bill is to take away from the Court the ability to act as a superlegislature?

Mr. MINTON. No; it is only to get a better legislature.

Mr. BURKE. The bill, then, would not have any effect in preventing the Court from continuing to act, if it saw fit, as a superlegislature?

Mr. MINTON. No. The bill does not affect its power, unfortunately.

Mr. BURKE. What, then, is the purpose of the bill?

Mr. MINTON. I shall get to that later.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. MALONEY. I do not care whether the Senator answers my question now or later, but I should like to ask the same question that I propounded to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN]. I asked whether or not each administration is entitled to a sympathetic Supreme Court, and the answer of the Senator from Kentucky was, "I do not know." I submit the same inquiry to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. I have a definite opinion about it. I think every administration is entitled to an open-minded Supreme Court.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. MINTON. I yield for a question.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Did I correctly understand the Senator to say, in response to the inquiry of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], that the purpose of the bill is to secure in the Supreme Court a better superlegislature?

Mr. MINTON. That is the hope.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then, am I to understand that the purpose of the bill is not to correct the defects which the Senator has been criticizing, is not to prevent the Supreme Court from usurping legislative powers, but is merely to create a Supreme Court which will act in the legislative manner in which the Senator desires it to act?

Mr. MINTON. I am only answering the historic report which the Senator from Wyoming signed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Of course that was not my question.

Mr. MINTON. In this historic report it was pointed out that the exercise of legislative power, as asserted by the President, was not a conclusion of judicial process, and I am giving some judicial processes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield further to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does the Senator concede that the report of the committee is before the Senate, or is it another bill?

Mr. MINTON. I think the report of the committee is before the Senate.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Is it not a fact, may I ask the Senator from Indiana, that the original proponents in the Senate of the original bill have abandoned it and have presented a new bill?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. May I ask the Senator from Indiana to ask the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], he being one of the signers of the report, whether or not he now wants us to believe he is abandoning the report?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. MINTON. I do not think the Senator from Wyoming wants to abandon the report. As I proceed I intend to come back to the proposition referred to by the Senator from Wyoming about the attitude of the committee toward this particular bill and what they did about it.

I wish to quote once more from judicial processes. Mr. Justice Holmes, in the case of Hammer v. Dagenhart (247 U. S. 215), at page 280, said:

> But I had thought that the propriety of the exercise of a power admitted to exist in some cases was for the consideration of Congress alone, and that this Court always had disavowed the right to intrude its judgment upon questions of policy or morals. It is not for this Court to pronounce when prohibition is necessary to regulation, if it ever may be necessary—to say that it is permissible as against strong drink, but not as against the product of ruined lives.

In Pollock v. Farmers Loan & Trust Co. (158 U. S. 601, 674), Mr. Justice Harlan said, at page 679:

> Is it to be understood that the courts may annul an act of Congress imposing a tax on incomes whenever, in their judgment, such legislation is not demanded by any public emergency or pressing necessity? Is a tax on income permissible in time of war but unconstitutional in a time of peace? Is the judiciary to supervise the action of the legislative branch of the Government upon questions of public policy? * * * The decree now passed dislocates—principally for reasons of an economic nature—a sovereign power expressly granted to the general government and long recognized and fully established by judicial decisions and legislative action. It so interprets constitutional provisions, originally designed to protect slave property against oppressive taxation, as to give privileges and immunities never contemplated by the founders of the Government.

In Baldwin v. Missouri (281 U. S. 586, 595), Mr. Justice Holmes said:

> As the decisions now stand, I see hardly any limit but the sky to the invalidating of those rights if they happen to strike a majority of this Court as for any reason undesirable. I cannot believe that the amendment was intended to give us carte blanche to embody our economic or moral beliefs in its prohibitions.

In Standard Oil Co. v. United States (221 U. S. 1, 89, 90, 103), Mr. Justice Harlan said, at page 105:

> It remains for me to refer, more fully than I have heretofore done, to another and, in my judgment—if we look to the future—the most important aspect of this case. That aspect concerns the usurpation by the judicial branch of the Government of the functions of the legislative department. To overreach the action of Congress merely by judicial construction—that is, by indirection—is a blow at the integrity of our governmental system and in the end will prove most dangerous to all.

In United States v. Butler (297 U. S.), Mr. Justice Stone said, at page 87:

> A tortured construction of the Constitution is not to be justified by recourse to extreme examples of reckless congressional spending which might occur if courts could not prevent—expenditures which, even if they could be thought to effect any national purpose, would be possible only by action of a legislature lost to all sense of public responsibility. Such suppositions are addressed to the mind accustomed to believe that it is the business of courts to sit in judgment on the wisdom of legislative action.

I might stand here all afternoon and quote for the record instance after instance of opinions of Justices of the Supreme Court in which they have charged that the Supreme Court itself was exercising the functions of a super legislature. I do not believe anyone questions that. I simply cite these facts to show that if the signers of the report want judicial process, I refer them to the opinions of Justices of the Supreme Court.

I come back to the beginning of the consideration of the bill and the writing of this historic report. For weeks the Committee on the Judiciary sat and held hearings in the Capital of the Nation. Everybody testified who had an opinion about the bill and could pay his way to Washington or get it paid. Then, after weeks of that kind of hearings, the committee took a month to vote upon a bill when they all knew in the beginning how they were going to vote upon it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. Then they took another month to write the historic document to which I am now referring.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. MINTON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does the Senator know that the date upon which the vote was taken was selected by the eminent Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] who has just taken his seat?

Mr. MINTON. I guess that was the best date he could get.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does the Senator know that there was no objection, certainly upon the part of most of the Senators who signed the report, to an earlier date?

Mr. MINTON. No; I do not know it. I know, however, that a fundamental proposition, a very serious proposition, was submitted by the President to the consideration of the Congress of the United States. I know that after the weeks and months during which the committee had under consideration this great fundamental problem, which the President of the United States had submitted to the Congress, the Judiciary Committee came in with a report that wholly ducks the issue, because they had under consideration a proposition that brought with it a bill that was proposed by the President of the United States. The committee thought it had fully discharged its functions, however, when it had disposed of that bill, without directing its attention to the fundamental problem that was presented by the President of the United States and is incorporated in this amendment in the nature of a substitute, now offered by other members of the committee.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point for a question?

Mr. MINTON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BURKE. If the bill submitted on the 5th of February was so thoroughly discredited by the committee report that it has been completely abandoned, what more could be accomplished by any committee or any report?

Mr. MINTON. I do not suppose anything, in reality and practicality, could be accomplished in that regard; but I think the committee could have accomplished a great deal more by considering the fundamental proposition submitted by the President of the United States, and trying to bring in some legislation to meet that problem; and it finally devolved upon some members of the committee who were in the minority to work out an amendment in the nature of a substitute and bring it to the Senate of the United States for its consideration.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MINTON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I wonder who, in the mind of the Senator from Indiana, is "ducking the issue"—those who signed the report condemning a particular bill, or those who abandoned the bill, and who now come upon the floor of the Senate talking about everything and anything except the bill they are proposing?

Mr. MINTON. That may be the view of the Senator from Wyoming; but I think the proponents of the amendment in the nature of a substitute have submitted to the Senate a very statesmanlike and concrete proposal to meet the proposition submitted by the President of the United States.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question—a friendly question?

Mr. MINTON. Of course. I should expect nothing else from the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. In all fairness, is it not true that in the mind of the Senator from Indiana the substitute will accomplish the real purposes of the original bill? There will be a little delay, but it will finally accomplish the same result?

Mr. MINTON. By slow motion.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is true. I wanted to get the view of the Senator. The Senator's view, I think, is the correct view, that the substitute is just the same old house with a new front on it.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, in this report it is stated, I believe, that this bill is without precedent. Of course, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] has well pointed out that seven times before in the history of the Nation this very precedent has been used. In other words, the size of the Court has been changed seven times by the Congress of the United States. The first time, it will be recalled, was when the Federalists went out of power in 1801. John Adams, believing as everyone believed at that time that the aged and infirm Justice Cushing was going to retire from the bench, had the size of the Supreme Court reduced from six to five in order that the incoming Jefferson might not appoint the successor to Mr. Justice Cushing, who, it was understood, was to get off the bench. But Mr. Jefferson, of course, was equal to the occasion, and he increased the size of the Court back to six; and what did Cushing do?

Like some of the judges upon the present Supreme Court, he held on for dear life, because he did not want Jefferson to appoint his successor; and it was years afterward before Cushing finally did die, I believe, in office.

So, Mr. President, that was the first change that was brought about; and it was brought about to serve the political purpose of the Federalists, and maintain the Federalist control of the judiciary of the country. The other changes that came along from then until the administration of Abraham Lincoln were not of great importance, and probably can be classified as changes to meet administrative phases of the Government at that time.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. But when we come to the question of whether or not the administration of Abraham Lincoln changed the size of the Supreme Court in order to be sure the Supreme Court would give the kind of opinions that Lincoln wanted, I desire to read into the RECORD some of the history of that occasion which controverts the historic report submitted by the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield before he goes on to that point?

Mr. MINTON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Passing over the first instances, I merely wish to call attention to a fact in reference to the first alleged precedent to find out whether the Senator really considers that what took place in the closing days of John Adams' administration and the first days of Thomas Jefferson's administration constitutes a precedent; and in that connection it is necessary for me to ask two questions.

The Senator realizes, of course, that up to the time that the Congress, in the administration of John Adams, passed the legislation providing that the first vacancy which occurred on the Court should not be filled, all Justices of the Supreme Court rode the circuits, and held courts in the circuits. He recognizes that fact; does he not?

Mr. MINTON. Yes.

Mr. BURKE. And the Senator recognizes the fact that at the same time that the Congress passed the act providing that the first vacancy should not be filled, it also repealed the act which required circuit-court duty of Supreme Court Justices.

Mr. MINTON. Yes; that is true.

Mr. BURKE. The third point is that nothing was ever done under that provision, because, as the Senator has stated, no Justice died. The Court was not changed at all. Its membership remained at six; and the first act of the Jefferson administration was to do away with the other law and also to return circuit-court duty. So is that really a precedent for anything that is now proposed?

Mr. MINTON. Yes; it is a precedent for two things. It is the first precedent for changing the size of the Court, and it is the first precedent for the Court packing itself.

Mr. President, it has been widely stated that Abraham Lincoln, when he changed the membership of the Court from 9 to 10, did so only for administrative purposes; but everybody knows that Abraham Lincoln came into fame and eventually marched to immortality as the founder of a great party, which has almost passed out of existence; that Abraham Lincoln and the Republican Party came into power and into existence fighting the Supreme Court and its decisions, and Abraham Lincoln had no delusions about the Supreme Court. No; he had plans to reverse the Dred Scott decision, and said so.

In the biography of Salmon P. Chase by Albert Bushnell Hart, I read from page 325:

> Though Catron died in May 1865 and Wayne in 1867, no successors to them were appointed, and no further change occurred till after the first Legal Tender decision in 1870. From 1865 to 1870 the Court remained made up of Lincoln's five appointees, together with Nelson, Grier, Clifford, and (till 1867) Wayne.
>
> It had thus unexpectedly been put into the power of Lincoln to carry out a plan which he himself suggested in 1858, the plan of reorganizing the Supreme Court till it should reverse the Dred Scott decision.

I think Senators recognize that Albert Bushnell Hart is one of the great scholars and one of the great historians of this country.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MINTON. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator has made some reference to the fact that Mr. Lincoln did not fill these vacancies.

Mr. MINTON. No; I did not. The Senator misunderstood me. I made no such reference.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thought the Senator read, though, that there were some places which Mr. Lincoln did not fill.

Mr. MINTON. No.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will ask this question, then: Is it not a fact that Mr. Lincoln did not fill several vacancies because of the condition of the South, from which I come, and that he did not care to fill all the vacancies because he was expecting the South to get back into the Union, according to his theory, and that the appointments would be allocated to that section? Does not that contradict the theory of the Senator that Mr. Lincoln had any intention of filling up the Court with his own partisans? If that had been the case, he would have filled it up with men in the North holding the views that he held.

Mr. MINTON. Lincoln eventually did fill up the Court with men of that stripe, and he filled every place on the Court with a good, rock-ribbed, dyed-in-the-wool Republican or Union man; and before he appointed the Chief Justice of the United States he gave the country to understand, by a statement which is widely quoted now, that he wanted a Chief Justice who would uphold what he was doing with reference to emancipation and the legal tenders.

So, Mr. President, this report—this historic document—says that the change in the size of the Court from 9 to 10 under Lincoln was done just because there was another circuit out on the West coast that had to be taken care of. I point out the fact that that circuit still existed in 1866, when the Republican Party reduced the Court from 10 to 7; and I point out the fact that it still existed in 1869, when the Republican Party again increased the size of the Court back to 9. But I submit to the Senate the best evidence I know of as to whether or not Lincoln was creating a place upon the Court in order to be sure of the nature of the Court's opinions. I shall read to the Senate in a minute from the biography of Stephen J. Field, the Justice who was appointed to fill the tenth place upon the Court. But, Mr. President, Senators will recall that in the days of the Civil War the legality of the Civil War itself was attacked in the chamber of the Supreme Court itself; and all of the country, including Abraham Lincoln, his Cabinet, and all the men and women of this Nation who were supporting the cause of the North at that time, felt great concern about what the Supreme Court might do.

There came before the Supreme Court what were known as the Prize Cases, I think about 1863, and those cases were argued before the Supreme Court by Mr. Charles Richard Dana, one of the great lawyers of the country. Finally the Supreme Court of the United States, by a divided opinion of 5 to 4, I believe, upheld the seizure by the North of the vessels concerned, and therefore upheld the blockade of the South and the legality of the war.

At that time the great Lincoln and all who surrounded him and fought that great war were much concerned. They were much alarmed about the situation in the Supreme Court, and well they might be, when they got by with a vote of 5 to 4.

So Abraham Lincoln was frightened, and everyone else was frightened, and he was not satisfied with just 5-to-4 decisions, even when he could count on them, and he was not sure he could count on them. So he had the size of the Supreme Court increased by one in order that he could put another friend on the Court.

Now I read from the life of Stephen J. Field—Craftsman of the Law, by Carl Brent Swisher:

> The issue was raised in the Supreme Court when former owners of ships captured under the laws of war challenged the legality of the capture, declaring that no war existed, and that the laws of war, which provided for the taking of prize, could not apply. The test case, brought before the Court in February 1863, was argued for 12 days. "Contemplate, my dear sir", wrote Charles Henry Dana, one of the counsel for the United States, to Charles Francis Adams, "the possibility of a Supreme Court deciding that this blockade is illegal! What a position it would put us in before the world whose commerce we have been illegally prohibiting, whom we have unlawfully subjected to a cotton famine and domestic dangers and distress for 2 years. It would end the war, and where it would leave us with neutral powers it is fearful to contemplate. Yet such an event is legally possible—I do not think it probable, hardly possible, in fact. But last year I think there was danger of such a result, when the blockade was new, and before the three new judges were appointed. The bare contemplation of such a possibility makes us pause in our boastful assertion that our written Constitution is clearly the best adapted to all exigencies, the last, best gift to man."

Professor Swisher continues:

> The 5-to-4 decision of the Court, which was handed down March 10, 1863, came as a great relief to the friends of the Union. Justice Grier, reading the majority opinion, held that the conflict was, indeed, a war, and that the blockade was legal. At the same time, however, he endeavored to establish the fact that the Confederacy was not a separate and independent power, entitled to be recognized as such by foreign governments. Chief Justice Taney and Justices Catron and Clifford concurred with Justice Nelson in his dissenting opinion, arguing that the status of war had never been conferred upon the struggle.

Mark this, Senators:

> The closeness of the vote in the Supreme Court showed the danger to be very real that the conduct of the war might be at least inadvertently sabotaged by judges who were more deeply devoted either to the South or to their conceptions of the law than to the immediate needs of the Government. This type of situation, together with the apprehension that others similar to it might arise, made all the more insistent the demand that the personnel of the Court be so changed that the country would be in no further danger from that quarter.

Who would be better authority to speak upon the question of whether or not Stephen J. Field went upon the Supreme Court of the United States in order that Lincoln might be sure about the war opinions than the biographer of Stephen J. Field? He said that was the prime consideration, and we know that because of the hysteria that was abroad in the country at that time. The friends of the Union changed the personnel of the Court in order that they could get Unionist opinions from the Supreme Court.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. If the very life of the Nation was at stake at that time and depended upon one vote upon the Court, how does the distinguished Senator from Indiana account for the President in adding only one member, if that was his purpose, an example of moderation as compared with the proposal, which the Senator has eulogized, to add six members to the Court?

Mr. MINTON. Lincoln evidently was quite sure of his men. I do not think we can say the same about the present majority on the Supreme Court. Any court that can hand down the opinions it handed down a year ago, and then in 10 months or a year hand down the opinions it has handed down this year, is certainly not a thing to be trusted, let alone worshiped.

Mr. President, in the light of the historic facts as revealed by the documents which are in existence, which the writers of this historic document now before us knew nothing about, the assertion in the historic document that the Court had never been changed in order that there might be opinions which the administration wanted from the Supreme Court is in head-on collision with the facts I have read into the RECORD.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point for just one question?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Does the Senator at this point admit that the reason why he is supporting the bill, and the purpose of it, is that he desires to have a Court which will render the kind of decisions he wants? I understood that to be his statement.

Mr. MINTON. Not at all; I am only talking about the historic document the Senator signed. In that historic document, in half apologetic manner, but first in a very apologetic manner, the writers admit that there is one precedent in history when the Supreme Court was changed for political reasons. The Congress of the United States in 1863 had increased the Court from 9 to 10, but in 1866, after the war was over, they reduced the size of the Court from 10 to 7. That was done to thwart Andrew Johnson, and the historic document condemns that.

They do not say anything about the change in 1869, when the size of the Supreme Court was changed again, after 2 or 3 years, from 7 back to 9, as it has remained to this day. It was done in order that Grant might have an appointment upon that Court, because the thing that was burning the country at that time was the question of the legality of the Legal Tender Act, then pending before the Supreme Court of the United States.

I think it has been asserted perhaps by some that Grant did not know what the Supreme Court was going to decide in that opinion, and that he did not know as to whether or not the men whom he was putting on the court would give him the kind of opinion he wanted.

I read from the recently published diary of Hamilton Fish, under the entry of October 28, 1876:

> Grant said that on on that subject it would be difficult for him to make a statement; that although he required no declaration from Judges Strong and Bradley on the constitutionality of the Legal Tender Act, he knew Judge Strong had on the bench in Pennsylvania given a decision sustaining its constitutionality, and he had reason to believe Judge Bradley's opinion tended in the same direction; that at the time he felt it important that the constitutionality of the law should be sustained, and while he would do nothing to exact anything like a pledge or expression of opinion from the parties he might appoint to the bench, he had desired that the constitutionality should be sustained by the Supreme Court; that he believed such had been the opinion of all his Cabinet at the time.

Now, with the knowledge that Grant knew what the opinion was going to be, I quote the reminiscences of Mr. George S. Boutwell, who was at that time the Secretary of the Treasury. It will be recalled that Chief Justice Chase was at one time Secretary of the Treasury. He fully appreciated the great problems that would be upon the shoulders of the Secretary of the Treasury if the Legal Tender Act were declared unconstitutional. So he tipped off Mr. Boutwell as to what the Supreme Court would decide, because Mr. Boutwell says in his reminiscences that he was informed of the first legal tender decision by Chief Justice Chase himself about 2 weeks before its public delivery on February 7, 1870. Chase justified the unusual procedure by stating that he feared the Court's decision would cause the creditor class to rush for gold and thereby create serious financial difficulties for the Treasury.

So what was the situation when the Legal Tender case was pending? Grant wanted the act sustained, as Fish has said. Grant had had two others nominated to the Court, one turned down, and one accepted, but the latter died. Grant knew that Justice Strong when he was on the bench in Pennsylvania had handed down an opinion upholding the constitutional validity of the Legal Tender Act. He knew that Mr. Justice Bradley had rendered a private opinion to the railroads which he represented that Legal Tender Acts were constitutional. So Grant knew that he wanted the act to be held constitutional, he knew that Strong and Bradley knew that he wanted it to be held constitutional, and they had a record of constitutionality on it. Grant knew what he wanted, he knew that Bradley and Strong knew what he wanted, and they knew that Grant knew that they knew what he wanted, and after they were appointed on the Supreme Court they gave him what he wanted. I do not know whether that would be called "packing" or not.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. When did the Congress of the United States restore the membership of the Court to nine, thereby creating one vacancy that the President could fill? When did they do that with reference to the decision in the Legal Tender cases?

Mr. MINTON. Afterward, but just as soon after the 4th of March as they could get it; on April 10.

Mr. BURKE. Afterward?

Mr. MINTON. Yes.

Mr. BURKE. It was almost a year before.

Mr. MINTON. Oh, no.

Mr. BURKE. Let me ask the Senator——

Mr. MINTON. A year before what?

Mr. BURKE. A year before the Legal Tender decision.

Mr. MINTON. I am talking about when Congress passed the act. It was passed before the Legal Tender decision came down, of course.

Mr. BURKE. Let me ask the question in this way, then: We have just had the facts recited by the able Senator with reference to the appointment of these two judges to the Court, one to fill a vacancy that occurred in the normal way and one to fill a vacancy created by increase in the membership of the Court to its old figure of nine. Is it not a fact that it was almost exactly a year prior to the time President Grant sent these two names to the Senate that this vacancy had been created on the Court by increasing its membership to nine?

Mr. MINTON. That is true. The act was passed in April 1869, but did not go into effect until December 1869.

Mr. BURKE. Let me now ask the Senator a further question. Is it not a fact that the Senator's precedent falls completely to the ground when it appears that the vacancies, one created in the normal way and one created by act of Congress, came into being long before the President came to examine, as the Senator says, the social and economic and financial views of the men whose names he was going to send to the Senate?

Mr. MINTON. The precedent does not fall down and fail to support my contention. It might fail to support the straw man which the Senator from Nebraska had in mind, but the precedent stands in support of my contention; namely, that the Congress of the United States has the power to change the size of the Supreme Court, and that President Grant had the size of the Supreme Court changed, or at least Congress changed it in order that he might get the opinion he wanted, and he got it, because the very day those names went to the Senate of the United States to be confirmed the Supreme Court handed down the Legal Tender decision. But they had a reargument after they got Strong and Bradley upon the Supreme Court; they phenagled around on the Supreme Court by the devious way of politics that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] pointed out yesterday, and they got a reargument of the Legal Tender cases in the Supreme Court; and in less than a year's time after they got Strong and Bradley on the Court they turned a 5-to-4 opinion against the constitutionality in the Legal Tender cases to a 5-to-4 decision in favor of the constitutionality of that act; and Mr. Justice Strong, one of the appointees of President Grant, wrote the opinion.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Am I to understand the contention of the Senator from Indiana to be that increasing the membership of the Supreme Court for the purpose of influencing its opinion is a justifiable proceeding?

Mr. MINTON. I have not got to the point of saying so. I am referring to the historic document which the Senator from Wyoming signed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does the Senator——

Mr. MINTON. I decline to answer questions along that line, because I am not arguing along that line. I am pointing out the historic document which the Senator from Wyoming signed, in which he said there was not any precedent for what this bill proposes to do.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question on that viewpoint?

Mr. MINTON. Not at this time.

Mr. BURKE. The Senator declines to yield?

Mr. MINTON. I will yield later on.

Mr. BURKE. Very well.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator's questions are quite involved, and it takes a great deal of my time to get them straightened out.

Mr. BURKE. This would be a very simple question—one that the Senator could understand.

Mr. MINTON. If the Senator should propound it, I doubt if anyone could understand it.

Mr. President, a great deal has been said about packing the Supreme Court. I do not know what is meant by packing the Supreme Court, if the Supreme Court does not pack itself. We have had an exhibition of packing on behalf of the Court for which there was precedent in the days of Cushing, and that was practiced by the present Supreme Court. What do Senators think Mr. Justice Van Devanter was doing on the Supreme Court the last 3 years he was on the bench, when he wrote only about two opinions a year? He was not working. He was sitting there packing the Court so that President Roosevelt could not appoint his successor.

What do Senators think Mr. Justice McReynolds has been doing on the Supreme Court for the past 3 years, when he has averaged only a little more than five opinions a year? He is not working. He is sitting there packing the Court so that President Roosevelt cannot appoint his successor.

Pack the Court? Why, Senators, the thing the President of the United States proposes in this bill has been done by the most illustrious men in the history of this Nation. The President of the United States asks simply for appointments to the Supreme Court; and I prefer to believe that my President today in the White House looks to the shrine of Mount Vernon, and looks at the shrine erected to the great Abraham Lincoln in the lower end of the city along the Potomac River, and casts his eyes occasionally on the high peak in Washington on which stands the National Cathedral, where rest the bones of the immortal Woodrow Wilson. I like to think that my President in the White House is a statesman, is patriotic, is as honest and honorable as any Member of the United States Senate or any man who ever sat in the White House. Believing that, as I do sincerely and from the bottom of my heart, I think that if this bill were enacted into law Franklin D. Roosevelt would approach the performance of his sacred duty in naming Justices to the Supreme Court Bench just as George Washington did in the beginning days of the history of this Republic.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. Not at this time.

George Washington appointed to the bench 13 men, and every last one of them was a Federalist. Why? He wanted Federalist opinions.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President——

Mr. MINTON. I like to think of what that great commoner, Abraham Lincoln, said when he came to fill a vacancy upon the Supreme Court, and that the man in the White House remembers it now.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President——

Mr. MINTON. Abraham Lincoln said, when he had up for consideration the question of appointing men to the Supreme Court—and he was engaged at that time in a great war to save the Union—that he wanted a Chief Justice who would uphold what he was doing concerning legal tender to finance that war, and what he was doing concerning emancipation, in order to increase his economic power and force.

I like to think that my President of the United States today, when he approaches the question of filling a place upon the Supreme Court, would approach it just as Theodore Roosevelt did in his day when he had a vacancy upon the Supreme Court to fill and the name of the immortal Oliver Wendell Holmes was suggested. He did not at first accept Holmes, although he knew him, as everybody knew him, to be a man of splendid family and background, a great soldier of the Civil War, and that he was a great jurist in his own State. Yes; all of those things were widely known, and known by President Theodore Roosevelt at that time.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point?

Mr. MINTON. But Theodore Roosevelt said to the late Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. Lodge, who sponsored the appointment of Mr. Holmes, that while he knew all of Mr. Holmes' background, and thought it was fine, he was not satisfied to appoint him to the Supreme Court until he had had him down at the White House to spend a week end. For what purpose? In order that Theodore Roosevelt might determine whether or not Holmes felt about "these questions" as did Theodore Roosevelt and Senator Lodge felt about them.

So I like to think that this second Roosevelt in the White House would do just exactly what the first Roosevelt did—consider everything in the case, but, most of all, whether or not a man, if he went upon the Bench, would go with an open mind and would not be committed to a certain line of thought.

I should like to think that the President of the United States today, who is the next Democrat in line of succession to the great Woodrow Wilson, when he came to appoint a man to the Supreme Court of the United States would have in mind what Woodrow Wilson said on a similar occasion when he was considering an appointment to the bench of the Federal Court, and he asked the sponsors, "Does your candidate believe that the law is finished, or that it grows?"

So I have faith to believe that the man in the White House, if given the constitutional power under this bill—and that is all that is asked—to fill vacancies on the Supreme Court of the United States, will not suffer when his attitude is compared with that of the great Father of his Country, the savior of our country, one of the greatest progressives of all times, and the immortal Wilson.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. When the Senator from Indiana makes a comparison between the author of the original bill before us and George Washington, the Father of his Country, I ask the Senator whether he considers this part of the immortal Farewell Address of George Washington, namely?—

> It is important likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration, to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department, to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism.

Mr. MINTON. Yes, Mr. President; I have in mind that admirable address of the Father of his Country, and I know of nobody it could be read to better than to the Supreme Court of the United States. If anybody has set up a despotism in this country it is the 5-to-4 decisions that prevail in the Supreme Court of the United States. What is the liberty of this country? What are the rights of American citizens? Who knows until Roberts makes up his mind? [Laughter.]

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. In connection with his reference to Theodore Roosevelt, one-time President, and a distinguished President, of the United States, I ask the Senator when he compares the author of this bill to that former Roosevelt, whether he remembers the attitude of that Roosevelt toward the independence of the judiciary?

Mr. MINTON. I remember it very well, indeed.

Mr. AUSTIN. Just a moment; I have not finished my question. It was expressed by Theodore Roosevelt as follows, as taken from the Review of Reviews for September 1896:

> Furthermore, the Chicago convention attacked the Supreme Court. Again this represents a species of atavism; that is, of recurrence to the ways of remote barbarian ancestors. Savages do not like an independent and upright judiciary. They want the judge to decide their way; and if he does not, they want to behead him.

Does the Senator consider that statement in making the comparisons which he makes today?

Mr. MINTON. In what year was that statement made?

Mr. AUSTIN. In 1896.

Mr. MINTON. That is like oxtail soup; it is going a long way back for something good. [Laughter.] I will give the Senator something a little closer to the present time, something said by Theodore Roosevelt in 1912, when he was a candidate of the Progressive Party for President of the United States, upon a platform that declared for the recall of judicial decisions. Even to mention that proposal makes the hair curl on the top of the head of the Senator from Vermont. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask the Senator from Indiana whether he recalls the fact that the same Theodore Roosevelt before the Legislature of Colorado in 1910 denounced the Supreme Court for a decision which it had then recently rendered, and in that speech stated that if the Supreme Court were to be permitted, uncurbed, to render such decisions the liberties of the American people and the rights and powers of Congress would be nullified?

Mr. MINTON. The Senator is correct; I am glad to have that contribution.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President——

Mr. MINTON. I am delighted to yield at this point to the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I want to set the record of Theodore Roosevelt straight. There was a time when, like all the rest of us, he abused the Supreme Court and denounced opinions which were rendered, but there never was a time when he stated it otherwise than that the question of the reformation of the Court should go to the people.

Mr. MINTON. I did not yield except for a question; but that is all right. The Senator has completed his statement, but I cannot yield for other than questions.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. MINTON. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. STEIWER. In reference to injecting the name of President Wilson into this discussion, I want to ask the Senator from Indiana if he recalls that Woodrow Wilson once characterized the proposal to increase the membership of the Supreme Court for the purpose of changing its opinions as an outrage on constitutional morality?

Mr. MINTON. Yes; I remember that. It was a statement made in his callow youth, before he had had any experience as President of the United States. The statement, as I recall, was in a thesis which he prepared for a doctor's degree at Johns Hopkins University.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point for a question?

Mr. MINTON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Is the Senator able to cite any address or utterance of Woodrow Wilson to show that he ever changed his view as expressed in that statement which appears in his great work on constitutional government in this country?

Mr. MINTON. No. I think that answers are given to problems as they present themselves, and I do not think Woodrow Wilson ever had to meet the problem that the present administration has had to meet because of the Supreme Court.

Mr. BURKE. Will the Senator yield to one further question?

Mr. MINTON. No; I wish to get through.

Mr. BURKE. Will not the Senator yield for just one question?

Mr. MINTON. No.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana declines to yield.

Mr. MINTON. I should like to get along; I am going to conclude in a few moments, and then the Senator from Nebraska may have the floor in his own time.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, may I ask if that declination includes me also?

Mr. MINTON. Yes; I do not want to be partial. I always want to include the Senator from Wyoming in anything that I have to give.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I knew that the Senator would be that generous.

Mr. MINTON. If there is anybody I want to be generous to it is the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. President, this "historic" document accuses the President of the United States of trickery. It accuses the President of the United States of underhanded methods, of trying to undermine the Constitution and to mislead somebody. Of course, I know the Senators who signed the report did not mean it in that way. There is not an eminent Senator who signed that report who would make that plain, bald-faced statement. No; there is not any Senator who believes that to be so. The Senators who signed the report do not believe it. They would not practice trickery themselves; oh, no. If they did, it would be by inadvertence and I think it is by inadvertence that the statement is in this report. But it is practiced and I propose to point out in this "historic" document where the authors of this "historic" document wrote in it some citations that do not support them, some citations that do not bear out the thesis of this "historic" document at all.

Under the heading of "Court Has Protected Human Rights", cases are cited to that effect. One case is entitled "The American Foundries Against Tri-City Council", and the report quotes from the opinion of the Supreme Court, which throws bouquets at labor and sets forth what labor can do and what it cannot do. However, Mr. President, everyone who knows anything at all about the opinions of the Supreme Court knows that that was one of the worst opinions for labor that the Supreme Court ever handed down, and that bouquet was thrown to labor preparatory to cutting out its heart. In that case the Supreme Court proceeded in the attitude of a judge who has before him a poor unfortunate condemned to the gallows, to whom he says in a very gallant way, "Before I pronounce judgement upon you, have you anything to say why judgment should not be pronounced?" In that spirit the Supreme Court said what the committee set forth in the report that it did say. In that case the Court threw that bouquet at labor, and then proceeded to cut the heart out of labor. That opinion recited in this "historic" document as one of the charters of labor's freedom was one of the worst opinions that labor has ever encountered at the hands of any court. The Court held, for instance, that, while labor had the right of picketing, there could only be one picket at each gate. That opinion led to the enactment of the LaGuardia-Norris anti-injunction law. That is the splendid record of the Supreme Court in upholding the rights of labor that is cited in this "historic" document.

Of course, I know the Senators did not cite that case in order to mislead anybody. They could not do so, because everyone who knows anything at all about the Supreme Court decisions knows that that was one of the worst opinions ever handed down by the Court. My old partners in the practice of the law always taught me to read the opinions before I cited them.

Under the same heading is another great opinion, where it is stated the Supreme Court had set out to strike down a law of Congress in the interest of civil liberties. The committee cited the Milligan case that came up from my State of Indiana during the Civil War.

I want to read the brief paragraph they wrote about the Milligan case where the Supreme Court allegedly stood as a bulwark against the Congress of the United States and struck down one of its laws.

According to this "historic" document:

> In the Milligan case, in the midst of the frenzied wake of the Civil War, it was the Supreme Court which sustained a citizen against an act of Congress, suspending the right of trial by jury.

That is an erroneous statement. In re Milligan never involved an act of Congress, not even an act of a legislature. Milligan had been convicted by a drumhead court set up by the military governor of the State of Indiana. He was tried before that military court in the State of Indiana, where the courts had always been open and functioning. It was a drumhead court such as might be set up by the vigilantes or the C. I. O. today. It was not an act of Congress that was involved, it was not an act of a legislature that was involved, and the Supreme Court did not go to the rescue of a citizen against the Congress of the United States.

In the opinion in the case of In re Milligan, at page 121, the Supreme Court said:

> It is not pretended that the commission was a court ordained and established by Congress. One of the plainest constitutional provisions was, therefore, infringed when Milligan was tried by a court not ordained and established by Congress and not composed of judges appointed during good behavior.

So this "historic" document carries in it that error as well as the one to which I referred a while ago.

Mr. President, I will state, for the benefit of my colleagues who have manifested some interest in my views, that I think the present bill before the Senate of the United States would do. In a constitutional manner, if enacted into law, it would create places on the Supreme Court that Franklin D. Roosevelt would have the right to fill. As I tried to point out a while ago, I do not conceive that he would make those appointments in any other spirit than did his great predecessors. I do not conceive that appointments to the Court are to be made for the purpose of changing the opinions of the Court. I hope they would be changed. What I think the President of the United States should do, and what I think he would do, would be to try to place on the Court open-minded men like Justice Brandeis, Justice Cardozo, and Justice Stone, so that when a question came before the Supreme Court of the United States the members of the Court would enter upon a consideration of it with open judicial minds. I have no doubt that Justice Cardozo and Justice Brandeis and Justice Stone do not agree with many things the New Deal has been doing; but when they approach the consideration of a question before the Supreme Court, they do so with open judicial minds, looking solely to the power of Congress and not trying to dictate the policy of Congress.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. MALONEY. The Senator's reference to Justice Brandeis, Justice Stone, and Justice Cardozo reminds me of a statement made during the hearings on the bill by some of the witnesses who favored the original bill. Each of them, if I remember correctly the names used by them, said he would be willing to abide at all times by the opinions of Justices Brandeis, Stone, and Cardozo. I wonder if the Senator from Indiana feels that way.

Mr. MINTON. Let me answer the Senator in this way: I yield to no one in my very high regard for any member of the Supreme Court. I respect them and the high positions they hold; but I revere sincerely and deeply Justices Brandeis, Stone, and Cardozo. Much has been said on the floor of the Senate about that grand old liberal, Justice Brandeis, and nothing too good can be said about him by anybody, anywhere, at any time. But I remind Senators that during the long years of service of that grand old liberal upon the Supreme Court of the United States, three-fourths of the time, he has been dissenting against the opinions of the majority of the Court. I want to bring relief to Justice Brandeis and men like him, whether they want it or not. [Laughter.] I entertain hope for the Brandeis brand of the law.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. MALONEY. I do not think the Senator answered my question, and I am disappointed that I could not get an answer to my earlier question as to whether or not each administration is entitled to a sympathetic Supreme Court.

Mr. MINTON. I said each administration is entitled to an open-minded Court. I do not intend to answer "yes" or "no" to the Senator's question.

Mr. MALONEY. I think it is a very fair question, and I think upon the answer to it hinges the importance of this debate. If each administration is entitled to a sympathetic Supreme Court, it seems to me the issue is pretty definitely decided.

Mr. MINTON. Is the Senator propounding to me a question as to whether or not each administration ought to have a sympathetic Supreme Court?

Mr. MALONEY. Yes; I am asking that question.

Mr. MINTON. The answer is "No"; and I qualify it by saying that each and every administration is entitled to have an open-minded Court.

Mr. MALONEY. I ask the Senator from Indiana whether or not he is sympathetic toward the oft-repeated statement made in the hearings concerning Justices Brandeis, Stone, and Cardozo. I wonder if the Senator will answer that question. Several witnesses before the committee said that they would at all times, if I remember correctly, accept the opinion of those three Justices. I wonder if the Senator from Indiana subscribes to that statement.

Mr. MINTON. If Justices Cardozo, Stone, and Brandeis should continue along the same line of conduct, I think I should, even though I might not agree with what they said.

Mr. MALONEY. How would the Senator feel if those three Justices were opposed to the bill now before the Senate?

Mr. MINTON. I would feel that old age was approaching them. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I have concluded what I have to say about this "historic" document; and I express the hope that what I have said will be considered as directed to the document, and not as personal.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Are we to understand that the Senator is going to conclude without talking about the bill?

Mr. MINTON. I have talked about it. The Senator was out in the cloak room telling a joke. I heard it. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I had spoken to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] about the fact that I expect to address the Senate upon this question. I thought we had an understanding that I should not be compelled to speak until tomorrow. I think that is a common courtesy which ought to be extended to me, as it is now 20 minutes past 4.

